Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, let me say to the distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts that there have been many national tragedies, even in my experience here of 16 years, and almost without exception the action that Congress has taken has been to make available loans to the areas affected. Those loans in many cases were almost without security, but at least they went through the form of loans, for the very reason that the Congress as a national legislature is affected by the same ethical and theoretical conditions that the gentlewoman finds affect her own State. We have no right theoretically to appropriate money to be used on private lands.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But the fire hazard is so extremely great in Massachusetts alone, where 531 lives to the square mile are endangered by this fire hazard. It is an emergency; this is not a regular appropriation and must be made immediately if it is to serve its purpose. The threat of fire is even more serious than the hurricane.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I quite agree with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, and the committee agrees. Otherwise we would not be recommending $3,000,000 of Federal Government money to meet this situation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If the people live 531 to the square mile, as the lady from Massachusetts says, they ought to be able to put out any fire.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Are we laying down a policy that will come back to plague us in the future, that whenever we have some disaster, due to an act of God, the Congress of the United States will be called upon to rehabilitate the area?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman, as he well knows, the Congress has responded on many occasions to relieve suffering in the drought areas in Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida and other States, but they were loans in most cases by or through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and many of them have been repaid.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is this a loan or an outright gift? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This is an outright gift.

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, there is a difference between the two even though you require the States in this instance to match the Government contribution.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course there is a difference, but the evidence before our committee was to the effect that it had been such a terrific blow to this section of the country, not only this section but to the individuals involved, that we felt the Federal Government, through the Forest Service, might have a substantial part in cleaning it up.

Mr. COCHRAN. Another question. Does not the gentleman feel there should be some limitation placed upon the amount you are going to spend in the District of Columbia?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It does not provide for any of it to be spent in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, yes; in the bill you provide that part of it can be spent in the District of Columbia even for printing and binding and also for automobiles. Now, the District of Columbia was not affected by the hurricane. You are liable to have a lot of employees in the District of Columbia getting a lot of this money that should go to this area. The Forest Service should be able to handle this without additional personnel.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

I should be willing for the gentleman from Missouri to draw an amendment. I am sure the committee has no objection to a reasonable limitation. Of necessity, there will be some departmental expense in administering this money, but I would have no objection to any reasonable limitation that the gentleman feels should go in here.

Mr. COCHRAN. This has come so fast that I have no information about the project at all. The bill has just come in and the hearings released only an hour ago. Those who heard the testimony should be able to draw an amendment which provides for a limitation, or better still, one that would prevent any of the money being used in the District of Columbia. Let them get along with their present force here.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understood that the Congress gave an outright grant to the city of Chicago at the time of the great fire, and to California at the time of the earthquake and fire in San Francisco. So there is a precedent for this. This country has given grants to foreign countries in supplies to care for distressed people.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That may be true.

Now, the next item in the bill is an item for the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, for the control of various insects—Mormon crickets, chinch bugs, various kinds of grasshoppers and other pests that come along to pester people and crops.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Bureau of Entomology, as I understand, recommended to the Budget $6,000,000 to take care of these pests. The Bureau of the Budget recommended $3,300,000. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not had a chance to read the record. Has the gentleman ever seen these grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and so forth, in action? They are about as long as the old crawfish we used to see in the swamps. Has the gentleman ever seen these things in action?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; but I have heard they are quite active.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They are very active. They will go into a field of wheat in the morning, and usually it is destroyed by nighttime. Of course, I do not know who the other members of the committee are, but I am taking your word for it that you never saw these bugs in action. Does not the gentleman think that the department that has to do with the carrying on of this work, together with the aid of the farmers who actually do the work in the spreading of this bait, and so forth, ought to know more about what would be necessary to conduct this campaign against these pests than we Members sitting down here who really do not know much about it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Ordinarily, it would seem that they would, but actually they do not. I say that for this reason: They have come before our committee on more than one occasion with an estimate for pest control in excess of what the committee felt was justified. The committee cut their estimates, and our friends hollered blue murder. They had just been ruined. They envisioned the grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, chinch bugs, and other bugs just carrying the country away. They were just ruined. Yet they were not able to spend the appropriations we provided.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I know the gentleman is going to say they did not get the money as soon as they should. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will call the gentleman's attention to another thing. I get this from the Bureau of Entomology in Washington. They tell me that in Montana those bugs, grasshoppers, and crickets were eradicated early in the spring and then they migrated, later on, from the State of North Dakota into Montana, and I have these figures from the Bureau of Entomology. As the result of their invading the State of Montana later on in the spring, crops to the value of $6,000,000 were destroyed by them.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Here is the point to the thing: There is no doubt this Department will not spend any money that is not necessary to carry on this campaign. Let us give them sufficient at this time to prevent just such occurrences as have been outlined to the gentleman by the Bureau here in Washington.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They did a very good job last year in controlling it. No effort, apparently, is being made to exterminate these insect pests. The Bureau of Entomology and the Department of Agriculture have thrown up their hands, seemingly. They do not know what to do. About all they can do is to fight them when they put in an appearance. Last year they did a very good job with $2,000,000 and did not get it nearly as soon as we are making it available to them this year. We are giving them the same amount they got last year and giving it to them very much earlier. They will have available $2,700,000, which ought to be ample.

The next item is for the administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act. That act was passed very late in the last session of Congress. An amount of $400,000 was made available. The Administrator has set up the organization. They are operating, they are trying to meet the terrific duty imposed upon the Department of Labor in the construction and control of this new law affecting every State in the Union and every business and every industry to some extent.

We went into the matter very carefully. The Budget estimate of $950,000 the committee cut to $850,000, not with the idea of trying to throw any impediment in the way of a fair enforcement of this act and a fair trial for it but upon the statement of the Administrator that all of the personnel had to come from civil service. Many examinations have to be held to recruit his staff, and we felt that the slight cut made by the committee would be evidence of the committee's hope and of the hope of the Congress that he would move cautiously.

We were very much encouraged to hear from Mr. Andrews the statement that in traveling over the country and contacting many business and industrial leaders who had been very antagonistic to the suggestion of the passage of such a law and who had opposed it in every way they could, that they now show almost universally a fine spirit of cooperation and intention to try it out, put it into operation in their plants, and endeavor to make it work. Almost invariably, however, they impressed upon the Administrator the fact that if the law is ever to be a success, in order to be fair to those who are trying to observe it, the administration should enforce it against those who are inclined to disobey it. The committee did not feel that the Congress should be too drastic in curtailing a new agency of such wide scope and character as the wage and hour division, and I do not believe we have.

The last item in the bill is for the purpose of erecting a Census Bureau building. When the matter was first suggested to me, that we were being called upon to build another Government building in Washington, I was antagonistic to the idea. We went into the matter very carefully and we found that in the District of Columbia, Government agencies are now housed in 120 buildings other than Government-owned buildings. Twenty-two thousand employees of the Government are employed in these privately owned buildings. The rental bill that we are paying to the landlords of Washington is $3,500,000. The Department of Agriculture is housed in 29 different buildings and pays $468,000 a year rent. The Department of the Interior, although we just built a handsome new building for it, is housed in 11 different buildings and is paying $236,000 a year rent. The Treasury Department is in 16 different buildings. Government agencies, as I say, are in 120 different privately owned buildings in Washington and are paying $3,500,000 rent.

We are faced with the fact that we must take the decennial census. In order to take the census the Bureau of the Census will have to augment its normal personnel of about 700 to a personnel of about 7,500 in the District of Columbia for 6 or 8 months.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

There will be housed in this building in the District of Columbia the 7,500 people who will take this census. They all come from civil-service rolls. They are temporary employees. There is no space in the District of Columbia that can be gotten to house this activity. The only other alternative would be to have some private individual or agency put up a building. Bids were solicited from such sources, and the best offer received was for a building way out on the outskirts of Washington where transportation would be difficult, and at a rental of something like $400,000 a year.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Would this building that it is proposed to build house 7,500 for 6 months in the 10-year period and then only 700 during the other nine and a half years?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am coming to that, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. I notice an item for New Hampshire and Maine. I was of the opinion that New Hampshire and Maine did not want any relief from the Federal Government.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We had a pretty full discussion of that matter, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTON. Does the gentleman think it would be in order to abolish some of these bureaus, such as the National Emergency Council and the Guffey Coal Commission, to make room for the Census Bureau?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think it is very much in order to abolish some of the commissions, I may say to the gentleman; but when you look over the list of agencies that are housed in rented buildings, the gentleman will find he raises a very difficult problem.

Mr. Chairman, this is not any peculiar condition that has existed for only the last 6 years. Since I have been here, a total of 16 years, the Government has had a terrific rent bill. The Government has always paid for outside space and has never had sufficient room in the public buildings in Washington, even when my friend's party was in power. There were more bureaus and agencies in Washington at that time than the Federal Government had buildings in which to house them.

Mr. BARTON. Does the gentleman know how many buildings have been built under this administration to house these new bureaus?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. A great many buildings, but the majority of the fine building program in the District of Columbia can be taken credit for by my friend's party. The first great building that was put up was the palace for the Department of Commerce, with the noted gold-plate dishes for the Secretary of Commerce, as my friend will remember, the shower bath, the private elevator, and what not.

That was the first palace that Mr. Hoover built. All of the string of buildings along Constitution Avenue was started under the administration of the gentleman's party, and the gentleman's party can take credit for them because this is the greatest nation in the world and we should have a government housed commensurate with its dignity. I favor that, and I am sure the gentleman does.

Mr. BARTON. When Mr. Hoover was putting up that building, does the gentleman recall what the national deficit was as compared with the present time?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, there was a deficit, and there has been a deficit right along. The gentleman and I understand that.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, when those buildings were authorized, the national debt was being reduced at a great rate. This Congress passed bills reducing the debt at the rate of a billion dollars a year. There was no deficit. These buildings were authorized in the prosperous days, but many of them have been built in the depression days.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is a long story. History will tell the story in full.

Mr. MICHENER. But is that not so?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not want to get into that. The question now is, Shall we build the Census Building that is needed? This type of building is badly needed by the departments in Washington. Answering specifically my friend's question, when the census is completed and the normal personnel of the Bureau of the Census drops back to 700 or so, one of two things will happen; either there will be brought in some of these agencies that are housed now in rented quarters or else do what should be done-that is, put into the building a great many of the inactive files of some of these departments that now occupy high-priced rental space in other buildings, files that do not come within the category of records that should be put in the Archives Building and yet should not be destroyed. The building is needed for the regular, normal activities of the Government. Even if our dreams and hopes for restriction of unnecessary agencies should mature, we could not hope to vacate all of these 120 buildings.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I notice the report states that the building will be of the brick and sandstone type. If that building is located near Constitution Avenue, does the gentleman think that would mar the beauty of Constitution Avenue and the buildings located thereon?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is not to be located in that group of monumental buildings on Constitution Avenue. It is to be well back of the Mall and will be of the same type as the building occupied by the Procurement Division, a very substantial one—will involve a construction cost of about $9 per square foot. It is a utilitarian type of building.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman does not think the location of this type of building here will mar that locality?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; the building will be well removed from the locality the gentleman has in mind. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall speak solely of the one item involving disaster from the recent hurricane in New England, and I would like to give a brief description of my own personal experience in that flood and hurricane.

On the morning of September 21 last year I endeavored to drive from my home in western Massachusetts to Springfield. where I had a scheduled meeting, not a political one, purely business. I found that following 3 or 4 days of constant, steady rain the roads were practically impassible. I therefore drove a few miles and took a train from Pittsfield to Springfield, which was one of the last trains to operate over the Boston & Albany Railroad for quite a period of time. Following the meeting I attended in Springfield I had occasion to go to Holyoke, which is the largest city in my district. A friend had driven the 11 miles from Holyoke to Springfield to meet me. At that time it was raining terrifically hard, and my friend drove down through the rain. About 4:30 in the afternoon, following the business meeting I was attending, one of my friends came out of the building where we had held the meeting and said the radio had announced a hurricane was coming up the New England coast. This was the first intimation of the possibility of the hurricane's visiting that area. Another friend came from the same meeting and said, "My wife is driving home from down in Connecticut and I am worried about her on account of the The suddenness of this catastrophe can be shown by the fact that the next morning I picked up a newspaper and read that the wife of this friend had been drowned in an effort to get back to Springfield that afternoon. LXXXIV-93

What I have said so far has to do with the rain, which continued for quite a few days, but at half past four in the afternoon when I left Springfield for Holyoke the wind started. We were 2 hours covering the 11 miles between those two cities, over a good State highway which in ordinary circumstances one could travel in 20 minutes. I got to the point where fear no longer existed for me because the feeling of helplessness came over one so strongly. Trees were coming down all over the road, wires were being thrown down, and automobiles were being hit. One did not know from 1 minute to another whether the next tree was going to fall on the car one happened to be in or fall down beside the road. Through the skillful driving of my friend I was able to get to Holyoke in about 2 hours. This gives you just a word picture of the terrible suddenness of this storm.

The hurricane followed the flood. We were therefore doubly afflicted, first by the tremendous flood and second by the hurricane.

The first preparation for recovery had to do with the flood. Entire towns were inundated. Roads were absolutely washed out in entire communities. The events of which I have been speaking occurred on a Wednesday afternoon. On the following Saturday I attended a meeting of representatives of the towns of Franklin County, Mass., all of which are in my district. The county commissioners were endeavoring to appease the citizens of these small communities, telling them what they could do for them and what they would do for them. People in large areas there were endeavoring to get milk to the market daily, and were finding fault because they could not get their milk to market. The chairman of the county commissioners said, "Suppose we could send a team up into that town instead of trying to get down there by automobile truck, would that be all right? Could we not send you a team to get the milk down to "Why, Mr. Commissioner," was the reply, "a market?" goat could not travel over a single road in the town."

Where a goat could not go certainly there were not many transportation facilities.

Following this tremendous storm I made a trip to Washington purposely to see some of the officials. They were extremely courteous and very much interested in the story of the flood conditions. However, that action had to do with the clearing up at that particular time.

Certain towns in my district were absolutely put out of business. No industry survived this awful flood. I could take all the time allotted to me in telling you of that situation, but what you are interested in today is the hurricane situation, so I wish to pass on to the hurricane feature of the existing situation. I say "existing" because the result of it still exists right there.

We found the Forest Service eager to cooperate in every way possible, and they have been continuing to do so. I read in the report which has just been issued by the Committee on Appropriations certain very significant statements, which I thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] for making as they certainly aid our case tremendously. For instance, the report states:

The evidence is indisputable as to the urgent need of freeing the wooded areas—some 8,000,000 acres, through which the storm passed—of great quantities of inflammable debris, constituting a serious fire hazard, in many cases adjacent to thickly populated communities.

In another place the report states:

The Congress has, in the case of a number of past catastrophes, responded with Federal financial aid.

I have here a long list, and I am sorry it is not carried up to the present time, of instances of aid the Federal Government has rendered when catastrophes have occurred, even in Italy. There is an item here of Congress appropriating $800,000 for procurement and distribution of provisions, clothing, medicines, and so forth, for the suffering and destitute people of Italy as a result of the Messina earthquake. Many of the items in the list I hold in my hand refer to loans, so-called, but of course not repaid and not expected to be repaid. For instance, reference is made to the fire in San Francisco, and to the appropriation of $100,000,000 as a revolving fund to furnish foodstuffs to the populations of Europe following the war. Here is an item of $1,775,000 for Army stores for the relief of sufferers from fire at Astoria,

As I see it, no greater calamity ever happened than what has happened to New England at the present time, so why should there be any anxiety at the present time over the size of the appropriation to be made by the Congress to relieve this terrible situation?

I particularly call the attention of the Members of the House to this map. It is a map of New England. The pink area here is where the hurricane hit. The hurricane came up from Long Island Sound on the afternoon of which I have spoken, and about half past 4 in the afternoon it started and went directly up through that entire area, hitting sections in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and a small section of Maine.

Every New England State was directly affected, and there is timber down in this whole area.

Now, look at these pictures which I have here from the Forest Service, every one of them showing down timber. While this picture I have here is small and not very easy for the Members of the House to see, yet here is a very typical picture of the down timber surrounding a farmhouse, and unless this slash is cleaned up and removed by spring, even though the logs are taken out of there, is there a chance in the world for the inhabitants of this house to be able to save that property? Fire is inevitable.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to the gentleman, but I must finish my statement on the bill.

Mr. REED of New York. I simply wanted to call attention to the fire hazard involved there.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am coming to that very feature, and that is exactly what I meant when I asked if there was a chance for the inhabitants of this place to survive.

These other pictures I have here are quite similar. This particular picture happens to be on a State forest in New Hampshire. I simply wish the House to see the condition in that area, which is duplicated everywhere. Here are logs, which, of course, are perhaps merchantable and marketable, but when you go in and clean up by just taking out the logs, naturally, you are leaving all this slash and there is a fire hazard of tremendous proportions.

What the Forest Service did was to endeavor to make contracts with the owners of private property to take out their merchantable timber.

Let me give you a word of illustration about that. I attended a meeting just before Congress opened. I was asked to come up to a town in my district to meet the owners of down timber. I went to that meeting and met 60 men and women whose entire source of income or entire property was flat on the ground. They did not have a dollar with which to market this timber or to continue carrying on their work as ordinary farmers. There were 60 of these people and I am going to speak of them, as well as the entire Massachusetts picture, a little later, but I want to cover particularly the New England situation as we who are in New England see it.

I am a Massachusetts man, interested in Massachusetts as such, and interested in these constituents of mine that I am telling you about who are suffering so as a result of this existing situation, and appealing to you in their behalf, but the picture is bigger than any one State, Mr. Chairman, the picture is a New England picture as shown by this map.

Now, the Forest Service estimates there are 14,000,000 acres in the hurricane area; that is 14,000,000 in this pink section of the map, and there are 150,000 acres of down timber on which there are from three and a half to four billion feet. The Forest Service has made 2,000 contracts covering 400,-000,000 feet already. The method of contracting is this. The Forest Service has graded this timber into three classes,

1, 2, and 3, of which they estimate that class 1 is about 5 percent. On that they will pay $18 per thousand feet at a mill or at a pond. The next classification is at $14 a thousand and this they estimate at about 40 percent. The other 55 percent is in the third classification at $12. This $12 means that under the Disaster Loan Corporation there will be paid to those log owners at a pond or at a mill, no matter how inaccessible it may be, or how impossible it may be for the lot owner to get his timber to these places, $12 per thousand feet in the log, less 10 percent; in other words, it will amount to $10.80 only.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman very briefly, because I have a long picture to paint.

Mr. HARE. I am just wondering whether the price designated by the gentleman refers to sawed timber or is the price in the log.

Mr. TREADWAY. In the log.

Mr. HARE. A pretty high price.

Mr. TREADWAY. Not a sufficient price to encourage the owners to market the logs or return a new dollar for an old

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. When they have forest fires in the State of Washington, the Government does not pay the people out there for the damage, and I do not see why they should pay for these damages which they have sustained from forest fires in New England.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not know about other fires, although I do know that Oregon has been paid in a similar

I have here another picture of the same situation I have been describing, and these pictures are available if any Members care to see them in more detail.

After these 2,000 contracts are made, and we hope the number will be materially increased, you will still have this terrible fire hazard; and unless this fire hazard is removed by early spring, just as soon as this slash begins to dry out, no one can conceive of the probable damage that will happen in the way of fires.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Are not the C. C. C. now engaged in clearing away that brush?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; they are doing as good a job as it is possible to do, and I shall be very glad to quote a reference from the Forest Service that I have of the work that they are doing; but there are not enough of them, nor of the W. P. A.

Mr. HEALEY. Their work is also on private property?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. HEALEY. Where there may be a fire hazard.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; and perhaps it might be well, as long as the gentleman is referring to private property, for me to bring up the situation in Massachusetts, as regards the item in the bill before us, namely, the matter of matching dollar for dollar. I have a telegram that I received last evening from the Governor of Massachusetts, which reads as follows:

Hon. ALLEN TREADWAY,

House of Representatives:

Over $1,000,000 appropriated at special session of Massachu-Over $1,000,000 appropriated at special session of Massachusetts Legislature, October 1938, to remove fire hazard in timberlands owned by Commonwealth, including farms, reservation areas, and State forests. Appropriation for privately owned timberlands not permitted under State constitution. Fallen timber in this State estimated at one and one-half to two billion board feet, including four million in State-owned properties. Removal cost estimate, $3,000,000. Approximately 9,000 C. C. C. and W. P. A. workers employed removing hazard from privately owned areas under easements. Doubt that Massachusetts can participate on dollar-matching program on privately owned properties.

LEVERETT SALTONSTALL.

LEVERETT SALTONSTALL.

Therefore, we cannot match dollar for dollar, as I see it, because we are prohibited under the State constitution from using the State funds on private lands. The telegram of the Governor explains the situation as far as Massachusetts is concerned in connection with the item in the bill under

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to proceed, but I yield. Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman any information as to the probability of these devastated lands being reforested

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, let us get over the catastrophe before we begin to find out what we will do in the future.

Mr. KNUTSON. The reason I asked that question is this. It is a fire hazard at the present time and if that hazard is not cleared up and there should be a severe fire, it would retard reforestation.

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree with the gentleman that perhaps we ought eventually to reforest it, but let us clean it up first so that we can reforest it.

I take occasion at this moment to speak most highly of both the Forester, Mr. Silcox, and his assistant, Mr. Tinker, and the cooperation they have endeavored to give us in Massachusetts, but there are not ample funds available at the present time, nor is there any possibility of our securing them unless it is by direct appropriation. I have a memorandum here from the Forest Service to which I have already referred, and I shall read the reference that he makes in this statement.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It is a fact, is it not, that the total recommended by the Forest Service for six New England States, broken down by States, amounts to approximately

Mr. TREADWAY. The original request of the Forest Service was for $8,000,000 for use in the States, and then I think $870,000 for the national forest in New Hampshire, but that was cut down by the Budget from $8,000,000 to $5,000,000 and by the committee to $3,000,000. The telegram from the Governor says that it would require $3,000,000 in Massachusetts alone to clean up the fire hazard.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. And still leave the emergency features of the work.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; absolutely. I call the attention of the House now to this memorandum which I received from Mr. Tinker, the assistant forester:

MEMORANDUM TO MR. TREADWAY

1. When the Forest Service was precipitated into the hurricane disaster work in New England by order of the President the State conservation agencies were called into consultation in Boston and a definite plan of hazard elimination developed and agreed upon. State projects, involving the use of available W. P. A. facilities, were submitted and acted upon immediately. These resulted in 15,000 to 17,000 men being employed on hazard-elimination work, a totally inadequate number, but the maximum that could be utilized in areas accessible to the sources of supply of labor. All of the C. C. C. camps administered by the Forest Service, State agencies, and the Park Service were turned over to the coordinating agency and their efforts directed toward hazard elimination.

2. Realizing the necessity for proper supervision and direction,

2. Realizing the necessity for proper supervision and direction, the Forest Service drew upon its resources of experienced personnel, established an office in Boston to assume direct responsibility for the operations, and employed field technicians through the W. P. A. to exercise technical direction over the hazard-elimination operations and to inventory the extent of the damage, the hazard, and the requirements to meet the catastrophe.

3. As a result of the action taken, an integrated program of hazard elimination has been developed in cooperation with the State agencies, and something over 20,000 men have expended their efforts in an attempt to reduce the hazard to normal. This program has required planning, organization work on a tremendous scale, and constant supervision. It could have been accomplished in no other way than through the detail of experienced Forest Service personnel to the job. It can be carried on in no other way. The State agencies were totally unprepared to cope with a diseaser of such prepartitions.

4. The hurricane damage in New England was not confined to The furnishe damage in New England was not comment or unined forests. There was a tremendous loss of property of all kinds, and the States were overwhelmed in their attempt to repair the effects of wind and flood. Towns utilized all possible labor in clearing away debris, in repairing sewer and water systems. The burden of men and money fell heavily on towns and States. 5. The fire-hazard reduction work being directed by the Forest Service covers some 600 towns in the stricken area. In nearly all of these towns committees have been organized and have been occupied with aiding in the fire-hazard reduction, giving of their time and money freely.

6. In Mr. Tinker's memorandum to you dated December 22 he wrote as follows:

"The fire-hazard reduction work has proceeded under severe limitations. Unfortunately, W. P. A. has not been able to furnish us anything like the required number of men. The estimated force required was 39,000, whereas at the peak in late November only 18,000 men were obtained. Fire-hazard conditions in New England or they will exist next entry grants be expressed. as they will exist next spring cannot be exaggerated. To anyone who has been in the disaster area the thought of the possibilities of a disaster even greater than the hurricane is appalling. The timber-salvage work this winter will appreciably reduce the fire hazard, but in spite of this, under the limitations that now exist in elimination work, the situation next spring will represent a very real menace to the public safety.

"If the above-enumerated measures are not taken and fires are not adequately handled during the coming spring fire season, I predict there will be loss of life and property throughout the path of this hurricane equal and even beyond that done by the storm itself. I feel a tremendous responsibility in all these undertakings and feel that all influential and thinking people should be properly apprised of the exact situation and then prepare to prevent these things from hampening." things from happening."

7. The Forest Service estimates that there is a gross area affected by the hurricane of about 14,000,000 acres in the New England States needing protection, with about 150,000 acres of blown-down timber where intensive fire-hazard reduction work over a period of almost 2 years will be needed to reduce the hazard to normal. There are about 1,200 miles of roads to be opened and about 950 miles of telephone lines and five lookout towers to be constructed.

To make possible quick action for fire suppression it will be necessary to organize, in conjunction with the States, fire-suppression and fire-fighting crews to be ready to act expeditiously. The necessary fire-fighting equipment must be purchased and located at strategic points throughout the area and the organized crews instructed in the use of this equipment. All of this organization is for protective purposes while the work of removing the blown-down timber is being corried on Covernity to the control of the control of the control of the covernity is being corried on Covernity to the control of the covernity of the covernit timber is being carried on. Our minimum plan calls for about 7,500 temporary employees to carry on fire-hazard reduction. This force includes patrolmen, foremen, straw bosses, and about 5,800 laborers. This force is in addition to the C. C. C. camps and whatever W. P. A. labor can be secured for use in areas accessible to such labor. labor.

Now, as to precedents for this sort of an appropriation, the very next item in the bill, Mr. Chairman, is for relief from grasshoppers—an item where the Federal Government is to aid people who have grasshoppers on their property. Well, I cannot conceive of grasshoppers being as serious a menace to anybody's property as such a fire hazard as I am showing the pictures of here today. I have been along the highways in my own district and they are in no way other than correct representations even for miles in extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have a little memorandum here of where the Federal Government has aided in other lines to relieve distress and troubles: The foot-and-mouth disease, cattle tick, grasshoppers, tuberculosis in cattle, contagious abortions, Mediterranean fruitfly, corn borer, boll weevil, stem rust. All those things have to do with agricultural situations, and this situation I am describing has just as much to do with agriculture, because these people who own this down timber are practically all farmers. They are not simply timber owners but their actual assets are all lying flat on the ground today. It certainly is not an unreasonable appeal that we are making to the Federal Government to relieve this distressed situation in New England. I cannot conceive of a reduction being made by the Appropriations Committee. If Mr. Silcox and his department, or we, as the representatives of this affected area, fail in our duty to the committee in providing the necessary information on which to base its decision to give sufficient money for this purpose, let us have an opportunity of supplying that information at some further hearing.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is it not a fair statement to say that the fire hazard of which the gentleman speaks extends to towns and cities and entire communities in the New England States?

Mr. TREADWAY. The memorandum which the Forest Service gave me, which I will extend in the Record, shows how worried they are that this fire hazard will just sweep New England. It is just as likely to start at Long Island Sound and go right through this whole area as did the hurricane originally. The number of industries, cities, communities and people endangered—the number of deaths that will result from such a calamity are inestimable. I cannot conceive of cutting down an appropriation where humanitarian work is as much required as it is here.

I do not know how this $3,000,000 is broken down and what part of it is going to Massachusetts, but Massachusetts alone would need more than that amount, in accordance with the word I have from the Governor. But we are not going to argue about allotting this entire sum to Massachusetts alone. It is a New England problem, and the appropriation ought to be made sufficient to cover New England. I am not familiar with the statutes of other States, but if we cannot, under our State constitution, match dollar for dollar, it is unfair, it seems to me, to make that a condition under which any money will be given to Massachusetts by the Federal Government. I feel very strongly that at least that feature ought to be eliminated, and let Members from other States quote what the laws and constitutions may be in their respective States.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am told by Members that the laws in certain States may not allow them to contribute. They probably can only contribute a small amount in any event.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not feel qualified to speak for other States. I am speaking for New England as a whole, anxious to see this disaster condition removed from New England as a whole. But I do feel that we in Massachusetts ought to have special consideration in view of the constitutional provision to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to emphasize the fact that the bill before the committee today is not concerned with the purchase of timber, but confines itself only to the fire hazard.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am glad the gentleman called attention to that, because he and the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers] and I all have similar bills asking for additional money for the purchase of this timber. That has nothing to do with the question under consideration at this time. We are discussing only the fire hazard and the fire possibilities of the future in today's appeal to Congress.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman think that even the amount recommended in this bill is sufficient to do that?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, it would not cover Massachusetts alone, but we have to divide it up, in fairness to the other States and our hope in the fairness of Congress to make an additional appropriation for all of us.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Is it not true that unless this fire menace is cleared up the tremendous investment the Federal Government now has in the White Mountain National Forest will be jeopardized by any forest fires that might start?

Mr. TREADWAY. I may say further that every bit of this money will be used for labor. It is to be used for nothing except cleaning up this slash and fire hazard. The question of unemployment, therefore, is vitally involved also.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, first, I wish to congratulate the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for the early action it has taken with reference to dealing with a subject that is of prime importance to us in the territory I represent, namely, eastern Montana.

So that you will have some sort of picture in mind as to this territory, I may say that we have large farm units, great grazing territories on which no human being lives. These areas are so vast that it is difficult to deal with them effectively when the grasshoppers become promiscuous. Attention must be given to these pests early in the season to be effective.

A few dollars spent early in the spring will accomplish much more than perhaps five times that amount spent later. We are already receiving warnings as to what is going on in eastern Montana. I shall read from an Associated Press dispatch from Broadus, Mont., the Powder River country—and I think everybody here has heard of Powder River.

I wish to insert the following Associated Press dispatch which appeared in the Billings Gazette, Billings, Mont., on January 14:

Broadus, January 14.—Ranchers in Powder River County have started their 1939 Mormon cricket worries.

Mild weather caused an early hatching of the destructive pests, and Guy Nash, rancher, living 9 miles west of here, declared he could "collect tubs full" of them if his word was doubted.

Ranchers hope the early hatched crickets will be caught in an expected cold wave and destroyed.

If that does not happen, namely, cold weather sets in, Mr. Chairman, it is going to be a mighty serious problem in this territory. I wish to say to those of you who have not seen Mormon crickets and are not familiar with them that they are a mighty destructive cannibalistic insect, or whatever you call them. It would remind you of the old craw-daddy that we as children used to see in the swamps along the Missouri River. They are so ferocious that Indian legend has it that the Mormon cricket is the reincarnation of the buffalo returning to vent its wrath for the wholesale slaughter of the buffalo decades ago. You will recall, as history tells us, the infestation of the Mormon crickets on lands cultivated by the Mormons in Utah in such numbers that destruction of their crops was imminent. You will recall also that history informs us that the sea gull, the sacred bird of the Mormons, gorged itself with these crickets in the fields and then carried them to the middle of what is known as Great Salt Lake and there disgorged them, returning to the field to repeat the operation. That is why today we have a statue of a sea gull in Salt Lake City commemorating its service to humanity. In order that you may have some idea of how the campaign of destruction on these pests works, the Government buys the bait, sends it to each county. There it is mixed and the farmers come and take the bait and distribute it where it will do the most good. As a matter of fact, the State and the farmers perhaps equally match in work and money the amount expended by the Federal Government.

I wish to insert, at this point, a telegram received by me from H. B. Mills, Montana State entomologist, as follows:

Have information for Montana only. Seven thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven tons bait needed for crops compared with 5,018 last year. Further need 6,280 tons for idle land and 8,824 for range, total 19,241. Increase 14,223, or 300 percent necessary to expand program to reduce possibility of vast migrations which cost Montana over six million last year. Cannot adequately plan for campaign unless total needed available in advance of season. Lee A. Strong, Chief, Bureau of Entomology, in Washington can give you picture of general situation.

And I got in touch with Dr. Strong, and he did.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I yield to my colleague from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. What percentage of the money appropriated by Congress is spent for this bait the gentleman speaks of? Is it not largely spent for bait?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Practically all of the money Congress appropriates is spent for bait with the exception of what is used for the construction of miles of tin barriers to prevent the crickets crawling on uninfested areas. The cost of transportation and distribution is borne by the farmers.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In other words, then, the localities themselves are contributing at least as much as the Federal Government toward the eradication of this pest?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is virtually correct when we consider the help furnished by the State and the cash contributions or work done by the farmers and the transportation of the bait to the place of intended use.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. If the statement made by the gentleman is correct, then, perhaps, instead of $2,000,000, the proper figure would be nearer $6,000,000?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It would be. The Bureau of Entomology, which makes a study of these matters, which has to do with the expending of this fund, recommended to the Bureau of the Budget the sum of $6,000,000. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget, in turn, recommended to Congress the appropriation of $3,300,000.

This recommendation was made in view of the fact, I understand, that some $700,000 was left over from the amount appropriated last year. Congress does not need to be afraid of appropriating this sum, for it will not be spent unless emergency condition makes it necessary. The very fact that there was a carry-over from last year shows how carefully the fund is administered.

We have heard much talk about different menaces here this morning, and I do not want to mitigate anything the gentleman from Massachusetts has said about fire hazard, because we have seen fire in Montana, and too, we have seen the C. C. C. boys, without fear, disregarding the danger to their lives, and in many instances losing their lives, fight their way into the mountainous regions to extinguish, in a short time, a conflagration which was raging in our virgin forests.

When, however, it comes down to real injury and damage, the pests I am talking about, the grasshoppers, are the real menace to the agriculturist and they destroy vegetation and crops. They rise in clouds so thick as virtually to obscure the rays of the sun. They light in a field in the morning, and by nightfall it is stripped of its grain, and all vegetation.

These Mormon crickets, my friends, are worse than grass-hoppers. I do not know whether they come from the Mormon territory or not, but wherever they come from they are a serious menace. I may say I never saw them in Montana until the last few years and they absolutely destroy everything they touch, not only crops, but garments, fence posts, and so forth.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my good friend the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What makes the gentleman think the crickets are more destructive than the grasshoppers?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Because they are larger. Has my friend ever seen a Mormon cricket?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Has the gentleman ever seen an old-fashioned craw-daddy in the swamps?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. With those long tentacles?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I fully realize the destructiveness of the grasshoppers and the crickets, and though I have not seen the crickets, I have heard them discussed on the floor of this House and elsewhere and have read up on the subject; and I know that crickets really do more damage than grasshoppers do, as they are larger, move more slowly, and destroy more thoroughly. Does not the gentleman think that the amount recommended by the Department, namely, $6,000,000, should be restored in this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I should think so. I am going to propose an amendment which I think the House should seriously consider.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I agree with the gentleman; crickets and grasshoppers are extremely destructive.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have the figures on the amount of money used for the destruction of the grasshoppers and crickets in each State. In Montana $12,519 of Federal funds were used for destroying grasshoppers.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Was that not entirely inadequate?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Entirely so. The sum of $151,578.79 was used in Montana to take care of the cricket problem. In other words, the Mormon crickets are a more serious menace to our crops in Montana than the grasshoppers.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In New Mexico we have voluntary brigades. We have the National Guard, and we have hundreds of men from the W. P. A. The destruction ran into hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is correct. I cannot estimate the damage these pests do to us. As a matter of fact, when the crops are taken from the farmers, what happens? We have to come before this Congress and appeal to the Congress for an appropriation to keep our people from starving and freezing to death. This happens not only in Montana but all of these Northwestern States. It will only take a few dollars here to guard against this serious situation.

Last spring, as pointed out by the Bureau of Entomology, the crickets and the grasshoppers were destroyed, but later on in the season, about May, there rose into the heavens clouds of grasshoppers which came from the Dakotas into Montana and destroyed crops that were valued by the Bureau of Entomology at the sum of $6,000,000.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to contribute something to the gentleman's statement, which is very valuable, especially to us who come from districts in which grasshoppers have done considerable damage. I have a telegram from the president of the Nebraska Crop Growers' Association who believes they should have $6,000,000. May I ask the gentleman if he does not believe that unless the larger amount is appropriated, the one or two million dollars is practically wasted? Does not the gentleman think that the larger amount, with a real, expert program to take care of the entire insect situation, would solve the problem better than a smaller appropriation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman know why they did not use the $700,000 which they have on hand?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Apparently it came too late.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The problem, while it is your immediate problem, is a matter of concern to the whole country?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right, because what concerns us in Montana concerns every State in the Union. If we lose our crops in Montana, Wyoming, and the Dakotas, we will have to come down here to Congress and my good friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], than whom there is no more courteous, able, and influential Member on the floor of this House, will help us get an appropriation to feed our people. So it is your concern and it is the concern of every member of this Committee.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I was impressed with the gentleman's statement a moment ago, as well as the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman stated he did not want to detract from the plea made by our friends from New England.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. And he further stated that this is a matter of concern to the entire country. We have only a little of this pest, thank God, in Arizona, but I understand there are 24 States of the Union bothered to some extent with this same situation. I would like to call the Committee's attention to the fact there are dynamic hazards as well as potential hazards. The fire hazard is a potential hazard. When you are dealing with insects you are dealing with a destructive force that some scientists tell us is likely to conquer the world and is worse than militarism among humans. You are dealing with a very dynamic hazard and it directly affects more than half the States of this Union.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I do not think the gentleman has finished his discussion as to the amount necessary for the eradication of these insects. The gentleman is correct in stating this is a national problem, but I still believe if we are going to appropriate only one or two million dollars we are wasting the money unless we appropriate a sufficient amount to completely cover the situation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. STEFAN. We should appropriate a larger amount; that will take care of the situation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Committee on Appropriations may answer that by stating that when the demand arises Congress will act. You know what happens here. You know that you cannot get any bill through the House that is controversial in nature without extended debate. It takes time. Why not have some confidence in the Department that has the administration of this fund and give such an amount at this time as will enable the Department to carry on an effective campaign to destroy these pests, in case of an emergency, which are the greatest of menaces to the West. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much impressed and very much stirred by the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, and also by the gentleman from Montana. I am in entire sympathy with their appeals. What they are asking, of course, is of a constructive character.

However, there are other things than grasshoppers and crickets that are hazards to the people of this country, and other things than hurricanes and fires. Sometimes, perhaps, in an unguarded moment we are responsible for certain devastating legislation that brings great injury to large numbers of persons in this country.

I recall that when the campaign was on in 1932 things became very tense, and farmers all over this country were listening to the campaign speeches made at that time because they were deeply concerned with possible legislation that might be placed on the statute books in the event of the election of one candidate or the other. At that time the farmers, and particularly the dairymen and the cattlemen, were very eager to know just what would be the fate of the tariff rates on farm products if Franklin D. Roosevelt were elected President and his party put in power. I imagine many communications were received by President Roosevelt, then Candidate Roosevelt, urging him to state his position on the question of the tariff on farm products. At any rate, on October 25, 1932, he spoke in Baltimore, and millions of men listened intently to what he had to say. At that time he made this statement:

It is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer in the United States knows it and will not be deceived.

It is quite evident from the majority Mr. Roosevelt received, especially in the farm sections, that the people relied on his assurance that the tariff duties on farm products would not be reduced. All the farmers knew was that he had made that assertion and that promise. They did not know how easily he would break that promise, as many other promises have been broken, if trusted with power.

I invite the attention of the Members of the House, and especially those representing farm interests, to the fact that it was not long after Mr. Roosevelt became President of the United States that he asked Congress to delegate certain powers to him to exercise through the Secretary of State in the handling of tariff duties. The power he requested was delegated to him. The result was a series of trade agreements with various countries. Among these trade agreements was one entered into with our neighbor to the north, Canada. Tariff duties were reduced in that agreement. He could go only as far as the statute permitted, which was a 50-percent reduction of the rates in the 1930 Tariff Act; but later, under a second agreement, he reduced the duty on cattle, dairy cows, cream, whole milk, white seed potatoes, and white potatoes the full 50 percent, just as low, in fact, as the statute permitted him to go.

My statement would not be complete unless I gave some evidence of the effect of the lowering of these duties. The fact is that imports of cattle from Canada increased 56 percent from 1935 to 1936. Then from 1936 to 1937 there was an increase of 66 percent, or an increase from 1935 to 1937 of 122 percent. These increases in imports occurred under the first trade agreement with Canada; but now a new trade agreement with Canada has been entered into which not only further reduces the rates but increases the quotas of cattle and dairy cows that may enter our market.

The American farmer faces a serious situation. When we consider that imports of cattle from Canada under the old trade agreement exceeded the quota by more than 67,000 head it is safe to assume that under the new trade agreement, with lower rates of duty and enlarged quotas, the number of imported cattle from Canada will increase to the full quota limit. I may say we are feeling the effects in our markets up in the North. Our farmers have gone into Buffalo and cooled their heels for hours while Canadian trucks were being unloaded and the Canadians were underselling them in the Buffalo market. This has been true all along the border.

I wish to discuss another item. We reduced the duty on cream.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. May I ask the gentleman whether or not he has had occasion to observe the conditions along the New England border?

Mr. REED of New York. I shall be pleased to answer the question.

Mr. BREWSTER. During the hearings before the Committee for Reciprocity Information Mr. Grady, the chairman, stated he had secured a concession from Canada by allowing potatoes from the United States to enter Canada free of duty. I should like to ask the gentleman whether or not the fact we can send potatoes to Canada free of duty is calculated to offset the devastating effect of the importation of some millions of bushels of Canadian potatoes into the American market?

Mr. REED of New York. I am very glad to reply to that question.

Occasionally for educational purposes to see what our good neighbors are doing and since I live not very far away from the Canadian line I have taken trips into various parts of Canada. Last year in the early part of September, I drove up through that great potato empire in Maine, Aroostook County, which is so ably represented by the gentleman who has just propounded the inquiry. Proceeding up through that great territory, with its wonderful storage houses, fertile fields, and its farm machinery, and where I saw more potato fields than I had supposed existed in the United States of America, I went across the Canadian border. The people on that side of the border have the same fertile land and produce the same types and grades of potatoes as are produced in Maine. In talking with a very distinguished and well-informed man in a small city in Maine located on our northern border I made some inquiries of him with regard to conditions at that time, and as I recall it—and if I am not correct the gentleman from Maine will correct me—buyers were then offering only 35 cents a barrel for first-grade potatoes raised in Aroostook County. Is that correct?

Mr. BREWSTER. That is right.

Mr. REED of New York. The farmers were in a desperate plight and I said to this well-informed gentleman, "Can you compete?" and he said: "No; the cost of production in Canada is so much lower; I own land on both sides of the border, the same kind of land, one just as fertile as the other and," he said, "my taxes on the land on the Maine side are $60 a year while the same amount of land used for the same purpose on the Canadian side is taxed $2," and he said further: "You will notice why this is true when you enter Canada."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 10 additional minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. I drove up along that border and through Canada; on the other side the roads were inferior, the schools were inferior, the pupils or parents had to furnish their own books and supplies in the schools, and in driving along the border on a Sunday for a distance of 100 miles, we counted the number of horses and buggies which we met and counted over 500 horses and buggies and noted that the churchyards were filled with horses and buggies, and we met only 25 automobiles.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Then the gentleman would think that this reciprocal trade policy is nicely calculated to send us back to the "horse and buggy" age?

Mr. REED of New York. It is inevitable that if we raise our cost of production here to a point beyond the cost of production abroad, they are going to take our markets, and if they take our markets we face the proposition that we must accept a lower standard of living unless we are prepared to protect our own market. Have I answered the gentleman's question?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes. I am very much indebted to the gentleman.

Mr. REED of New York. Let me go a little bit further. We have gradually reduced the tariff on cream, and in driving through there I saw the preparations being made to take advantage of these lower tariff rates, and to show you how unfair they have been in these trade agreements, which have lowered the tariff on cream from 56 and a fraction cents a gallon to 281/4 cents, in driving through one of the dairy sections of Canada along toward evening at milking time there was a downpour of rain. The milk cans were standing out in the open field and 25 or 30 men would be milking at one time out in the rain with the rain pouring down over the backs of the cows and running into the pails or soaking through the felt hats and sweaters of these men and then running into the milk pails. There are no sanitary restrictions in these trade agreements. You can go up into New York State or along the border in Wisconsin and see the sanitary requirements adding to the cost of production of our farmers, and yet this milk or cream comes in from Canada under the conditions I have mentioned with all this filth and disease germs to be sold in our markets.

It is not difficult to predict the effect which the lowering of the duty on cream will have on the volume imported. I need mention only what occurred when the duty on cream during the first half of 1929 was 20 cents a gallon. Under that law duty imports of cream in the first half of 1929 were 2,964,189 gallons. When the duty was raised by Presidential proclamation, effective June 13, 1929, Canada exported to the United States during the next 6 months only 1,942,704 gallons of cream. The Tariff Act of 1930 increased the duty on cream to 56% cents a gallon; the imports of cream from Canada dropped to 117,168 gallons.

Where is this going to end? Must we pauperize our farmers by whittling away our protection through these trade agreements? There is not a man on the floor of this House, not one, who would have dared vote for a bill brought into this House seeking to lower these duties as they have been lowered by these trade agreements, and yet we have given away the rights of a sovereign people and placed them in the hands of bureaucrats under a Department of this Government that would not dare go to the people and ask for their suffrage upon their record made by these trade agreements. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the distinguished gentleman from Pennslvania [Mr. Rich] will tell me whether or not he is in favor of this bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of this bill. There is an item in there which should not be there, and when you spend three and a half million dollars on a deficiency appropriation bill to construct a new building, that is contrary to sound legislation and I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. How about the $3,000,000 for the New England States?

Mr. RICH. The gentleman asked me if I was in favor of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. How about that item? The three million for New England.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman gets down to specific items I will answer in respect to specific items. There are some things that we are in favor of and some things that we are opposed to, and the gentleman from Missouri knows very well that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was never found wanting in expressing his opinion one way or the other, yes

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman seems to be found wanting now, and if he is in favor of that item, then I want to ask him where are we going to get the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Let me tell him where we will get the money.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not yield. In reference to the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] concerning the three and a half million dollars for the Census Bureau, I have been trying for many years to get this Congress to authorize an appropriation to construct a concrete building, not any marble structure, nor one out of Indiana limestone, somewhere in the southwest section where we can store all of what might be called the inactive files of this Government.

Mr. RICH. I say to the gentleman that that is a mighty sensible thing to recommend, and I hope that sometime it will be constructed.

Mr. COCHRAN. If that kind of a building is constructed, I predict that 40 percent of the space now occupied by Government agencies in the city of Washington will be released for desks. Old files only used occasionally should be removed from the beautiful buildings and placed in what I would call a warehouse—stored where the file clerks can get their hands on them quickly and send them up to the department whenever it is necessary. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced that bill again this year, and I have taken the floor to again call attention to it. I shall ask the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to give me a hearing. I have already had one hearing. There was a conference where the committee was appointed to decide as to whether or not it was desirable to construct that building.

A majority of those on this committee were in favor of the warehouse, but it finally ended up in putting three and a half million dollars more in The Archives Building, constructing stacks in the center of that building. That three and a half million dollars would have constructed the type of building that I have referred to-space to be set aside for every department and independent establishment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is an absolute necessity, as the gentleman should know, to have a place for the Census Bureau to work. The Constitution says we must take the census every 10 years. Now, I yield.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I say-and I have said on the floor time and time again—that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] knows how to save money for the Government, if he will only do it, and being a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments it ought to be his duty to do it, not only here but every place. His suggestion is a mighty fine one, and if Members will look at the hearings on this bill, on page 10, they will see where we are spending money for rentals at the rate of $22,745 for 1,830 square feet of space for Government buildings, and a great part of that is being used for files. Nothing in the world would be more desirable than what the gentleman is now recommending, and he will find the gentleman from Pennsylvania supporting him and voting for a bill of that kind.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman. The committee of which I am the chairman has no jurisdiction over the bill that I have introduced. If it did, I would have had it reported long ago. As I said, the Census Bureau must have a place to work. The Census Bureau files are going to be always active from now on, because they are being used every day by every State in the Union in checking up the age of applicants for old-age assistance. You cannot put those files in the Archives Bureau. You have to put them in a warehouse. Then you have the record of every man that served in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps since their inception. They are not in the Archives. Some of them are even stored at Governors Island, N. Y. You have historical documents from the World War that are stored at Governors Island, N. Y. You have files of this Government, valuable files, in hundreds of places. The General Accounting Office alone has 14 different places where it is now storing its documents. You cannot conceive the damage that would result if they were destroyed by fire. The necessity for this warehouse is apparent.

In conclusion, I say this. I do not know whether I am going to be able to be here tomorrow, but if I am I am not going to support this $3,000,000 appropriation.

Those who have suffered have my sympathy. I also was in sympathy with the million W. P. A. workers who are going off the W. P. A. rolls unless the Senate restores the $875,000,000 asked by the administration. Many who are very active in support of this item did not have the same view on the W. P. A. appropriation as I had, but voted for the reduction of $125,000,000. That, however, has nothing to do with my opposition to this appropriation.

We have, from time to time, I know, assisted others in distress but consult the record and you will see it was loans, not grants. It is the principle I fear. Using the language of some of my friends on the Republican side of the aisle when they were opposing some so-called New Deal measures, "just another experiment, I suppose." Well it is a very dangerous experiment, and one you are going to hear from at some future date.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if I am here tomorrow I am not going to support it. My reason is that I believe we are establishing a policy that will come back to plague us. Every time you have a disaster in this country, due to an act of God, you will have Members from that section of the country saying, "Well, look what you did for the New England States. Do the same for us."

I will vote for an authorization to loan the people of the New England States $10,000,000, if necessary, but I will not vote to hand them $3,000,000 without any strings attached to its whatsoever, other than it be matched by the States. It is simply a gift, so when you do this for the New England States, remember you are going to do it for other parts of the country.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I notice in the papers that at the time of this disaster the W. P. A. was very active in the expenditure of funds. I wonder if the hearings disclose how much money was spent by them at that time?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is covered in the hearings, I under-

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to my good friend. Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman said it was not within the jurisdiction of the committee to prevent the expenditures to construct this building. I want the gentleman to tell the House, especially the new Members, just what the committee's jurisdiction is.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows the jurisdiction of the committee. He is the ranking member on the minority side. He knows what the jurisdiction is. But I will say among our duties is to investigate the executive branch of the Government at any time any Member of this House lays before the committee any concrete evidence of fraud or waste. I have told the gentleman on this floor time and time again that whenever he will put the evidence on the table that will warrant an investigation he can have it, but not before.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is, if we bring the skunk and lay it there you will help us smell it, but you would not try to catch the skunk. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, the gentleman brought in one skunk. He made so many speeches that finally Mr. Hopkins said to me, "Cochran, I am tired of you defending me on the floor of the House. I will come down." I brought him down. The gentleman from Massachusetts had his opportunity, and if ever I felt sorry for a man in my life I felt sorry for my friend from Massachusetts when Mr. Hopkins got through. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I was sorry for myself. I never was so insulted. Every Democratic member of the committee rushed to the defense of Hopkins. I was not allowed to proceed hardly at all.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, if you will read the hearings, nobody had a chance to say anything but the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Are the hearings in print?

Mr. COCHRAN. Certainly.

Mr. GIFFORD. Has the gentleman any copies left?

Mr. COCHRAN. I believe we have some. I do not know. They were so uninteresting that I do not know whether they are there or not. I will look, and if I find one I will send the gentleman a copy.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman will acknowledge that is the only day, 1 day in 6 years, and no one else has been allowed to come before the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman has never laid the evidence on the table.

Mr. GIFFORD. I or no one else could produce evidence enough for his committee to act.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not deal in skunks. I did not investigate your administration during the last 2 years of Hoover. I was fair. I am not going to investigate my own unless facts warranting an investigation are placed before me. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot help addressing myself to the remarks of the President of the United States on January 4 on the state of the Nation. He made this statement:

And we still intend to do our own thinking. We still intend to do our own thinking.

Now the question in my mind is, does he expect the Congress to do its own thinking, or does the President, Cohen, Corcoran, and company, expect to do the thinking and send the bills to Congress for us to rubber stamp? I can hardly think that is possible. I do not believe the Members of Congress will rubber stamp any more legislation, and I think we will see different legislation in the House during this session than we have seen before during the New Deal administration of F. D. Roosevelt.

On yesterday I asked the majority leader a question about Government finances, and the insinuation was, "Where are we going to get the money?" He did not want to reply to me, or at least he did not. I feel that today the responsibility for the operation of this Government devolves upon the membership of Congress, especially the leaders of the majority party. When I pick up the Treasury statement of January 16, and I think of the Speaker of the House, the majority leader, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, and the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, and others, and when I think of the importance of the offices which those men hold with the majority party. I say to you as Members of Congress, it is up to the men I have just mentioned to lead the way and show the people of this country we are going to economize in our Government spending. It can easily be done-should and must.

I call your attention to the fact that the Democratic Party in its platform of 1932 said:

We will abolish useless commissions and offices, consolidate departments and bureaus, and eliminate extravagances to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of government.

I now call attention to the remarks of the President of the United States on March 10, 1933, when he addressed the Congress as follows:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy. With the utmost seriousness I pointed out to the Congress the profound effect of this upon our national economy. Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

The Hoover administration in the 3 years the President talked about went into the red $3,500,000,000, but after 6 years of his administration he has put the country in debt $20,000,000,000. What does Mr. Roosevelt think of his economy measures? I know what I think of them, as well as millions of other American citizens. It is a crime against our American civilization for a man in high and responsible public office to tell you he will do one thing when he gets in office and then to repudiate his word when he does get in. It is almost inconceivable that he could change so completely around. No stretch of the imagination could give a logical and businesslike reason.

I call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the condition of the Treasury as shown by the Treasury statement of January 16, published by the Treasury Department, Mr. Morgenthau's We find that we have gold to the extent of secretary. $14,594,000,000 belonging to the Government. Where is it stored? In a hole in the ground down in Kentucky. And they are storing the silver of this country in a hole in the ground up at West Point. This story of buried treasure reminds me of the old story that when you hide your treasures they are of no value. This is where we find ourselves today so far as our gold and silver are concerned. It is of no value. It is in the hands of the President of the United States only, and he can use it at any time he sees fit. Be careful he does not declare an emergency exists before he goes out of office and he will be the sole controller and I might say sole Looking at this Treasury statement again, I am shocked to find that the Government has a balance of $3,000,000,000 lying in the banks of this country on which the taxpayers are paying interest. Why under the sun is it necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to carry such a balance? It was never thought of or dreamed of by Secretaries of the Treasury before Mr. Morgenthau came into office. Why is it necessary today? There is a reason, but it is not a good one—let him answer it; I have asked the question a number of times, but no answer.

Let me call attention further to the fact that since July 1 the taxpayers of this country have paid $3,087,000,000. Against that receipt you have expended $4,920,000,000. This shows that we have gone in the red, since July 1 last, to the extent of $1,833,000,000. We will be close to four billion in the red by the end of the year. Terrible, horrible, unexcusable, unbusinesslike, unheard of in peacetime. It shows to our people this administration knows nothing of running the Government.

A few years ago the President of the United States talked about a balanced Budget. He has forgotten that phrase today. He says nothing about it, and he knows nothing about it.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO GET THE MONEY?

If we keep traveling in the direction we are now going, it will be but a few years until our Government will experience the greatest wreck ever seen in the history of the world, and our children and children's children will suffer for the folly of this administration.

The establishment of a policy of responsibility and economy in government, Mr. Chairman, belongs to this Congress. The majority party promised economy in government. You promised to consolidate departments. You have had this opportunity for 6 years. Instead, however, of making that promise good, you did the very opposite.

In 1932, on November 4, in Brooklyn, N. Y., the President of the United States stated:

The people of America demand a reduction of Federal expenditures. It can be accomplished not only by reducing the expenditures of existing departments, but it can be done by abolishing many useless commissions, bureaus, and functions; and it can be done by consolidating many activities of government.

After making that statement what did the President of the United States do? He established more bureaus than any other administration in the history of our Nation. At the time he took office we had 63 separate and distinct bureaus of government. He has established 61 additional bureaus and commissions. Is that the kind of reduction he promised? Think of it, men; it is a serious question.

We have a law on our statute books forbidding the Federal Government going into debt beyond $45,000,000,000. We shall soon reach that limit of indebtedness. Before long you will have presented to the Committee on Ways and Means a bill asking that the permissible debt of the United States be increased to $80,000,000,000.

I say to you Members of Congress that if you want to assume the responsibilities of government, if you want to assert your rights as American citizens and do the thing you ought to do, never let this resolution pass with Mr. Roosevelt in the White House. It is to be hoped that one of these majoric committees, the Speaker of the House, or the majority leader will try to and be successful in forcing economy in the affairs of Government. Such a bill should not pass. Every Member should rise on this floor and say, "Such a bill shall never pass under present conditions this Congress."

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I am much in sympathy with what the gentleman says, but I wish you would tell us his remedy. How are we going to take care of the unemployed? The gentleman stands simply for cutting down taxes and cutting down appropriations. Do not do it. Are we going to extend the wage and hour legislation, or what are we going to do to take care of men that have not got jobs?

Mr. RICH. Let me give the gentleman the answer. The gentleman has asked an appropriate question and I can tell him the answer. The first thing necessary to be done is to restore confidence amongst the businessmen of this country.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. That does not put food into hungry stomachs.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Restore confidence amongst the businessmen of the country, so that private capital will not be afraid to venture into business. If you do this, you will be doing something that will put 300 men to work where you now put 1 man to work on the Government pay roll. We will put food in their stomachs and sunshine in their hearts, clothes on their backs, and happiness in the home.

Another thing to do is to get people off the Government pay roll at $50 a month and get them back into industry, where they can make $100 a month. The good, sound men of this country want jobs, not dole. The American with red blood in his veins says, "Give me a job, and I will go to work." This administration, however, tries to prohibit their working by ill-conceived laws.

Another thing you can do is to change the N. L. R. B. Act and the Wagner Act so that the businessmen and industrial men of this Nation can feel they have some rights in their own plants and that there is some opportunity ahead. It requires a business executive to run a business, and not a rabble rouser. They only breed discontent and destroy. If the businessman makes too much money, we can hold him down by the income tax, and we can by law regulate his earnings, but when we kill opportunity, we destroy all. We kill business; we destroy jobs. Confidence is lost. Government of the people and by the people is destroyed.

Let us stop these reciprocal-trade agreements. Let us keep the agricultural industry of this country for our own farmers and our own laborers instead of permitting foreign goods to come in here to usurp all of our markets—the best in the world. If we will do that, I will say to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce], we will put these men back to work and we will have a satisfied, happy, contented people in this country. I hope the Members of Congress will use their own minds instead of expecting the President of the United States to do everything for them. If we follow this policy we will go places, we will make this country a happy, contented country, and we will be doing that which is for the best interests of all the American people.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. That is no answer to the problem. The machines are busy. These men are out of work and they can never go back to work. The gentleman cannot find work for them.

Mr. RICH. Let us regulate mass production then so we can give them jobs and not permit machinery to do everything. Men need jobs in order to do something. Idleness breeds discontent. Idleness makes men shiftless and lazy. If the gentleman wants to regulate mass production, let him offer a bill.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The gentleman does not point the way.

Mr. RICH. None is so blind as he who will not see. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, there is an item in the pending bill for the construction of another Federal building and, while it is necessary in the scheme of things, yet I suppose this would be a most appropriate time to call the attention of the members of this Committee and the Members of the House to the tremendous program of Federal construction that has been carried on since 1933.

A botanist measures the age of a tree by the number of rings. I suppose the size of the Government and its present status, so far as functions are concerned, can be measured by the amount of new construction that has taken place since 1933. Some of the figures you will find in the hearings which accompany this bill, but all of the important information is not contained therein, particularly that which relates to construction and rentals outside the District of Columbia.

There is a statement in the hearings to the effect we are renting within the confines of the District of Columbia today 120 buildings or portions thereof, with a total available space of approximately three and one-half million square feet. I put it in that fashion because it will be easy to compare, and I think the figures bear emphasis. There are 120 leased buildings, containing three and two-thirds or three and one-half million square feet for which we pay an annual rental in the Nation's Capital of about three and one-half million dollars. Of course, that is not the whole story as we consider the proposal to appropriate in excess of $3,000,000 for the building of a new building to be occupied by the Bureau of the Census in anticipation of the taking of the next census. It is rather interesting to see how buildings have accumulated over a period of time and to note that in and of themselves they have been insufficient to house the various governmental activities.

I received some figures from the Procurement Division this morning which I think will be interesting. I suppose some of the Members of the House do not know that in addition to the three and one-half-million-odd square feet that we rent in the Nation's Capital, we also lease almost 26,000,000 square feet outside of the District of Columbia. The total annual lease cost outside the District of Columbia is eighteen and three-fourths million dollars. But what intrigues me is the number of buildings we have built and still we are unable to catch up with the governmental functions.

Some time when you get down on Fourteenth Street, going in the direction of the bridge across the Potomac, you will find completed there very recently an annex to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, in which building they print nice, new, green money and beautifully colored postage stamps. That building, completed recently, provides 244,292 square feet of space.

When you have occasion to call on the Secretary of Agriculture or one of the department heads in the Department of Agriculture, and you get lost running around 22 acres of stone and masonry, take particular notice of the South Building, which was completed not so long ago, containing 1,054,724 square feet of space. Also observe the Department of Agriculture's Economics Building, built since 1933, embracing over 26,000 square feet.

When you wander down Constitution Avenue you will find the place where the Attorney General has his office, together with all the divisions in that Cabinet Department. Take particular note of that swanky building that has 477,000 square feet of space. Then the very genial lady, who has been the object of some criticism here and elsewhere lately and who presides over the destinies of the Labor Department, is installed in a very beautiful structure there which contains 229,000 square feet of space.

Not so long ago they had the dedication of the Apex Building, occupied by the Federal Trade Commission. I admit they were in dismal quarters formerly, wholly unsuited to the needs of the Commission, but it is simply another accretion to the Government's building program. When that building was completed it made available 131,000 square feet of space.

Then there is the Government Printing Office warehouse, with 160,000 square feet; the new Interior Building, a tremendous monument of stone, steel, and masonry, with 541,000 square feet of space, finished last year. Then there is the Internal Revenue Building, on Constitution Avenue, with 112,000 square feet; the Interstate Commerce and the Labor connecting wing, with its auditorium, cafe, and hearing rooms, embracing 81,000 square feet; the Interstate Commerce Building proper, containing 228,000 square feet; the new Post Office Building, with 418,000 square feet; and the new Procurement Building, with 141,000 square feet.

The total area we have added through Government construction in the Nation's Capital is 4,148,000 square feet. Add to that three and one-half million square feet of rented space and add further almost 26,000,000 square feet of rented space outside the District of Columbia and you will get a pretty fair idea how this Government has grown in its activities and functions since 1933.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman let me make one more observation? Then I shall yield with the utmost grace to my good friend.

Consider all this rented space in Washington, D. C. A rough calculation indicates that if it were all rolled into one it might be a single-story building 6,000 feet long and 600 feet wide. Such a building would extend from the Union Station to the Willard Hotel and probably be four times as wide as the over-all width of Constitution Avenue.

It seems to me that here, then, is a focal point at which we can begin some reflections on the expansion of governmental functions. If we continue to expand in the same degree in the next 6 or 7 years, obviously we will have to carry on a more adequate building program and lease other space everywhere in the country. I do not know when and where we shall reach the end. I do want to make one observation, however, and I believe my good friend the gentleman from Colorado will bear me out in this, that we are centralizing and centralizing and centralizing in the Nation's Capital to the point where the Government workers must go to work in three shifts in the morning and go back home in three shifts at night in order to avoid and avert constant traffic congestion. I know of no particular reason why we have to be always concentrating these functions in the Nation's Capital.

The census is an activity of government that requires no particular identity with other establishments in Washington. They are going to gather up their own data. They are going to calculate it on machines, some of which have been devised by persons in their own Department and others of which must be rented. Is there any reason you can think of why a building for that Bureau must be placed in Washington and another 7,500 people ultimately at peak operations of the Census Bureau be added to the congestion that has obtained here all these years? Why can it not be located in Chicago? Why can it not be located in Detroit? Why can it not be located in St. Louis? I see no reason in particular why it must be placed here. So it occurs to me that the members of the Committee might well consider this whole scheme of decentralization, which, in my judgment, would be very happy for the Nation's Capital and would render equity and justice to the rest of the taxpayers of the Nation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Soon we shall hear a voluminous discussion of the national-defense program and the need for providing protection to certain parts of the country that are considered vulnerable especially in time of war. I wonder whether we are not year after year making the Nation's Capital more and more vulnerable by concentrating virtually every activity of government here. If there is anything to the representations and protestations that somebody might send an airplane carrier within 500 miles of our shores and then send bombing planes on, why, the first place to which any military tactician would direct his efforts would be the Nation's Capital. With every activity of the Government concentrated here, such an attack would in great measure destroy the coordinated functions of government in a very little while. Unless it can be demonstrated that the Census Bureau is so dependent on other agencies for information and service as to cripple its functions by removal to another site, there is much to be said in favor of taking these functions

I speak also for the taxpayers of the country. In the case of this building for the Census Bureau, whatever information they need from other governmental departments can be obtained by telephone or by telegraph, or by air mail or some other means of communication. I am wondering whether it is going to be the policy and the best possible program to add another huge building to the collection of masonry that already exists in Washington, D. C.

Now I yield to my very charming and gracious friend from

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have listened very attentively to the enumeration of the large buildings which have recently been erected in Washington by the Government. I notice the gentleman took particular pains to state these buildings had been constructed since 1933.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman I was just expressing a fact without emphasis.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I recognized only one building in the list, and that was the new Interior Department Building, which actually originated under this administration. The gentleman might have mentioned the $15,000,000 Babylonian palace over here across the park housing the Supreme Court, and he might have mentioned the great building recently constructed as an annex to the Library of Congress. All of these buildings were authorized under previous Republican administrations, and the program started then.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My able friend, the gentleman from Colorado, can always pick out the weakness in an argument. However, I wish to say to the gentleman, who, along with so many others some years ago when I first came here, was inveighing against this great monument they referred to as Hoover's folly, now known as the Commerce Building, that we had only a handful of people in that building when it was completed, but you came along just in time to occupy it from cellar to garret and had to build extra walls and partitions in the building until the total number of people working there in one building finally reached 12,000, under the able leadership of General Johnson and his N. R. A. While the building was there and was occupied by us we did not pile up all the activities on the program and force thousands of people upon the Federal pay roll.

There were only some 40,000 or 50,000 people working in Washington then. Look at the Civil Service Commission list today. There are nearly 120,000 on Uncle Sam's pay roll in the District of Columbia. So, while we authorized it, and for a very good purpose, we did not make it a beehive of industry that was one day going to fall upon the shoulders of the taxpayers as a great, onerous burden.

That, I think, is a suitable and sufficient answer to my friend the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. However, it does occur to me that we are going on with a program of centralization that is not good for this city, and one that is not fair or equitable to the rest of the taxpayers of the country, and I see no good reason why the rest of the country should not have the benefit of some of the jobs that are always concentrated around the construction of a building and why the masons and the architects and the skilled workers and others in other portions of the country should not share in the beneficences of the Federal Treasury and of the present administration. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee has set a reasonably good example in making a 26-percent cut on this bill. The only trouble is it did not cut deep enough.

There was such a nice opportunity to wipe off another three and a half million dollars which the committee did not embrace. This bill carries $3,500,000 to put up a building for the Bureau of the Census, and let me say to you that that building would only be required for about 1 year and 3 months, for then the work would have evaporated and there would be nothing with which to fill up the building. It is absolutely unnecessary that we do this.

As the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barron] pointed out earlier today, the thing we need to do is to get rid of some of those highfalutin, worthless agencies that are occupying rented space. We might better pay rent for 15 months than to spend three and a half million dollars for a building that is only necessary for 15 months.

Now what are some of these agencies that we could just as well evaporate or just as well get rid of and save a few dollars for the taxpayers as we go along; some of these agencies that are feeding off of the vitals of the Republic and sapping the strength of our taxpayers and destroying their independence?

Let me say to you that the average rental that is paid is 95 cents a square foot, but let me read to you some of these highfalutin agencies and the amount they pay for their space:

National Defense Power Committee, 7,990 square feet, $19,974.96, or $2.50 a square foot.

Central Statistical Board, 6,700 square feet, $10,084.44 or $1.50 per square foot.

Federal Housing Administration, 18,000 square feet at $17,000, and 100,000 square feet at $155,000, and 48,000 square feet at $74,000.

National Emergency Council, that council that came in here a year ago with a statement to the public that they had to have more money in an election year, 16,500 square feet at $28,800, or $1.70 a square foot.

National Labor Relations Board, 29,790 square feet at $74,475, or $2.50 a square foot.

T. V. A., 2,800 square feet at $6,300, or upward of $2 a square foot.

About three-fourths of these institutions which I have read and referred to and which actually pay the bulk of the high-priced rent that is paid by this Government out of the 3,600,000 square feet of rented space, should be abolished immediately and we should get rid of that cancer on the Government of the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Unfortunately, that happy situation cannot be brought about until 1941, I may say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Well, that may be; but I have been hopeful that this Congress would have common sense enough to abolish a number of these worthless and useless agencies and get rid of some of this cancer that is sapping the vitals of America.

On top of this, even according to the program of the administration, there is a curtailment proposed in the W. P. A. proposition which should release space sufficient to take care of 2,500 of the employees of the Census Bureau that will need to be housed long before the requirement for the space can be met.

It seems to me that it is the height of folly to construct more buildings at this time to satisfy the greed of the bureaucrats to fill that space. I do not believe that the situation in Washington at this time justifies such a thing as going ahead with a building of that character. If you will look over the hearings from pages 8 to 14, inclusive, you will find almost invariably that those institutions that are carrying the high rental charge are the ones that could be gotten rid of, that there would be plenty of space available out of that occupied by the 22,000 who are in rented space here in the District of Columbia. There is plenty of opportunity to get rid of 4,500 and make room for all we need in the Census Bureau. For that reason, when this item in the bill is reached, when we read the bill under the 5-minute rules, I propose that we shall have an opportunity to vote on whether we want to saddle the taxpayers with more buildings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is speaking of square footage. Has this been broken down at any time so as to give us an idea of what it cost per employee for rent? In other words, does it run as high as $600 per annum per employee in some cases?

Mr. TABER. The T. V. A. runs $300. The National Emergency Council runs $250. The National Labor Relations Board runs $250.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What about the P. W. A., to be found on page 12? Does not that run about $600 per clerk per annum for rental space?

Mr. TABER. Yes; it does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, as high as $600 per capita.

Mr. TABER. Six hundred dollars per employee, but, of course, that is a highfalutin organization. I did not happen to see that. They are not like ordinary Government clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask again with reference to one of the new bureaus covered in the hearings? I have just briefly glanced at it. It is the Wage and Hour Division. I understand that Department is just getting into form and digging its channel, so to speak. It is looking forward to having a minimum of 1,500 employees.

Mr. TABER. It is looking forward to a disbursement of better than $3,000,000 a year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. For clerical staff?

Mr. TABER. Yes; for clerical and administrative staff. Some of them do not even do clerical work—some of these professors and economists and that sort of thing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do we understand that these 1,500 listed are not the maximum that they expect to have when they get into full bloom?

Mr. TABER. All I know is that the Budget estimate calls for better than $3,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where will that Bureau be housed?

Mr. TABER. A part of it will be in the Labor Department Building, and a part of it spread around. I understand there is only one item of rental here for it. There is 729 Fifteenth Street, 2,700 square feet, but only 35 employees. Of course, they are going to have before the 1st of July 400 employed in the field as snoopers and inspectors, try to annoy these fellows who have only two or three employees who do not come under the act that the Wage and Hour Commissioner has in my opinion illegally ruled should be brought under it, and they are going to annoy those businessmen who have two or three employees and have not any business being brought in under the act by following them up. The big fellows are a minor problem.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that Administrator Andrews can make a ruling which has the effect of law that such employees are within the provisions of the bill?

Mr. TABER. He cannot, but he thinks he can.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, the industrial operator in the field goes along then under the assumption that he is covered by the bill after this ruling is made.

Mr. TABER. That is it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But it does not have the effect of law? Mr. TABER. It does not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman anything in the hearings about complaints against Administrator Andrews and Mr. Magruder along the lines of those which have been filed against the National Labor Relations Board insofar as the administration of the Wage and Hour Act is concerned?

Mr. TABER. No; I have not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman has not heard of any reports like that?

Mr. TABER. Nothing of that kind. I do not think from anything that I have heard that he has overreached himself in that fashion at all.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself another 5 minutes to say a word or two about the rest of the bill. With reference to this item for grasshoppers, I thought that we were pretty fairly liberal. There is $2,000,000 appropriated and there is $700,000 left over and that should fairly meet the situation. It is $700,000 more than what was spent last year and with no reason to believe that there would be a situation that they would be facing that would be worse.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have a very high regard, I may say, for the gentleman's economic views and his purpose in trying to economize as much as possible, but I find in these hearings where Dr. Strong testified that for every dollar expended last year on grasshopper control alone, $79 was saved. Now, does not the gentleman think if we have an infestation of grasshoppers and Mormon crickets as we did last year, the sum ought to be sufficient to deal with the subject now instead of having to come back to Congress later on to deal with the menace?

Mr. TABER. The money will be available now. This bill, in my opinion, will be passed and become a law within 2 weeks. The money will be available when it can be used most efficiently. From everything I could get from the entire set-up, including the fact that they failed to use $700,000 of the money that was available last year, this will be sufficient. They said they did not get the money until too late to use it. On the other hand, they told us that they did not come too late when we were appropriating the money, so we have to bear that in mind when we consider that question. We are giving them $700,000 more than they had last year. That will enable them to go out on some of this land that is not cultivated, and for which the farmer receives certain benefits and emoluments for keeping it out of cultivation, and correct the situation to a certain extent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The very fact that this Department did not expend this $700,000 shows that they can be entrusted with the money. Is it not advisable to give them a sufficient amount of money to deal with the usual infestation of grasshoppers and crickets to the end that they will have it if they need it, and the fact that they did not spend it before shows that they will not expend it unless it is necessary?

Mr. TABER. You know they have been coming here with a build-up on that situation for a great many years getting increased appropriations. There is not any evidence that they have it in hand any better today than when they first started. I think we ought not to give them more money than it is manifest they could use intelligently. I think we have given them enough.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I did not understand what the gentleman from Montana said, but is this grasshopper money spent for the purpose of exterminating pests after they appear or is it spent for the prevention of the appearance? I think it makes a great deal of difference whether we appropriate the money for one purpose or the other.

Mr. TABER. I think it is entirely spent for poison that kills the grasshoppers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And also the eggs.

Mr. TABER. But I do not think it does go into the question of getting rid of the eggs.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the money is available and will only be expended if the crickets or grasshoppers

Mr. TABER. I do not know about the crickets. I cannot tell you about that.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, the gentleman referred to crickets.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Montana did, but I cannot answer that question. I do not know whether their method of killing the crickets gets rid of the eggs or not, but the grasshoppers are only killed with this poison bait that they have after they come to life.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield. Mr. HAWKS. Is it not a fact that the extermination is a matter dependent almost entirely on the weather? That is, these things develop very rapidly.

Mr. TABER. Cold, damp weather tends to kill them off. Mr. HAWKS. And they develop very rapidly under certain conditions?

Mr. TABER. Yes, that is true; in warm, dry weather.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have seen that territory and I have seen the damage they can do. I am very much in favor of the appropriation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is the gentlewoman in favor of increasing it?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentlewoman mean to increase the New England item or the grasshopper item?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Both.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman is a good watchdog of the Treasury.

Mr. TABER. Well, I do not know about that.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. As I understand from the report, on page 2, which gives a summary of the items in the bill, it mentions the Budget estimate of $3,300,000 for the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine: Control of incipient and emergency outbreaks of insect pests and plant diseases, 1939, $3,300,000, but the bill, as I understand, only contains $2,000,000, which is a decrease of $1,300,000 under the Budget recommendation.

Mr. TABER. Yes. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

That is true. At the same time, there are $700,000 more available to them than they spent last year. The committee felt, after considering the thing very carefuly, that that, with $2,000,000 more, was sufficient for them to do everything they could do intelligently.

Now, I want to take a minute or two about the New England situation. The committee has brought in $3,000,000 to help with the fire-hazard situation resulting from the hurri-

There it is proposed to use this money with an equal amount to be matched by the States to get rid of the brush, clean up the roads and trails through the forests, and back a ways from the roads and the trails so that the fire hazard will not be so great. It is also intended to make breaks through the forest 200 or 300 feet wide so that if a fire should start it could not spread all over. With the situation that was presented to us and the evidence that we had available, I think this is about as far as the committee could be asked to recommend. We have not yet had evidence of what the local communities and States are going to do. Massachusetts itself has appropriated $19,000,000. I understand that $1,000,000 of that is to be used for this particular purpose. In Connecticut, Vermont, and New Hampshire, all of which are affected by this situation quite extensively, their legislatures have just met and are considering the proposition. I have no doubt but what they will provide funds to do something that may help the situation in their States and meet their share of any obligation that should be met.

I hope that the Committee can go along and carry this item.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, to descend from discussing the marble and granite fortresses here in the city of Washington to discussing grasshoppers is quite a tumble from the sublime to the ridiculous. It is rather funny and mirthful as a subject of debate here, but to those who have witnessed this phenomenon there is absolutely nothing funny or laughable about these insect infestations. When you consider the vast areas over which they occur, when you consider that these insects can travel from 500 to 700 miles per day with a favorable wind, when you consider that they actually eat the heavy-corded canvas coverings off of gas-tank hose, eat the carpets off of the floor, eat fence posts, eat all the foliage on the trees until they kill the trees, and when you consider that they move in solid waves over great areas and destroy everything in their path, even a flood does not compare in crop damage with a grasshopper invasion.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. My time is too limited to yield.
Mr. DIRKSEN. I merely wanted to make an appropriate observation at that point.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Very well; make the observation, but do not ask a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Was it in the gentleman's country that the grasshoppers ate the feathers off of the turkeys? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. They not only ate the feathers off the turkeys, they ate the turkeys. [Laughter.] I just cannot fancy a hungry grasshopper contenting itself with feathers when there is a turkey under the feathers. [Laughter.]

Seriously, I remember reading some years ago a prediction that eventually insect life would destroy and exterminate every other form of life on the globe; and it really makes a fellow think of that when he sees one of these infestations. I have seen such things as this, that when the eggs hatched and the insects got so they could just crawl, because they had developed sufficiently to fly, looking over that vast area of moving insects it looked like the surface of water rippled by the wind. If you do not think that will make the flesh crawl on your back and make you want to vote for big grasshopper control appropriations, I am here to tell you.

But this is really what I got up to say: My experience in 1937 caused me to have very great confidence in the Bureau of Entomology, in its knowledge of this situation, and in the reliability of its prognostications. It is true it transpired that last year they were not able to use all the money appropriated. I think there was a balance of $700,000 that may be available in 1939. That was due, however, to a very great change in weather that occurred out in that country at the critical hatching period in the spring. We had a great deal more snow and cold rain over that area along in March and April than we had had in a good many years, and this arrested the development of the insects.

In 1937 the Budget asked $2,000,000 for insect control. This recommendation came up here in the latter part of January or early in February. The committee cut it to $1,-000,000. The Bureau of the Budget stated that the Bureau of Entomology had predicted an infestation in 24 States. The infestation developed in 24 States, and just about the time the $1,000,000 was gone the grasshoppers, the crickets, and so forth were just getting good and beginning to spread. It developed that more money was needed, and an additional $1,000,000 was appropriated, but it was appropriated too late.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that every resource of those States was thrown into action to save the situation. Why, in Colorado they called out the National Guard, they requisitioned all the trucks of the National Park Service, of the highway department, of the National Guard, and the C. C. C. camps. They threw the C. C. C. boys into action. That was the only order of business throughout that whole area for several weeks—simply fighting grasshoppers.

I am not going to mention any names, but something happened at that time which shows that it is an ill wind that blows no man good. When I saw that the $1,000,000 was not going to go far enough I went down to every agency of the Government that could deal with the matter. I found they had scraped the barrel clean. I put in the resolution to appropriate the other $1,000,000 which was recommended in the Budget. I was informed, however, by a very influential member of the committee that it was too late to get action on a resolution of that sort and to make any appropriation; that all I could do was to make my showing and lay the ground work for the next year.

One morning I got a call from his office. He said, "Martin, can you run over to my office? Come on over. I want to show you something." I went over there. He had a daily paper from his own district. He lived in another State that was supposed to be entirely beyond the danger of invasion. Across the top of the front page of the daily paper was the statement that his State was threatened with the greatest grasshopper invasion in its history.

He said, "How long do you think it will take you to get your grasshopper people before the committee? Can you do it before 10 o'clock?" I said, "You bet I can." By 10 o'clock I had the best bunch of grasshopper storytellers you ever saw before that committee. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick], where they really grow grasshoppers, came on last and stole the show so far as telling grasshopper stories is concerned. At 3 o'clock the resolution passed the House by unanimous consent.

We got action on that million dollars, but if it had not been for the invasion by grasshoppers of one congressional district we would not have gotten the money.

We have a lot of confidence in the knowledge of the Bureau of Entomology. The Bureau of Entomology is a scientific organization that knows its business. It does its job and it generally does it accurately. Mr. Chairman, I cannot imagine their asking for $6,000,000 to take care of a situation wherein $2,000,000 would be sufficient. I do not honestly believe that Bureau would do that. So far as I know, the Bureau of Entomology has never come up here before and asked for any such sum as that. I believe when they do ask for it they have the information on which to base a campaign calling for the expenditure of that amount of money or else they would not ask for such an appropriation. If more is provided for them than they need, they will do what they did last year. They will not expend it and it will be a carry-over to future years.

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I am very much in sympathy with what the gentleman says and I know for a fact, being a member of the Agricultural Subcommittee on Appropriations, that the Bureau of Plant Quarantine and Entomology is one of the very fine agencies of the Government. My district is not seriously affected by this matter, but the gentleman's district is and many others are. I wish the gentleman would state to the House what the accomplishments were as a result of the money spent last year in connection with the protection of the farmers' crops in those regions where the work was carried on.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I can only say it was very effective, but would have been more so had the $2,000,000 been appropriated in the first place.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield? I think I can answer that question, as shown by the hearings, copy of which I hold in my hand. Dr. Strong testified, and it is undisputed in the record, that of every dollar expended by the Federal Government $79 were saved. If that is not a good investment, I do not know what would be.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I thank the gentleman from Montana for his figures. Mr. Chairman, when you have an infestation in 24 States, and, as stated in this report, they anticipate a grasshopper infestation in 22 States and an infestation of Mormon crickets in 11 States, that means half of the area of the United States, and when you consider it is in the western country, it is more than half the area of the United States. In an extraordinary year it would be very easy to infest the other half. It was an astonishing piece of information to me that these insects could move as far as 700 miles in 24 hours. They could rise from the district of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Carlson] and could be parked in Illinois next morning.

I hope we will at least be given the $3,300,000 recommended by the Budget, which, with the unexpended balance of $700,000, will give us $4,000,000.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether everyone here is familiar with what a grasshopper infestation means.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Go ahead and tell them.

Mr. BURDICK. I happen to come from the headquarters of the grasshopper damage. There are a lot of you who do not know the difference between a grasshopper and a Mormon cricket. The only difference I can see is that the horns of the Mormon cricket are a little bit larger than those of the grasshopper. I would characterize a Mormon cricket as an overgrown grasshopper. The only difference is in laying their eggs the Mormon cricket lays them wherever they stop, while the grasshoppers lay them in swarms. It is much easier to eradicate grasshoppers than it is Mormon crickets.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks here the areas in the United States which will be affected during the year 1939.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I may say that the Government has asked for something like $6,000,000 to do this job. From that sum they have deducted $700,000, that was not expended last year.

I want to call your attention to the fact there are about 51,000,000 acres in the United States that will be infested with grasshoppers this year. Of this 51,000,000 acres about 17,000,000 acres are raw land, unoccupied land, that is really the breeding bed for the entire grasshopper infestation. There are about two and one-half million acres of land that has been used but taken out of cultivation through foreclosure and the farm program.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Does the gentleman mean this year? Mr. BURDICK. This year there will be 2,500,000 acres of that kind of land. That is where they breed the worstwhere fields have been and have gone back. Last year they made no concerted effort to stop these grasshoppers in any section of the area except on the farms where there were

The purpose this year is to do the job and do it right, and with nothing short of the $6,000,000, with the $700,000 deducted, can we hope to do the job. If you do not want to go the full way in making this appropriation as the Department has recommended it. I would say to you, do not appropriate any money at all, because it is useless. Let me give you an example of what occurred right in my own part of the country.

This year, in July, we had the largest crop standing we have had in the last 30 years. It would probably go from 25 to 40 bushels per acre of wheat. We had poisoned all the grasshoppers in that section of North Dakota, which is called the Missouri Slope section, the hardest part of the State to handle in respect to grasshoppers. However, we had poisoned and poisoned, and followed the directions of the Department until we had the grasshoppers cleaned out. Then, within a period of 24 hours, thousands and thousands of acres of that wheat were totally destroyed, The farmers never put a binder on a large part of it. The hoppers came in from the southwest, from the direction of Wyoming, in swarms that swarmed in the air to a height of a thousand feet. They came in with the wind. In 24 hours, as I say, millions of acres of wheat in North Dakota were destroyed.

If you do not want to go the whole way and do this job right and stop the grasshoppers in their breeding grounds, which are located by sending out an army of men to find these fields-and it is proposed to spread the poison by airplane after these areas across the country are flagged and the beds located-there is not very much use of doing anything. My experience has been that we can poison grasshoppers, but if we do not go on the vacant land, on the land that has been taken by foreclosure, which no one occupies, we might just as well let the whole thing go, because a farmer cannot lose any more than 100 percent of his crop in any event.

The Congress has never appropriated the amount of money the Department of Agriculture has recommended. It is claimed that we have $700,000 left from the appropriation of last year, and that this shows we had too much money then. That is not the case at all. No effort was made to poison the grasshoppers on these two types of land. vacant, unoccupied land, and the abandoned fields, which is where the grasshoppers came from this year. If we are to do the job anywhere near as it should be done I am prepared to say from practical experience that the estimates made by the Department of Agriculture are true and correct. If you propose now to spend another $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 on this job and let the grasshoppers increase in other sections of the country, my advice to the country is not to spend anything, just leave it the way it is. However, if you really intend to help us, there is something that can be done.

Let me say that the loss to the farmers of the United States from grasshoppers last year was between $150,000,-000 and $200,000,000. While in some sections the expenditure of the money appropriated by Congress did help and did save some grain, and there was some general benefit, yet no attempt was made, and there never has been an attempt made in this country to stamp out this infestation absolutely, or bring the infestation under control. However, if you will appropriate what the Department has asked, some $5,000,000, we will then be in position to control this infestation, which takes from the farmers of America an average loss of $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 every year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not true that when the grasshoppers got through eating you up in North Dakota they swept over into Montana and destroyed in three or four counties there wheat valued in the neighborhood of $6,000,000?

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is correct. The loss in eastern Montana, the section adjacent to my area of North Dakota, was slightly over $6,000,000 in one crop.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. CRAWFORD. With regard to the fields where the "hoppers" destroyed the grain and no crop was harvested did the farmers operating those farms receive any benefits at all under the Soil Conservation Act?

Mr. BURDICK. Not any more than they had arranged for in the first place under the agricultural program. They had cut down their acreage.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I mean is, did they receive any benefits due to the fact the crop was not harvested?

Mr. BURDICK. No. No insurance was in operation at

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the method used in destroying the eggs in the uncultivated fields in advance of the hatching?

Mr. BURDICK. There is no method or no program for digging down in the ground and destroying the eggs.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is done? Do you poison the

Mr. BURDICK. We poison the "hoppers" when they are hatched, when they come out. You can destroy a lot of them by plowing, of course.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Answering the question more fully, nothing is being done except by the farmer himself who volunteers to go and get the material the Government is going to furnish him. We do not go on the field as long as someone is there.

I may say, however, the whole theory of exterminating the grasshoppers is out of the question. The only thing that will exterminate the grasshoppers is climatic conditions.

Mr. BURDICK. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. So no effort is being made to exterminate the grasshoppers, but only to get to the farmers the food that will poison the hoppers and get them to use it; yet the gentleman is intimating in his remarks that we ought to aim at extermination.

Mr. BURDICK. No; I said control the damage done by the grasshoppers. There will always be grasshoppers. It would be a fool proposition for this Congress to try to exterminate the grasshoppers, because they always have been and always will be. We can control the damage they do, however.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it at the time the hatching takes place and the grasshoppers begin to appear that you apply this poison through the use of airplanes?

Mr. BURDICK. For the first 6 weeks after they are hatched. If you wait until after that time you might as well feed the poison to the wind.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the wheat crop insurance provision cover the loss incurred by reason of the destruction by grasshoppers?

Mr. BURDICK. It will in 1939 and 1940, but the premium is very high and it would take about all a man has to pay for such insurance. It is all right in the eastern sections of the country where the hazard is not so great, where drought is not prevalent and where there is no hail and very few grasshoppers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On that point, what did the farmers in your State who actually placed wheat on the market and sold it and collected for it last summer get per bushel for their wheat?

Mr. BURDICK. About 58 cents.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Fifty-eight cents per bushel?

Mr. BURDICK. Fifty-eight cents for number 1 wheat, but we did not have very much of that and most of our wheat brought about 41 cents.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, under the permission granted me, I insert the following from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations:

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the general purpose of a deficiency bill is to provide supplemental appropriations for the operation of the departments that have already been provided for in previous appropriation bills. Such appropriations are intended as emergency measures to piece out the needs of a department or bureau after the regular appropriation has been made. Included in the bill we have before us today is an appropriation for the Department of Labor for the operation and administration of the wage and hour bill.

When the committee had the draft before it, sent up by the Department of Labor, there was tucked into that draft a provision that I think should be called to the attention of the House, for it indicates an attitude that I believe the House does not approve and which I believe should be criticized.

Those of you who happen to have the hearings before you will note that on page 71 of the hearings the assistant to the Secretary of the Department of Labor, as well as the Administrator of the wage and hour agency, was before the committee for examination. At that time the attention of the administrator was directed to language in the draft of the bill which was sent to the committee providing that the agency could use a part of the fund provided for in this deficiency appropriation for packing, crating, and transporting household goods and effects of its employees.

During the course of the examination on the subject in question, the assistant to the Secretary of Labor finally excused the inclusion of this particular language in the draft sent to the committee with these words:

Would it not be well to raise that as a point of order?

The Administrator and the assistant to the Secretary of Labor both admitted that there was nothing in the existing law giving any authority whatever to the Department or to this agency for the expenditure of funds for this purpose. Pressed for a reason as to why it was included, the suggestion was made that other appropriation bills had carried such an item and therefore this newly created agency felt that it might, too, secure the same privilege, using, however, the subterfuge and the cunning of including it in a deficiency measure rather than waiting until the regular appropriation for that activity came before the Committee on Appropriations.

The amount involved here is not very great, but I do believe that the principle involved is a very material and a very fundamental one. I believe it goes to the matter of good faith of a department in dealing with the Congress. I believe this Congress cannot condone or excuse an assistant to one of the Cabinet officers who suggests that it is perfectly proper to include in the Department's draft of legislation such language as that public official knows to be improper and then gloss it over by saying that it can be eliminated on a point of order. I say the duty of the Department is to send a draft to the committee which the Department knows will not be subject to a point of order. A course of conduct which depends for its standards of honor upon the avoidance of detection of violations of the law indicates a low-water mark in moral competency. Every agency of our Government, and that means those who are responsible for setting the standards of these agencies, should seek to inspire confidence in those with whom they deal, confidence not only in their efficiency, but what is vastly more important, confidence in their integrity of purpose. Perfect candor should prevail. Subterfuge should have no place. And that applies in their dealings with the Congress.

We have been subjected too long to the demands of the the executive branch of the Government that anything sent here with executive approval must be accepted-must be approved. During the last 5 years executive agencies have been springing up like mushrooms, each of them ambitious and grasping for power. They secure such power by means such as the Department of Labor resorts to here. The motive is clearly indicated in this case, to get by without detection. In effect the assistant to the Secretary of the Department of Labor says, "You should pass or introduce or urge the adoption of legislation which is beyond the rules of the House, and which can be subject to a point of order." If those who are responsible for the submission of estimates to the Congress for appropriations are guilty of the same indifference in determining the financial needs of our Government bureaus as the indifference to the rules and regulations of the House advocated by the assistant to the Secretary of Labor, then no credibility whatever can attach to the justifications upon which all appropriations are based. Such a course casts a shadow of doubt upon the probity of the administration of the Department as a whole and destroys that confidence without which cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of our Government cannot be maintained. Good faith is a fundamental requisite.

Under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 a new agency was created. This is the agency with which we are dealing. It is under the Department of Labor.

It deals with the relations existing between employer and employee. Utmost good faith in its operation will be necessary if it is to carry out the purposes of the act.

I wonder how the employer or employee or the consumer can be assured that a just and honorable and equitable adjustment of differences will be reached by an agency that suggests that it is right to do something which it knows to be wrong, providing it is not detected. Wait for a point of order is the advice of the assistant, even though we know it is against the rules of the House. What degree of confidence can a wage earner or an employer have in the inspectors and investigators of this agency if this is the code of fair dealing advocated by the Department?

We have heard the President say that he is proud of the reestablishment of spiritual values. Spiritual values do have real worth. Let those values include the old homely virtues of honesty, fair dealing, and integrity of purpose. Let the legislative and executive branches feel that they are dealing with each other open and above board and that the cards are not being stacked under the table. That will go far to reestablish a moral standard which will reflect real spiritual values.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the House will join with me not only in criticism but in censure of any agency of the Government that comes here under the cover of a deficiency appropriation bill, an emergency appropriation, and then tries to cunningly, craftily, adroitly, and with subterfuge slip something into the bill which it knows to be against the rules of the House. Such an attitude cannot be condoned. It deserves criticism and censure. Let us have a little less cunning, a little more candor, a little less craftiness, a little more conscience. Let the executive agencies give us the same measure of good faith as they expect at our hands.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I cannot permit the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ditter] to go unchallenged. He is usually so logical in his thinking and discriminating in his judgment that I actually sat amazed during his diatribe against the wage and hour administration. I never met Mr. Andrews until he appeared before our committee.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman followed me personally, he will know that I directed no attack on Mr. Andrews. The quotation to which I directed the attention of the House was an answer of the assistant to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Saunders. I join the gentleman in having real regard, from what I have been told and what I have observed, for the Administrator of the wage and hour group.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I appreciate what the gentleman says, but even that statement of the gentleman puts a different light upon it. The gentleman held up to the committee the departments had "cunningly, craftily," stealthily, tried to slip something into a bill that has no place in the bill. My friend is too sophisticated in parliamentary procedure and in appropriations to feel that way about it. Mr. Richard Saunders, the gentleman referred to, is the Budget officer of the Department of Labor. My friend knows, he should know, he does know, that the language sent to the committee was sent by the Budget Bureau and not by the Department, that the language which comes to the deficiency subcommittee either is prepared by or approved by the Director of the Budget. The Department asked the Budget for $400,000 more than the Budget recommended. The Budget slashed the figures heavily. The Department asked the Budget to permit them, when they moved their agents from one place of duty to another, to pay a certain amount of the costs incurred by those employees of the Government in moving from one official post of duty to another-a procedure that is quite common in the Government service, a provision that is carried in many of the appropriation bills, a provision that could have been knocked out many times if anybody had challenged it.

The Army and Navy have that provision; the State Department; all of the bureaus of the Government who have important field officers, who periodically have to be changed from one point to another in their official duties are permitted, by legislation, to pay a portion of the cost of transporting those officers and their goods from one post of duty

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. DITTER. I recognize the long experience of the gentleman and how well informed he is. Will the gentleman tell us whether or not he knows of any instance in which this effort was made in a deficiency bill for a newly created agency?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Perhaps not. I am not able to see the significance that the gentleman draws by this matter coming up in a deficiency bill. Deficiency is a name that covers a multitude of things. There is no deficiency connected with the New England hurricane situation.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman will admit, and does, of course, acknowledge that all of the matters in connection with the operation of a department are more clearly inquired into in the regular bill for the operation of that department than when a deficiency bill for that department is before the committee? That is reasonable to assume, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. I cannot admit that. I do not think there is a stronger group in the House than the deficiency subcommittee, headed on the gentleman's side by the industrious and alert gentleman from New York IMr. Taberl, augmented now by the discerning services of my friend from Pennsylvania. I think there will be careful inquiry.

Mr. DITTER. I think the gentleman is attempting a construction that he knows I in no sense intended. Headed by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, than whom there is no more able man in the House, the deficiency is well manned on the Democratic side, and particularly well managed in the chairmanship, but is there not greater opportunity and more time put in when the regular bill for the Department is before the subcommittee, than during the time that the deficiency matters come before the committee?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, I cannot agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman and I disagree very amiably. May I inquire, Is the House to understand that if any criticism attaches to this matter to which I directed the attention of the House, the gentleman feels that criticism should be directed to the Budget officer, rather than the Department of Labor?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not think any criticism, in the sense that the gentleman made criticism, is appropriate to anybody. The provision in question was struck out of the bill unanimously when the gentleman called attention to it. I do not think the matter is one which, by the wildest stretch of imagination, could be turned into anything that the gentleman has pictured as an effort of a department or an officer to undertake to put something over on the Congress or the Government.

Mr. DITTER. Are we to understand the gentleman feels that the economies he has so advocated to the House will be advanced if all of the departments, all of the agencies, and all of the bureaus that have sprung up in the last 5 years are permitted to have this privilege of paying the moving expenses of the hordes of New Deal employees?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, I quite agree with the gentleman, and did so in the committee, that it was not a proper provision to go in the bill; but for the life of me I cannot see how the gentleman has worked himself into a lather over it. He indicts the Department of Labor, indicts the wage and hour administration, and throws suspicion on the whole administrative organization. Perhaps the gentleman did not intend to, but when the gentleman reads his remarks I think that is what he will find.

Mr. DITTER. I in no sense retract. I still feel the im-propriety of including in a deficiency bill the language in question, and in the absence of a better explanation than that afforded by either Mr. Saunders or any of those identified with him, with only the explanation that it should be protected by the alertness of the House in taking it out on a point of order, I still stand fast on the censure that I intend to bring to those chargeable with it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, the gentleman is entitled to his position.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] as far as inserting matters of this kind in appropriation bills is concerned, but I am wondering whether a department that happens to slip these items in, knowing that they are subject to a point of order, is in any different position than the Appropriations Committee which. in every appropriation bill we have before the House, brings before us items of legislation, knowing they are subject to points of order, and yet attempting to let them slip through if that can be done without attracting the attention of the Members. What is the difference?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Speaking of a point of order, the gentleman, of course, knows, because he is an alert parliamentarian, that there is an item in this bill in which many of his colleagues on his side of the aisle are interested, that is subject to a point of order—the New England hurricane item. There is no authorization for it in the law.

Are we to impugn the motives of the New England delegation? Are we to impugn the motives of the Bureau of the Budget? Is everybody connected with Congress to doubt these departments and feel that they are trying to put something over on Congress which is subject to a point of order?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman hardly feels that there is justification in drawing an analogy between this hurricane situation and the relationship existing between a department or bureau and the Congress in providing for the regular operations of the department or bureau. The analogy certainly does not hold good.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Perhaps it does not.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

I think, however, it is perhaps as logical as the position my friend takes that a bureau or department asks the Budget to include certain language, the Budget Bureau does so, the committee finds it and unanimously strikes it out. My friend is greatly agitated about that. It seems to me it puts a very wrong interpretation on a bureau that certainly from my viewpoint made a very creditable showing before the com-

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I notice that the language of that portion of the bill dealing with hurricane damage carries this additional proviso:

That section 3709, Revised Statutes, shall not apply in the case of any expenditure hereunder where the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $300.

The usual provision of law in that regard is for purchases not exceeding a certain amount.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Was there some purpose in changing that language so that donations on account of storm damage could be made?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; the statute cited by the gentleman does not apply to donations. It requires proposed purchases and contracts for supplies or services to be advertised. We have adopted the practice of exempting small purchases from this requirement of the law.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Does the gentleman desire to use further time?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. Tolan].

MIGRATION OF DESTITUTE CITIZENS ACROSS STATE LINES

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Chairman, this week the Department of Education of the State of California is requesting our State legislature to appropriate $750,000 for the education of children of destitute citizens of other States. There are 30,000 of these children, and the financial burden they thrust upon the school districts and the State of California's fine educational system is appalling.

This condition, Mr. Chairman, deplorable as it is, is merely a consequence of the shameful and inadequate treatment now provided in this Nation for the 1,000,000 destitute citizens who are "Stateless", are forced by unbearable standards of living, poverty, health, and debt to cross State lines in an attempt to avoid starvation, and gain the bare necessities of life.

WHAT THE CONGRESS HAS DONE WITH THE PROBLEM

Three years ago the Senate reported a resolution calling for an investigation of the plight of the migratory worker, and by amendment gave the Labor Department the job of investigation without appropriation. A splendid preliminary report was made to the Senate and the Secretary of Labor stated at that time that an appropriation of $20,000 would be needed to print the report, complete the investigation, and assemble sufficient data to recommend remedial legislation.

The preliminary report of the Secretary of Labor was never printed as a Senate document. It is in my office now, nearly 2 years old, and still not sufficiently complete to be used for the drafting of remedial legislation.

I regret that the Joint Committee on Printing refused to order the publication of this report.

I regret the fact that after the Senate passed Senate Joint Resolution 85, and it was reported in the House, that we failed to join the Senate at the last Congress in the passage of this resolution granting the Labor Department $20,000 to complete its work.

HOUSE INVESTIGATION REQUESTED

Today, Mr. Chairman, I am introducing a resolution, which I sincerely trust the Rules Committee will report without delay. It provides that the Speaker appoint a special investigating committee of five members to "inquire into the interstate migration of destitute citizens, to study, survey, and investigate the social and economic needs, and the movement of indigent persons across State lines, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the House in enacting remedial legislation."

The purpose of this investigation is simply this: (1) To permit the Secretary of Labor to complete her report, and the various national authorities who put so much time into the preliminary study, to complete their investigation and suggest legislative remedies; (2) to permit public charitable agencies and social-science authorities to add their recommendations to those of the Labor Department; and (3) to print for the use of the committee a selected and authoritative document which will give the Nation and the Congress reliable information on the extent of this problem, and its social implications.

SEEKS INTELLIGENT APPROACH

To carry out the purposes of the resolution I offer today would only involve a minor expense and, in the face of a problem which is every day becoming more acute, an expenditure which is absolutely necessary if the Congress is going to take action.

The transient unemployed are the constituents of no individual Congressman; they are the constituents of the Nation at large. If you cut relief appropriations for their care, no State welfare agency or county charitable organization is interested in the nonresident application. So I say that it is time that the Congress set about approaching this problem intelligently, instead of bouncing our "Stateless," homeless, and poverty-stricken citizens from one committee to another, while throughout the Nation they are bounced from one State to another.

SERIOUS PROBLEMS INVOLVED IN THE STUDY

Mr. Chairman, I should like to list briefly for the House the principal problems which necessitate study by the proposed committee:

1. Interstate nature of the migratory problem

California, as we all know, is the hardest hit by the western migration of families who have suffered from drought or other economic setbacks in the Midwest. We have 900,000 persons who receive some form of relief in our State, and the non-resident-relief load for the last 3 years has increased by 100,000 indigent Dust Bowl refugees each year for 3 years.

The Nation as a whole has been affected. Before the program of work relief was adopted, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration gave $90,000,000 in direct Federal aid to these people. Now the policy of the Government has been to divert the handling of these cases to the W. P. A. and the Farm Security Administration on a rigidly curtailed program.

However, the following States are suffering from a serious influx of these destitute families: New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, District of Columbia, Florida, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Texas, Arizona, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and California. And the rest of the States have no machinery or appropriations to provide for these families when they are stranded.

2. The problem of health

Forty-two percent of the cases in the Kern County Hospital in California for last year involved the treatment of nonresident patients. This is another serious financial burden upon the county. Local agencies alone cannot control the spreading of tuberculosis and venereal diseases by these infected migrants. Children suffer from malnutrition and exposure, and the normal community facilities are not available for these outcasts in any State, except in extreme emergency.

3. The problem of labor

Wage scales of 20 cents per hour and less in the Southwest are very common. In California, where we pay agricultural workers on the average of 50 cents an hour, this influx of workers is driving our wage scales down. A starving man will work for food, and the labor department survey shows that he will work for any salary, no matter how small. In California today there are four workers in the field for every position, and the number of jobs for this seasonal income is being slashed because of the national crop curtailment program.

4. The problem of education

These children are entitled to education, and that is the opinion of the California educational authorities. They need both academic instruction and vocational education. Many States will not attempt to see that these children, who are nonresidents, go to school. We give direct student aid through the National Youth Administration, but I feel that a portion of such funds should be set aside for the homeless transient waif that, because of real handicaps of life, is in greater need of education than those children in good homes.

5. The legal problem

Laws relating to residence in the various States are popularly designated "settlement laws." They work great hardship on persons forced to move. There is no uniformity, and in some States merely crossing the border means loss of citizenship, while in others a year's absence cuts off all claim to residence. In California a person under law cannot receive county relief unless a resident of that county 3 years; nor State relief unless a resident 1 year; nor W. P. A. unless the State certifies that the person is a resident. Thus these Stateless persons are fed and clothed illegally by our counties and by the State, and the W. P. A., while the Farm Security Administration assists them to remain in the State long enough to demand State and county relief as citizens. When they get on the W. P. A. they send for the rest of their relatives in the Midwestern States and help them keep alive in California with Federal funds until they too may demand relief.

WHAT TRANSIENTS NEED

Mr. Chairman, these 1,000,000 Stateless citizens of our country need help today in the following forms: First, relief provisions, clothing, and shelter; second, medical aid and instruction in hygiene; third, accurate information as to possibility of employment in other States where migratory workers are needed for seasonal crops; fourth, educational facilities for the children, particularly vocational training; and fifth, uniform treatment in all States with a Federal agency responsible for their treatment and the earmarking of special funds from relief appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, at a later date I will address the House further on this subject, but I request at this time that Members of the House that are interested in this problem join with those of us who regard this as a problem more important to the Nation as a whole than to my State, or any particular State now caring, in many cases illegally, for the citizens of other States. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. Gearhart].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, since the district I have the honor to represent is located in the San Joaquin Valley of California, the area to which so many unfortunate transients have migrated in recent years, I am more than ordinarily interested in the proposal offered by my colleague, Mr. Tolan.

During the past several years California's treasury has been drained, its relief administrators harassed by demands impossible of fulfillment, and its private citizens constantly called upon to supplement an all too inadequate Government relief. Even California's famed hospitality is now strained to the breaking point.

According to Mr. Thomas W. McManus, secretary of the California Citizens' Association, over 300,000 indigent migrants have come to California in the last 2 years. As a consequence of a survey conducted by this organization, it was discovered that, contrary to popular belief, these transients are not migratory farm laborers fitted for specialized farm work in California. Rather, they are farm and share-crop families displaced, through no fault of their own, by drought, depression, and crop curtailment—good people who have come to California in the slim hope of obtaining some sort of subsistence to tide them over from day to day.

This migration has brought the State's daily relief load to 900,000. There are four agricultural workers for every single available job; and should a further crop-curtailment program be levied upon California agriculture, this ratio will reach disastrous proportions.

Time does not permit a detailed account of the misery occasioned by this optimistic migration. Because of fierce labor competition, the wage structure has been threatened with collapse. Large families have been forced to use cardboard shacks as places of permanent abode. Squatter camps have sprung up in numberless locations, a constant threat to the public health.

True, State, Federal, and private relief organizations have attempted to cope with the problem, but the ever-increasing burden is now too much for State and local authority to bear.

Even if this perplexing problem could be solved by relief agencies, the result would be merely a temporary palliative. A long-range plan looking to a permanent solution is necessary, and I confidently believe that if the House should adopt the resolution proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. Tolan], a long step will have been taken in the right direction. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few observations at this time in connection with the wage and hour division which is under discussion.

Mr. Chairman, I voted against the bill, but I feel that in justice to Administrator Andrews and Mr. Magruder that those who opposed the bill should say a word in their behalf for the genuine, common horse sense which I feel they are using in administering the act. I am certain that if the vote were to be taken again I would vote against the bill as I did before; but, as I observe and check on the situation, I feel that the services, or the administration of these gentlemen whom I have mentioned, is so far above and beyond that of the National Labor Relations Board that Members of Congress should recognize the high type of administration which is being given by these two gentlemen.

The difficulty that I want to call to the attention of the House at this moment is something that may prove to be a disastrous defect in the act in that contingent liabilities are being piled up every day on the industries of this country; that is, against their capital structures which may at some future time precipitate a situation as embarrassing to public accountants, bankers, stockholders, and all others involved as has the Musica-Coster, McKesson-Robbins proposition.

It is practically impossible for an accountant to examine the books of an institution which has hundreds of employees and then certify as to the responsibility, or financial obligation, which that company has to the employees under the Wage and Hour Division with reference to the time-and-ahalf, or overtime, liability which is piling up. If a concern makes the payment without knowing that the law holds that the liability exists, and it finds later that the liability does not exist, the stockholders have been deprived of equities in the concern, because the payment was made although the law did not require it. If the firm runs on for weeks, months. and years and then does find that the liability exists, some accounting firm may be severely criticized for having certified to the financial balance sheets to banks and other lending institutions that the company had no liability under the act and later find that the assets must be decreased by the amount of the liability which runs by reason of some court decision. I think this Congress at the appropriate time should amend the law and set a date beyond which such liability shall not run against the company.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. We all appreciate that the gentleman has had expert training as an accountant and that he knows what he is talking about in this particular. What length of time does the gentleman think would be the proper limit to place?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am just going to make the observation that when you set the date you put into effect a stopgap against the interest of the employee. In other words, why should I as an employee be deprived of my time and a half for overtime if the law grants it to me?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But if the rights of the employee are recognized as this act, I think, did recognize on this particular point, then you cannot recognize the right of the industrial concern, or the capital structure, we will say. So I am not prepared to answer the gentleman's question except in an arbitrary manner; that is to say, to make the period, say, 1 or 2. Even if you run 2 years, in the case of a company with a weak capital structure and a large number of employees, or even with just a weak capital structure, when the law takes effect and the liability is established and the company must pay, there is serious danger that you destroy the capital structure of the company.

For other reasons, as well as this one, I voted against the act. I believe that in due course unless we change it very materially, we will find that the act will result in the financial collapse of a great many institutions when the force of the law becomes operative.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, this being my maiden trip down to the Well of this House, I should like to confine my comments to a subject about which I know something. I should like to speak about the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., because in the great catastrophe that has occurred in New England the value and the importance of our great laboratory manifests itself, and when I say "our great laboratory" I include all of the Members of the Congress and all of the States of the Union, because the services of this laboratory are not in any way limited or restricted to Wisconsin and the States immediately adjacent thereto.

I believe the laboratory operating at Madison, Wis., under the Forestry Division of the Department of Agriculture, the Director, and all of the employees of that laboratory would be more than happy and more than willing to extend all of the facilities of the laboratory to this stricken area in its rehabilitation. I do not believe, however, that the people in that particular area, or the Members of Congress representing the various districts of these United States, have a true appreciation of the equipment contained in this laboratory.

This laboratory has developed portable sawmills which could be used in the stricken area at the present time. It has other equipment that could be moved up there. It has technical devices that could be used in the proper handling of all the timber that is down. May I suggest to the Committee and to the House that perhaps a small amount of money included in this $3,000,000 deficiency appropriation measure be allotted and earmarked for the Forest Products Laboratory, with the idea in mind that their technical help and material assistance be placed on the field immediately.

Mr. Winslow, the Director, has indicated to me he would like to go up there, that he would like to send his men up there and that he would like to have all of the facilities of the laboratory put to work in the above-mentioned stricken area.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massa-

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did Mr. Winslow speak at the New England council regarding forests?

Mr. HAWKS. He was up there.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think he made very fine recommendations.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, according to Mr. Winslow's statement, in 1928 and since then there has been recommended for the Forest Products Laboratory an appropriation of $1,000,000, but never has that amount been appropriated. Last year I believe the sum was $628,000.

Mr. Chairman, this laboratory needs the million dollars. This is one part of our Government which is performing a real service and I do not hesitate a minute in coming before this House and recommending that the full million dollars asked for by the Department of Agriculture be appropriated to this particular division of the Government. It is performing a service that benefits everyone in this country. It has developed uses for forest products that have proved of value to various people in this country, those interested, for example, in the building game and those who are interested in building homes but find themselves confronted with high costs.

I should like to have the Committee specifically recommend that a part of this $3,000,000, say at least fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, be earmarked and set aside for the Forest Products Laboratory for use in the particular area at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Doxey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record on the subject of the St. Lawrence and to include a statement to the President and the reply by the President on that question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked unanimous consent to insert in the Record a speech of Governor James of Pennsylvania. The Public Printer has advised me that this exceeds two and a half pages of the Record. I ask unanimous consent to insert this speech of Governor James, of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in the Record, notwithstanding the estimate.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman secured an estimate from the Public Printer?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes. The Public Printer's estimate is $112.50.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered in the previous session of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sirovich]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a very fine brief presented to the board of hospitalization 2 days ago in favor of a general medical, surgical, and diagnostic center for Boston or the metropolitan area and also to include certain other material in favor of the hospital.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the entire Massachusetts delegation and a number of the Senators and Representatives from other New England States appeared before the board of hospitalization requesting that the board grant money for a hospital at Boston or in the metropolitan area of Boston. For 20 years and over, especially since 1925, Mr. Speaker, I have plead with the Veterans' Administration to build such a hospital in metropolitan Boston. We have the finest medical staff in the entire country, although I appreciate other people have very fine medical men in their districts. We have a tremendously large veteran population. We sent a great many men to the World War and many to the Spanish-American War. Everyone knows the part the old Sixth Regiment played in the Civil War.

Our veterans should be properly cared for with a diagnostic center. We all know that if you have a diagnostic center and a general medical and surgical hospital in connection with a veterans' hospital, staffed by fine physicians, with fine outside consultants, the veterans receive better care and their cases may be service-connected more readily; and it is also true the men do very much better when they are near home.

Also, it is less expensive than sending patients hundreds of miles away for hospitalization outside the State.

I am extremely grateful to Captain Kirby, the legislative counsel of the Disabled American Veterans, who has helped constantly and persistently during the past years in fighting for this hospital. He has represented the Disabled American Veterans, who are, of course, the ones primarily interested in such a hospital.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars have also been very helpful and their brief, filed 2 days ago, I believe, with the board of hospitalization, will carry great weight. The American Legion has also been helpful. The brief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars is as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS,
> VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES Boston, Mass., November 26, 1938.

To All Congressmen and Senators:

If we could only communicate to you our intense interest in the erection of a general medical hospital in Boston, we would have gone far on the road to our objective. Even though on two different occasions we have set forth cold, indisputable facts that buttress our convictions, we want you to know that this is not simply agitation from a veterans' organization; that the facts became known of the course of our mission and not the cause of our tation from a veterans' organization; that the facts became known after we had entered on our mission and not the cause of our seeking the establishment of the hospital.

We knew the hospital was and had been needed, and then followed the search to see whether or not Massachusetts could be justified in requesting the location of such a facility here. We feel that we have made out a case for Boston. We express the firm conviction that Massachusetts is entitled to have its program of hospitalization carried out here and any permanent allocation of general medical beds otherwise would bring unsatisfactory results.

The subject is continuously being reexamined and we give you herewith the results of a survey made as of October 1, 1938, of the population of the Veterans' Administration facilities of New England:

Bland Will ale it	Total patient load	Massa- chu- setts	Rhode Island	Maine	New Hamp- shire	Ver- mont	Connect-
Bedford Northampton	1, 215 702	865 390	105 49	109	78 30 37 15	11 45	24 NP 140 NP
Togus	1,032	387 19	49 63 8	224 111	37 15	15 3 9	57 D 2 GM
NewingtonRutland	186 896	123 143	18 10 17	3	29 5	1 3	117 GM 4 GM 36 TB

You will note from these figures that the State with the greatst number of men receiving general medical treatment in any State other than their own is Massachusetts. You will also see that Massachusetts leads in the number of men receiving domiciliary care and they have to go to Maine for that. The ratio of out of State N. P. cases continues so that the Bedford facility is roughly equal to the number of Massachusetts men hospitalized for the deliver of Massachusetts men hospitalized. for this disability and consequently the additional number of beds in the Northampton facility is for the hospitalization of veterans from other States—Massachusetts hospitalization in location only.

If we seem to be unduly urging action, it is only because we realize that the time is growing short for arrangements for next year, the regular appropriation bills will be considered by the House Appropriations Committee in December. Surely we can expect that our national representatives will press for a meeting of the Federal board of hospitalization before December 1 of this year, and have the decision of the board on record prior to

Today's headlines:
"Great defense program planned at Washington."
"Mass airplane production, larger Navy, power works due to crisis abroad."

There is contained in these headlines every reason for a general medical hospital in Boston and the last reference to Chelsea being considered as available for veterans in the not too distant future.

We have sought your aid, calling to mind oft-repeated statements we have heard of the importance of our Representatives and Senators in Washington, chairmen of important committees, ranking minority leader, ranking minority Member, important member of Ways and Means Committee, member of powerful Appropriations Committee. All of these, indicative of influence and prestige and to you we entrusted our cause, supported with the best evidence for the Massachusetts disabled soldier, sailor, and marking of quender services and so we set your marine of quondam service, and so we ask you:

How long are you going to let veterans of western Massachusetts be sent 120 miles to the Bronx hospital in New York for all eye, ear, nose, and throat periods of hospitalization?

How long must western Massachusetts veterans with a service-connected N. P. disability be forced to go to Northampton facility for general medical treatment; Newington not admitting such

How long must Massachusetts men be forced to go to Bronx hospital for cancer treatment and to Tupper Lake, N. Y., for lung operations?

When Boston is the medical center of the United States but not for veterans:

And Massachusetts ranks sixth in the contribution of her sons for World War service;

And Boston is the ninth largest city in the country;
And Massachusetts is eighth among the States in population;
And Massachusetts is thirty-ninth in consideration from the Veterans' Administration for supplying general medical beds under its aegis;
And when is the Federal board going to consider Massachusetts general medical needs?

Yours in comradeship, THE HOSPITAL FOR BOSTON COMMITTEE. By Francis X. Cotter, Chairman.

The statement of the Disabled American Veterans and of the American Legion will follow later.

I shall be extremely grateful, and I know the veteran population of all New England will be very grateful to the Members if they will bear this situation in mind if they have an opportunity to speak to the members of the board of hospitalization.

Mr. Speaker, in my work with the veterans and in the work of hospitalization I have never favored one section of the country over another. I believe the veterans of every section should be served. In the matter of a general medical and surgical hospital we have not been given our share. We have no Veterans' Administration general medical and surgical hospital in the great metropolitan district of Boston. I shall be extremely glad to help any and all other Members in securing proper hospitalization for their veterans. [Applause.1

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF PAUL Y. ANDERSON AND RODNEY DUTCHER

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, since the final adjournment of the Seventy-fifth Congress Messrs. Paul Y. Anderson and Rodney Dutcher, who were long distinguished, respected, and beloved members of the press gallery, have passed into the silent land.

These outstanding journalists were well and favorably known to all the Members of the Senate. In my opinion, official notice should be taken of their departure, as the result of which this body has suffered irreparable loss. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks two newspaper articles which I send to the desk concerning these eminent men.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles referred to are as follows:

The Washington Post, after quoting Mr. Anderson's last words, "My usefulness is at an end," says:
"In this instance Anderson was tragically wrong. His usefulness, far from being over, had in a sense only just begun. At 45, with a lifetime of superb reporting experience behind him, he could look lifetime of superb reporting experience behind him, he could look forward to many more years of active service.

"Anderson had the virtues of his defects. The world in which he lived and moved and had his being was a world of brilliant whites and unrelieved blacks, of angels and devils, of ultragood and ultrabad. What he believed, he believed with passionate intensity and with self-sacrificing devotion. What he despised, and above all he despised what he considered the cheap, the shoddy, the mediocre, and the fraudulent, he hated with evangelical ferocity.

"Anderson was not always just in his judgments. But just or unjust, his viewpoint reflected an implacable honesty of mind wedded to an unflinchingly courageous spirit. One of the great crusading reporters of our times, he gave luster to his profession and rendered service which was never underestimated by those who disagreed with him."

disagreed with him.'

The Wheeling Intelligencer and associated Ogden papers in West Virginia printed the following, written by their Washington correspondent, Mr. Charles Brooks Smith, concerning Mr. Dutcher:

"OH, SO TIRED!

"Fifteen years ago he arrived in the Nation's Capital, assigned here to do a column a day for 750 newspapers subscribing to a national press association. He had won it in apprenticeship which demonstrated that he had it—talent and versatility. In due time he was known personally to all worth his knowing, who came and went, strutting their brief hour upon the national stage. Unnumbered thousands knew him through his daily column favorite local journal. His style was factual—if you could call it style. Press associations won't stand for style. He was a hard and style. Press associations won't stand for style. He was a hard and a serious worker. He didn't seem to be able to find much time for play. He must have had a longing for it; he was still young—38 he was. There is no royal road to a column a day. It's rough and hard-going as the years add up. There are days when one bogs down into the hopeless feeling that he just can't travel any further. The typewriter is stubbornly silent. Its tired-out operator stares out the window into autumn but sees nothing the sun shining through silver mist upon the white spires of the Cathedral upon Mount St. Albans, a thrifty squirrel scurrying up a tree with a treasured nut for storing against wintry days; and he is deaf to the happy call of a bird on the bare branch of a faintly tinted elm.
"He withdraws his gaze and stares dully at his idle typewriter.

"He withdraws his gaze and stares dully at his idle typewriter. Oh, so tired; so very, very tired! He crosses his arms upon the machine and drops his head at rest upon his arms. And thus at rest was Rodney Dutcher, when a boy came for copy.

WINDOW-GLASS INDUSTRY AND FOREIGN COMPETITION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Finance Committee a letter submitted to me by Mr. W. L. Monro, president of the American Window Glass Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa. This document is a statement addressed to Mr. Monro by Mr. Theodor H. Weihs, who has had long experience in the manufacture of window glass abroad. It confirms evidence which I have brought to the attention of the Senate many times in the past regarding the invasion of the American market by foreign products which undercut our own because of governmental subsidies by which they are supported.

Mr. Monro advises me that Mr. Weihs, the writer of the letter, is aged 39 and a graduate chemist of the University of Vienna. Since 1925 he has been closely associated with the manufacture of window glass in Czechoslovakia, France, Italy, and Germany. Since 1936 he has been assistant superintendent of a window-glass factory in Austria, until it was taken over by the Germans, and also assistant superintendent of the largest window-glass factory in Czechoslovakia, which was owned by his uncle, Dr. Oswald Weihs, the factory of Erste Boehmische Glasindustrie A. G. Bleistadt, Bohemia.

Mr. Monro also states that Mr. Weihs has only recently come to this country and entered the employ of his company, and that if it is desired to question him regarding any matters relating to this report the company will be very glad to have Mr. Weihs come to Washington whenever his presence is desired for that purpose.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 3, 1939.

Mr. W. L. MONRO,

President, American Window Glass Co.,

Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our recent conversation in reference to the Czechoslovakian sheet-glass industry, I beg to give you in the following a general review of that conversation.

this purpose, I will subdivide my report into two sections, dealing—

(a) The situation previous to the annexation of the Sudetenland by Germany; and (b) After this event.

(A) SITUATION PREVIOUS TO THE ANNEXATION OF THE SUDETENLAND BY GERMANY

You recall that the Sudetenland, as well as the remaining part of Czechoslovakia, formed part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire until 1918. It should be noted that all five operating sheet-glass factories in Czechoslovakia, some of which are more than 100 years old, were located within the Sudeten area which was ceded to Germany. Until the end of the World War they supplied mainly the Empire, which counted about 60,000,000 inhabitants. In all these many years there was hardly any serious attempt made to export sheet glass, the world markets being dominated by the Belgians.

Only after the World War, when those factories with their great productive capacity could no longer find sufficient outlets in the reduced area comprising Czechoslovakia, which counted only about reduced area comprising Czechoslovakia, which counted only about 13,000,000 inhabitants, export was started on a large scale. At this period such a proposition seemed also most inviting, owing to the general shortage in merchandise in the whole world shortly after the war. Under such circumstances, prices could not be otherwise but satisfactory, and, besides, the present tariff walls in most countries were just being built up at that time, and the now prevailing self-sufficiency tendency was only at its very beginning.

The Czechoslovakians could count on a further asset, having developed faster than other countries the mechanical glass-manufacturing system, and all these factors together enabled them to to build up within a few years a widespread export organization.

facturing system, and all these factors together enabled them to to build up within a few years a widespread export organization. Already in about 1929 serious set-backs were felt. Various countries started an energetic drive toward self-sufficiency and, in this effort, many factories have been created artificially for domestic consumption and, had it not been for very high duties, these factories could not have continued in operation. Furthermore, the technical development in other sheet-glass producing and exporting countries, and particularly Belgium, was gradually reaching the Czechoslovakian standard, and naturally the shortage of merchandise had disappeared by then.

The logical consequence was an outbreak of a steadily intensi-

The logical consequence was an outbreak of a steadily intensified competition in the various markets, European manufacturers fighting each other and sometimes also the domestic plants. Before long the prices dropped to cost price and even below, while on the other hand the technical progress allowed much greater pro-duction without increase in the number of working units, so that outlets for these additional quantities had to be found. Furthermore, the unemployment problem was becoming serious and the Government would no more allow dismissal of workers. At this stage the Czechoslovakian manufacturers claimed that there existed but one solution, namely, to finance their exports by demanding a compensation in higher prices on the domestic market, which was always closely watched by the Government. The latter had to assent and from then on, since 1930, export was more and more assisted by the higher selling prices in the domestic market.

At this point I wish to call your attention to the fact that over the period from 1930 to 1937, the sheet-glass production averaged roughly 10,000,000 to 14,000,000 square meters per year (about 2,000,000 to 2,800,000 boxes), of which only about 2,500,000 square meters (about 500,000 boxes) could be sold on the domestic market. You will easily realize how much higher prices had to be secured for this comparatively small amount in order to make good for the growing losses on the glass exported.

As a result of all these conditions, the following facts are not surprising. In 1937, for example, a total of about 2,000,000 boxes were sold. The domestic price reached a peak of about 15 to 17 Czech kronen ($2.30-$2.74 a box), while the average net selling price of the export, heavy drawn sheet glass included, had declined to about 5.50 Czech kronen per square meter ($0.38 per box), which is about 1 kronen per square meter (about $0.16 per box) lower than the average cost of production during this period. About 1 year earlier, in 1936, the price had averaged 11 to 13 Czech kronen ($1.68-$2 per box), while cost price has remained practically unchanged for at least 3 years in spite of variations in the value of the Czech kronen.

It might surprise you that the Government continued to assent a constant increase of prices on the domestic market, which, I believe, were at that time among the highest in the world, comprising the countries without domestic production, and allowing, on the other hand, to extend dumping so far that the prices obtained, for instance, in the Philippines, were as low as 1.30 Czech kronen f. o. b. Czechoslovakian border ($0.21 per box).

The main reason for the Government permitting such excesses was by far not so much the fear of additional unemployment, but he adverse trade belonge the shortage of coverage for the domestic the adverse trade balance, the shortage of coverage for the domestic currency, the ever-decreasing foreign appraisal of the Czech krone, and the ensuing difficulties to import even the goods considered as prime necessities, namely, all the purchases of the material for armament purposes.

It should be noted that there are still a few small hand-blowing furnaces within the present boundaries of Czechoslovakia, but none of these have been operated in the manufacture of window glass during the past 15 years.

The window glass sold by the Czechoslovakian manufacturers through their sales corporation for export to the United States for many years prior to the new Czechoslovakian trade agreement was sold at approximately their cost of production.

Naturally the reduction of 30 percent in the duty on window glass, as provided in the Czechoslovakian reciprocal-trade agreement effective April 16, 1938, materially increased the ability of the Czechoslovakian manufacturers to ship window glass into the United States. United States.

However, in 1937 they succeeded in convincing the Government after long sessions, conducted by Mr. Fritz Heller, that all these fixed prices and duty concessions had become insufficient to offset their losses on export and obtained direct subsidy for the entire glass industry, of which about 8,000,000 Czech kronen (about $275,-000) were allotted to the sheet-glass industry in form of refund of taxes. Only by such means was it possible to maintain an adequate volume of export business.

After the Czechoslovakian reciprocal-trade agreement with the United States went into effect the Czechoslovakian window-glass manufacturers, through their sales organization, continued to maintain the contractive collinar price of form 15 to 17 Czech kronen normalization. tain their domestic selling price at from 15 to 17 Czech kronen per square meter ($2.30 to $2.74 per box).

My report on the situation after the annexation of the Sudetenland by Germany (subject b) is set forth on the subsequent pages. I beg to remain, dear sir,

Respectfully yours,

THEODOR G. WEIHS.

(B) AFTER THE ANNEXATION OF THE SUDETENLAND

(B) AFTER THE ANNEXATION OF THE SUDETENLAND

The sheet-glass production in German amounted in 1937, if the figures I heard are correct, to about 19,000,000 square meters (about 3,800,000 boxes), of which only about 3,500,000 square meters (about 700,000 boxes) were exported. The German Government had so far never consented to price excesses, but also, as we all know, the situation of the German Reichsbank is a very precarious one. Only toward the end of 1937 did the German Government start to exercise pressure on the Detag (the leading German Sheet Glass Manufacturers Union) in view of starting operations again at the plant of Torgau, which had been lying idle for over 6 years.

The Detag, together with the Rezag, another German firm, bought up all shares (which, by the way, is also the reason why I am particularly well informed on the subject, having represented personally one of the main shareholders in these negotiations) and set up an agreement with the Government which visualized not only the well-known export premium, granted, I believe, practically to all German exporters, but also a certain adjustment of the domes-tic prices, with the understanding that Torgau, working exclusively so-called supplementary export, could never hope to cover the for so-called supplementary export, could never hope to cover the expenses of operation.

I do not know whether work has already been resumed, especially as in the meantime the Czechoslovakian glass factories have fallen into Germany's lap, which causes him, as the Reichsfuehrer of the German sheet-glass industry, Mr. Otto Seeling, told me personally, much concern because he was well aware how difficult it would become to sell these goods from now on under the German flag; even more difficult than it had already previously been in Czechoslovakia.

No wonder then if ideas like the control of the cont

No wonder then, if ideas like the one I already communicated to you, could be born. I beg to recall to your attention some paragraphs of my letters dated October 21 and November 8, 1938, namely:

'The new authorities are fully aware that export for instance to the United States of America will show a sharp decline, owing to hostility against the purchase of German goods, thus favoring home manufacturers in the respective countries."

hostlity against the purchase of German goods, thus favoring home manufacturers in the respective countries."

"In trying to find a way out of this difficulty the Germans intend, as I was told, setting up such an agreement with the Czech Government concerning sheet glass that the sales office in Prague would be maintained and would go on working in the same way as it did until now. This should lead the customers to believe that they are still receiving Czechoslovakian goods and, furthermore, the trade-mark 'Made in Czechoslovakia' should also be used as formerly.

"I beg to attach to the present letter a cut of the semiofficial bulletin of the German manufacturers' union, Industrie, No. 41, 1938, which was issued a few days ago.

"The article deals with the consequences due to the annexation of the Sudeten area on the German glass trade, especially with bottle and window glass. The following is the translation of a few outstanding paragraphs:

"The capacity of the plants is insufficiently utilized. About 70 percent of the production was exported. About one-third of the export went to United States of America, one-fifth to England, and the rest to France, Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium, etc. The capacity of the plants of the old Reich (Germany before the annexation of Austria and Sudeten) is about three times as large and naturally much better utilized.

"The enormous increase which Germany requires through the Sudeten glass industry places Germany's class through the Sudeten glass industry places Germany class and sudeten glass in facet.

"" * * It thus means that steps must be taken in advance to prevent the loss of business for the Sudeten plants, as neither the Altreich (former Germany) nor Austria could absorb the surplus.

""* * * It can be expected in full confidence that the skilled representatives of the German Government will be able to transform the former contracts of Czechoslovakia with her export countries in such a way that a considerable loss for the Sudeten plants will be avoided * * *."

"Said article, in spite of its rather careful wording, sounds to me as a partial confirmation of the suspicion I outlined in my letter of October 21."

Naturally such set-ups are sentenced in advance, but neverthe-

Naturally such set-ups are sentenced in advance, but nevertheless the fact remains true that sheet-glass exports from former Sudetenland, now Germany, can only be maintained by keeping up an economically unjustifiable, artificial construction; this on behalf of a country which claims not only to have no unemployed but even a shortage in workmen. Hence, with a visible aim of solely counteracting, regardless of sacrifice, an unfavorable trade balance, in which the overcharge is due, as we all know, in a substantial part to the purchases of raw material for war purposes.

I beg to remain, dear sir,

Respectfully ware.

Respectfully yours,

THEODOR G. WEIHS.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting a nomination was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

NOMINATION OF HARRY L. HOPKINS TO BE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins, of New York, to be Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that I am not unduly prolonging the discussion of this particular confirmation. However, I feel that the Senate has a right to know something about the conduct of the Works Progress Administration. It has a right to know because the reason given for Mr. Hopkins' elevation to the office of Secretary of Commerce is his handling of the Works Progress Administration. As far as I am concerned, I do not care when the Senate votes upon his confirmation; but I do want the record to be as complete as possible before the confirmation. I do not want it said that only two or three or four instances have been cited of his misconduct, or the misconduct of an administration of which he had charge. I feel that the people and the Senate have a right to know not only one but all of the charges against the Works Progress Administration.

I realize that if the charges were confined to one State, one might say, "Oh, that just happened in one State"; but I have tried in 3 hours, and I could not conclude in that time, to show some—not all by any means, but some—of the charges against the Works Progress Administration. I want the record complete. I see no reason why the activities and the actions of the Works Progress Administration should not be known and should not be put in the Record in Mr. Hopkins' behalf likewise should be placed in the Record; but I realize that our case cannot be done in a short time. I had hoped to complete my remarks yesterday, and would have completed the entire statement I had to make had not other matters intervened yesterday afternoon.

One of the things brought to my attention yesterday afternoon during my discussion with my friend, the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley], was the number of persons on the Works Progress Administration rolls in November as compared to March. As you know, it was impossible for me to have all those figures at my fingertips; so during the interim I prepared a number of those figures, showing the increase of W. P. A. rolls just before election and the decline in off years. I want to give those figures to the Senate so that the facts may be known. You can draw your own conclusions. If you think these workers were put on as a matter of need, that is your judgment; but I feel that the pay rolls were padded and added to for election purposes, not in one State but in almost every State where there was an important election, and I want to give the facts to prove it.

Let us look at the relief rolls in 1938, preceding the election.

I find that on April 2, 1938, the Works Progress Administration had in its employ 2,445,415 workers, but by November 12 the number had been increased to 3,257,592; or between April and November we find the Works Progress Administration rolls increased by 812,177 persons. If each of those individuals means four votes, you can determine what that means.

But let us compare the figure of November 12, 1938, with the figure of November 27, 1937, not an election year. We find that on November 27, 1937, there were on the pay rolls of the W. P. A. in the United States 1,519,740 employees, whereas in November 1938, in an election year, we find 3,257,592 on the rolls. The pay roll of the W. P. A. was doubled in 12 months' time. We find that it was not merely doubled, but it was even more than doubled. We find that it was increased by 1,737,852 employees in 12 months.

It may be just a coincidence. You may think it is a coincidence, if you so desire, that the pay rolls were increased just at election time. I do not know.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I inquire of the Senator, believing that he wishes to be fair, if it is not true that what has been commonly known as a recession began about August 1937, and business conditions became very bad again for more than a year. I ask the Senator if he believes that the recession had anything to do with the increase in the number of persons upon the W. P. A pay rolls sons upon the W. P. A. pay rolls.

Mr. HOLT. I think the Senator is absolutely correct that the recession or depression—what it is called depends upon which party you belong to; it does not make any difference about that; but, no matter what it is called, a business drop—occurred during the meantime; but, of course, I felt that "We planned it that way." [Laughter.] Nevertheless, I know that the recession did increase the relief rolls; but I also know that politics increased them. I intend to develop that matter a little later on, and I will show the Senator what the condition was, but I appreciate his question.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOLT. Now let us look at the increase.

In November 1936, an election year, we find 2,482,681 individuals on the W. P. A. pay roll. In November 1937 that number had declined to 1,519,740. In November 1938, another election year, back up the number goes to 3,216,400. You may say the difference is because we had unemployment. Let me take the figures of the American Federation of Labor on unemployment.

In November 1936, when we had 2,482,000 persons on the W. P. A. pay rolls, we had 8,286,686 unemployed; but in November 1937—an off year as far as elections were concerned—the W. P. A. pay roll declined to 1,519,740, although the unemployment in November 1937 was greater than it was in November 1936 by nearly 200,000 individuals. There we find unemployment increasing in 1937, and the W. P. A. rolls decreasing.

You may draw your own conclusion about that if you so desire. I have no objection. If you feel that what was done was just, that is all right. Let us check the figures for March. I have given you those for November. You know, we do not have elections in March.

In March 1936 we find 2,800,000 persons on the W. P. A. pay rolls; in March 1937, 2,100,000; and in March 1938, 2,300,000. Compare those figures with the figures for November 1936 and 1938, election years, and the figures for November 1937, and at the very same time that the rolls were going up we find industrial production going up.

This may illustrate a point. I do not think we had a particularly bad depression between October 8 and November 5. We may have had, but I do not recall that business just took a sudden drop. Let me give you these facts:

In 1938, an election year, we find on page 143 of the hearings that between September 10 and October 8 there were added to the W. P. A. pay rolls 34,750 individuals; but between October 8 and November 5—you see, that was right before the election—we find that there were 125,857 added; or nearly four times as many were added during the month of October as were added during the month of September. You may feel that there is no politics about relief; it looks bad to me.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LOGAN. It seems from the Senator's argument that the more W. P. A. workers we have, the fewer votes the Democratic Party gets in the election. Is that true?

Mr. HOLT. I would not say that is entirely true, but I do know that a great many of the men working down in the ditch in the W. P. A. voted against certain Democratic candidates because they objected to the Democratic bosses who did nothing, getting a much higher rate of pay than the men who actually did the work. There was a great deal of dissension among the Works Progress Administration employees, because they felt that the men who did the work ought to get at least part of the money, and that the men who sat behind the desks ought to do a little work. I admit it did have a great deal to do with the result of the election. There was a great deal of dissension in the Works Progress Administration; and not only that, but the same thing influenced the American people. If there was one thing that helped cause the Democratic Party to take the set-back that it took in 1938, it was the conduct of the Works Progress Administration. There is no question in my mind about it.

Now, I want to put some figures in the RECORD, so that the record will be clear.

On September 10, 1938, we find 3,102,062 persons on the W. P. A. pay rolls. On October 8, 1938, we find 3,136,812 on the W. P. A. pay rolls, or an increase of only 34,750; but on November 5 we find on the W. P. A. pay rolls 3,262,669, or an increase of 125,857 for the same length of time.

It may be just a coincidence, but I cannot understand how we find that great increase. A number of primaries were being held in August and September in which certain Members of the Senate were to be purged, or to be defeated, or something was happening in the primaries. It has not been exactly determined what it was, but between June 11 and August 27 we find an increase in the W. P. A. pay rolls of 13 percent, an increase from 2,711,762 to 3,066,895. This also can be found on page 143 of the hearings.

The increase occurred before election. Was it due to unemployment and the recession? Let us look at the Government records to see if it was due to those factors. I am quoting from the Labor Information Bureau of the Department of Labor. I am sure that would not be against the administration. It shows that in July 1938 there were 40,000 individuals returned to their jobs. In August 1938 there were 250,000 returned to their jobs. In September 1938 there were 440,000 returned to their jobs. In October there were 255,000 returned to their jobs. In that period alone this shows between 900,000 and a million workers went back to private work. At the very time when a million people were put back on private pay rolls, an increase from 2,806,931 on the 2d day of July to 3,257,592 on the 17th day of November. While nearly a million individuals were added to the private pay rolls of the United States, we find W. P. A. pay rolls increased to the extent of 400,000.

It seems to me interesting that those things happened. We find a great increase in both those groups, and it is surprising that the depression or the recession—I do not care what it is called, but it meant a lot of unemployment in the land—hit its peak, or its bottom, on November 5. Others may entertain that thought if they care to, but I do not. I think that November 5 was important because it was the Saturday before election, and the W. P. A. was used for the purposes of the election.

If anyone can show me any figures in the Government statistics or in private statistics which would demonstrate that the Works Progress Administration was justified in saying that November 5 was the top or the bottom of the depression, I should like to know where the figures are. They cannot be found. It is well known that the figures went up and down.

LXXXIV-35

Now I wish to call attention to another figure. I do not care to go into a discussion of Kentucky again, but since my friend from Kentucky called attention to these figures and asked me to give them, I looked for the record last night. I found that in April the Works Progress Administration spent $1,884,558 in Kentucky, and in the same month in the State of West Virginia—and we live next door to Kentucky—we had $1,830,957. Listen to this: Kentucky had only $53,601 more for W. P. A. in April than West Virginia had.

Now let us look at the figures for August, on the day of the primaries, in Kentucky, and Senators can make their own determination. We find in Kentucky the W. P. A. spent $3,369,425, and in West Virginia only $2,363,996. We find in the State of Kentucky they spent $1,005,429 more than in West Virginia, whereas in April they spent only $53,000 more. There was not any politics about that, none at all. Gentlemen may believe that if they care to, but I do not.

Let us look further at the figures for Kentucky as compared with West Virginia. My reason for giving these is that the figures were almost the same in April, $1,884,000 against $1,830,000, a difference of only $50,000 in round figures. But between April and August in Kentucky the Works Progress Administration added to its pay roll, in comparative figures, $1,484,867, as compared to an increase in West Virginia of $533,039, or nearly three times as much in the State of Kentucky as in the State of West Virginia.

There was a discussion of the State of Maryland, and I wanted to get the figures as to that State. If any Senators want any more figures, I shall get them for the RECORD.

We find in April in Maryland $619,314 was spent by W. P. A., and in August $785,108. In the State of Maryland we find an increase of $165,784, whereas in the State of Kentucky we find an increase of $1,485,867, or nine times as great an increase in the State of Kentucky as in the State of Maryland. Of course, there was not any politics about that at all, none at all. It just happened that way, just happened that there was a severe depression hitting the State of Kentucky and putting all those people out of work just before election time.

The State of Louisiana was mentioned yesterday, so I wanted to be sure to get the figures as to Louisiana in the Record, and I looked them up. In April in the State of Louisiana there was spent by the W. P. A. $1,383,699, whereas in that State in the month of August $1,880,479 was spent. In the State of Louisiana the increase was only $496,780, while in the State of Kentucky the increase was $1,485,867, or nearly three times as much. If anyone in this Chamber has any figures to dispute this, I should like to have them; I should like to see them.

It will be found the figures show in nearly every instance the W. P. A. rolls went up before the primaries in certain States, then took a lull, then took a jump before the general election. There was a general increase, then a lull, then another increase.

Of course there was not any politics in the W. P. A.! Do not misunderstand me. Harry Hopkins says there was not any politics in the W. P. A. It is strange that Harry Hopkins found between the month of April and the month of August that there was a depression in the State of Kentucky. It was peculiar.

While I am speaking of that, I should like to mention something about the State of Pennsylvania. I like to talk about Pennsylvania, the neighboring State to my State. Now let us look at the figures for the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know what the Senator is about to bring out, but from what he has already presented it is likely that there might be some adverse criticism of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, and I think we ought to have the Senators from Pennsylvania present. I do not believe the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Guffey] is in the Chamber at this time. I only mention that because it would be well if he were here to defend the purity of his State.

Mr. HOLT. I should be glad to yield long enough for a quorum to be called so that he can be brought to the Chamber, if the Senator from Maryland so desires, because I certainly do not care to talk about the State of Pennsylvania unless the State of Pennsylvania has representation here to defend the record.

Mr. TYDINGS. At least the Senators should be notified. I certainly would want to be notified if my State were being attacked. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lewis	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gerry	Lucas	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McCarran	Stewart
Bilbo	Glass	McKellar	Taft
Bone	Green	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Guffey	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Gurney	Mead	Tobey
Bulow	Hale	Miller	Townsend
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Truman
Byrd	Hatch	Murray	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Norris	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Wagner
Chavez	Holman	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reed
Davis	King	Reynolds

Mr. LEWIS. I again announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] is detained from the Senate because of illness and that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown] is detained from the Senate on important public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I shall repeat what I was saying before the roll was called for the purpose of obtaining a quorum. The particular purpose of calling the roll was to get the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Guffey] here, because I am sure he would be interested in anything I have to say about his State, and if he should wish to challenge the truth of anything I have said—and I am sure I am correct in what I have said and will say—he should have the opportunity afforded him to challenge the correctness of my statement. I am glad he has come to the Chamber, and I should be very glad if he would dispute any statements of tact regarding the State of Pennsylvania which he thinks are incorrect.

Going back to the State of Pennsylvania—I see that the Senator from Pennsylvania has left as quickly as he came in. Going into the State of Pennsylvania, I wish to give the Senate certain facts to show the increase in the W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania before the primary was held there. Of course, the primary election in the State of Pennsylvania was the part of the campaign in which there was particular interest. Let us look at what happened during the primary campaign. We find that on the 25th day of December 1937 there were on the pay roll of the W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania 158,982 individuals, whereas on April 30, 1938, or just preceding the primary in the State of Pennsylvania we find that the number had increased to 227,635. They found out about the depression in the State of Pennsylvania, and between December and April, in the primary campaign in the State of Pennsylvania, we find added to the W. P. A. pay rolls in that State 68,000 individuals, or nearly a 40percent increase. They found out, between the 1st of January and the date of the primary that 40 percent more people were unemployed in the State of Pennsylvania, and therefore they needed a 40-percent increase in the Works Progress Administration rolls. Quite peculiar! Of course, I would not want anyone here to think that there was any politics to that. None at all. There was not any politics to it. It just happened that they found out about the State of Pennsylvania having such a great amount of unemployment just preceding the primary of 1938.

Again I wish to say that I want every Senator to draw his own conclusion as to whether there was any politics or not in that situation.

Why is it in these States just before the primaries we find these increases, and after the primaries we find a lull until they need the votes in the general election?

One well-known officeholder said to me personally, "You know it pays to put them on a month before the election. They will not forget it." Of course, there is not any politics about that. They just become needy the month before the election. Of course, I know that those in official life become needy just before the election; but I want to give the figures to show what happened in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New

Vork

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to get into any controversy concerning figures, but I ask the Senator if he does not think that when a public official holding a responsible position makes a statement like that to the Senator that the official's name ought to be disclosed, because he is not fit to hold office if he deliberately used his office for the political purposes which the Senator just mentioned?

Mr. HOLT. No; I do not.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is very unfortunate to repeat such assertions and not name the person who made the assertions.

Mr. HOLT. I can assure the Senator from New York that that statement was made.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not doubt that, of course, if the Senator says it was made to him.

Mr. HOLT. It was made to me personally.

Mr. WAGNER. But does not the Senator think he ought to disclose the name of the individual, then?

Mr. HOLT. It was made personally to me, but I know that the best way for the man either to be promoted or demoted would be for me to give his name. His position would be affected one way or the other if I should give his name, because that would be the immediate result.

Mr. WAGNER. If a public official confessed to the Senator that he was guilty of the offense stated he is not fit to hold public office, and I think the Senator ought to give his name to the Senate so we may know who the individual is.

Mr. HOLT. What would happen if his name were given to the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. What would happen?

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. What should happen is that he-

Mr. HOLT. No; I am asking: What would happen to him if his name were given to the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. He ought to be removed from office. That is what should happen.

Mr. HOLT. I am not speaking of what should happen. I ask: What would happen?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not a clairvoyant, but I can tell the Senator what should happen. Mr. HOLT. I agree with the Senator as to what should happen.

Mr. WAGNER. He should be summarily removed from

Mr. HOLT. That is why I want the Senator from New York and all other Members of the Senate to join me in an investigation of the W. P. A., so the facts can be brought out. I wish to have that investigation. That man can be put under oath and forced to give his statement and tell his story. I think we should have such an investigation. I am sure the Senator from New York will not only find that such a statement will be obtained from that individual, but that many more individuals will make statements just like his.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I voted for the Hatch resolution in the Senate.

Mr. HOLT. I am not criticizing the Senator from New York. I am sure he would join me in the investigation.

Mr. WAGNER. But I would not make a statement on the floor of the Senate that a public official has made a statement to me that he deliberately was guilty of maladministration, and then refuse to disclose his name.

Mr. HOLT. I assure the Senator from New York that if he will go along in an investigation of the W. P. A., not only will that matter be brought out but much more.

Mr. WAGNER. Do it now.

Mr. HOLT. We will do it.

Mr. WAGNER. Do not talk about these things being done at some time in the future, but do it now.

Mr. HOLT. No; I want an investigation of the W. P. A. so the facts can be brought out publicly under oath; so the boys in the W. P. A. cannot squirm out of it. If the W. P. A. is clean, they need not fear an investigation. But it is not clean. That is why they are fighting an investigation of the W. P. A.

I want to say to the Democrats here that if we do not clean up the W. P. A. from such misconduct in office by 1940 we are going to pay with many more seats in the United States Senate, because the American people will not tolerate such corruption and graft as the W. P. A. has shown in this country. I am saying that in behalf of the party, and I say you cannot cover up those things without the American people knowing it. Therefore, some time during the session I intend to reintroduce a resolution to investigate the W. P. A. and let all the facts be brought out. I tell the Senator from New York and every other Senator that I can prove every statement I have ever made. Let us have the facts in the open. Oh, yes, the facts are dangerous to some. Let them fall where they may.

It has been said that Congress is responsible for politics in the W. P. A. If that be the case, let us name the Representatives and Senators who are responsible for the wrongs of the W. P. A. Let us go out into the open with this and give it to the American people. Corruption and graft cannot long be covered up. Men may get away with it for a little while, but the same thing will happen to this political machine that has happened to every political machine when corruption and graft has been found. Corruption and graft cannot be covered up in the State of Pennsylvania. It will be defeated wherever it may be in this country.

Let me tell the Senate about the State of Pennsylvania. I should like to go into a discussion of some other States; I want the case to be perfectly clear about the State of Pennsylvania. I wish to read from the Sheppard report concerning the State of Pennsylvania and what happened there. I also wish to add some things that have taken place in the State of Pennsylvania to which I object.

Let us look at the first thing we find in the Sheppard report. The committee found that the W. P. A. truck operators and owners were assessed $100 apiece. The names of those who made the assessments are known. What has happened to those who made the assessments? Not a thing. Not a thing will happen to them, because they are still working for the W. P. A. Yes, we find truck owners saying, "Here is $100." Let me tell the Senate how they paid it. I can tell Senators how I have been told they paid it. You were to go into a certain room in a certain city in Pennsylvania and walk toward a door, and you would stand there in the door with $100 in your hand, and put it in the hand of a man who would stick his hand out. would not see his face, but he would stick his hand out. He would take the $100 and put it in the campaign fund to elect the ticket in the State of Pennsylvania. Of course if the one assessed was a small worker he would put $1 or $2 or $3 in the man's hand, depending upon what he might have been assessed. The hand went out, and then back in it went with the money that was taken for the W. P. A. and those connected with the W. P. A. Why should they not be brought forward? Why should they not be known?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that not many years ago a Senator who had been elected from Pennsylvania was unseated for practices of that kind.

Mr. HOLT. That is absolutely correct. The time is coming in America when the people will clean house. We can sit here and think it is not coming, but if we do not clean up the situation, and if we do not unseat some of the men who are doing this, the American people will do it at the first opportunity. It is impossible to hide behind such things and get away with it for long.

Let us look at some of the other things in connection with the development of the use of the W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania.

Who is responsible for the conduct of W. P. A.? Mr. Harry Hopkins. He is the Administrator. It is his duty to hire or fire, or to clean up any abuses which may develop. What has he done about the State of Pennsylvania? Has anything happened in the State of Pennsylvania to show that Mr. Hopkins has objected to such actions? I think not. Why? Would not an honest and upright public official have brought forward these charges? Oh, yes; Mr. Hopkins made an investigation of it, according to an account printed in the Washington Star, which I should like to read. This account is from the Washington Star of June 2, 1938. It says:

An honest admission of the disgustingly political quality of Pennsylvania's political relief was suppressed, and an effort to cor-rect the situation was prevented a few days before the Pennsyl-vania primary. Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins was personally determined to make a clean breast of it, but some higher influence prevailed.

If that be the case, let us find out who the higher influence

The account continues:

The charge is ugly. Unfortunately, the facts cannot be washed away or ignored. They will be loudly denied, of course, both at the White House and the W. P. A., but the facts are—

This column went all over the United States. Should we not look into the matter?

Sometime before the Pennsylvania voting, the anti-Guffeyite boss of Philadelphia, John B. Kelly, wired Hopkins protesting against political activity in the W. P. A. The W. P. A. in Pennsylvania was and still is owned by Senator Joe Guffey, but, before they quarreled with their satrap, the anti-Guffeyites had got a foothold in it. Senator Guffer was therefore conducting a purge of the relief army.

We have heard the word "purge." This purge of the relief army started back in June. That reminds me of something else. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Guffey] was going to purge the Senate of a few of us. Senators will remember his speech, wherein he said he was going to purge the Senate. At the present time he is holding on tightly to try to keep from being purged by the people.

The account in the Washington Evening Star continues:

Administrator Hopkins promised that he would investigate. The W. P. A.'s usual solemn flummery of self-inquisition was started. But this time it produced a new result. Either conditions previously unknown to Mr. Hopkins were discovered or Mr. Hopkins simply decided to seize the opportunity to clean house. At any rate, he told more than one close friend that his answer to Kelly would not be a whitewest. would not be a whitewash.

It quotes him exactly.

"We're going to take the lid off," he said, in effect. "We've got to. Things are so bad in Pennsylvania that if we don't act ourselves there will be an explosion sooner or later which will discredit the whole Works Program."

That is Mr. Hopkins, quoted in quotation marks.

When Mr. Hopkins talked with his friends he had already heard Senator Guffer and his henchmen clamoring for a whitewash. Perhaps in the end he merely gave in to Senator Guffer. Perhaps the White House intervened. On May 13, at any rate, he telegraphed Mr. Kelly that the charges of political activity in the Pennsylvania W. P. A. were "for the major part untrue."

That is Mr. Hopkins. I want to read the last two paragraphs:

A slip in his organization made Mr. Hopkins' denial completely ludicrous. With his telegram to Mr. Kelly a press release was issued announcing that "in Luzerne County seven W. P. A. employees were summarily dismissed" for political activities.

Let me tell the Senate where Luzerne County is. It is the county in which Dr. Mundy lives, and with him I understand are 147 relatives on the pay roll. There is quite a little evidence about Luzerne County which I intend to discuss.

The release was hardly in the hands of the reporters before the W. P. A. press agents were on the telephone anxiously explaining that there had been a mistake, that the Luzerne County dismissals were not political. As it happened, Luzerne County was precisely the place where Joe Guffey's purge of anti-Guffeyites was most Indeed, the whole business would be comic if it were not deathly erious. The W. P. A.'s solemn self-investigation and solemn selfserious. exculpation are a ritual regularly gone through in campaign years. Everyone knows that the self-investigation is a farce, that the self-exculpation is untruthful.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the Senator obtain any information from Luzerne County on the contest between one of the W. P. A. politician administrators and the truant officer? Work relief cards were being given to the boys in the grade schools and in the high schools. The boys were kept around, and they would have to play hookey from school. The truant officer would then go and find them and bring them back. There was a constant fight as to whether these young people were going to work for the political boss, or whether the truant officer was going to get them and put them back in

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Pennsylvania does not mean that such a thing could happen in the W. P. A., does he?

Mr. DAVIS. That happened in the W. P. A. in Luzerne County.

Mr. HOLT. I would not want anyone to think that there was any politics in connection with that matter. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he knows whether or not anybody was fired on account of it.

Mr. DAVIS. There were some 20,000 of them fired in Pennsylvania the morning after the election. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. HOLT. Was any firing done before the election?

Mr. DAVIS. I used to call Mr. Hopkins' attention to it, and Aubrey Williams said that my statements were untrue. Mr. HOLT. He said there was not a scintilla of truth in

Mr. HOLT. Of course, I would not want anyone within the hearing of my voice to think that these boys working on the W. P. A., out of school, would have parents who could vote. Did they have parents who could vote?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; they had parents; and it was for the purpose of influencing the parents that the jobs were given to the minors. I do not mean coal miners either. I mean m-i-n-o-r-s.

Mr. HOLT. That circumstance absolutely proves that there was not any politics involved.

Mr. DAVIS. Did anyone tell the Senator about persons walking around with work cards in their pockets and selling them at auction in the saloons for $4 apiece?

Mr. HOLT. No; I should like to hear more about it.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will hear more about it later. Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. I would not disturb any form of proper appreciation of the oratory of any speaker, particularly the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. However, I must call the attention of the Chair to the attitude of the occupants of the galleries, which causes a disturbance which is inconsistent with the dignity of this body. It violates the rules. It is unbecoming. This exhibition is not, sir, a moving picture, with the comedy which is usually associated with it.

Therefore, I must request the Chair to inform the occupants of the galleries that under our rules these exhibitions of amusement, and the noises following them, which disturb the hearing of Senators, ought not to be allowed. Such demonstrations are not permitted by the rules. I ask that the occupants of the galleries be admonished, in order that they may not again violate the rules or continue to do so throughout the day, as was the experience on yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries to conform to the rules, as suggested by the Senator from Ulinois

Mr. HOLT. I am afraid that when all the facts with respect to Pennsylvania are brought out, it will be very difficult not only for the occupants of the galleries but for Senators to keep quiet. The facts in the State of Pennsylvania are not entirely a laughing matter, but a very serious matter for the people of the United States. They are serious because they affect the moral conduct of government itself.

Let me say again that the W. P. A. was under the direction and administration of the man whose nomination we are now considering. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether or not the Works Progress Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, investigated the question of the boys on relief.

Mr. DAVIS. Not that I know of.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to make absolutely clear the story about the boys on the W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania. I do not wish anyone to think that there was any politics in the administration of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. Far be it from me to do that. Mr. Hopkins said that he did not believe in politics in the W. P. A.

We learn about the conditions in Luzerne County from the Sheppard committee report. It says:

The committee heard from its investigators testimony with respect to the activities of officials and employees of the W. P. A. in Luzerne County, Pa. Investigators reported that 18 relief workers on a W. P. A. project near Wilkes-Barre were ordered transferred from this project, which was near their homes, to a project located some 35 or 40 miles from their homes. The investigators stated that the reason for this transfer action was that these workers were wearing Republican buttons at work and had registered Republican.

That is a crime for which they were moved 35 or 40 miles away.

The State assistant district attorney for Luzerne County took up the complaints of these workers with the W. P. A. authorities, after they had been transferred, and was told by the W. P. A. director for Luzerne County that they had been retransferred to a project near their homes. The W. P. A. director for Luzerne County advised the committee's investigators that in his opinion, after his investigation, the complaint was true, and for that reason he had ordered the retransfer of the men to a project near their homes. The investigators reported further that they were informed by the W. P. A. director for Luzerne County that the W. P. A. foreman responsible in this case was transferred to another project.

Was not that a terrible punishment to him? He was transferred to another project, where he was still on the W. P. A. pay roll.

The report continues with respect to the conditions in Luzerne County—

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator know why all that work was going on in the W. P. A. in Luzerne County?

Mr. HOLT. No; I should like to hear about it.

Mr. DAVIS. It was because the Republican candidate for Governor came from that county, and it was desired to carry that county for the Democrats. However, that effort was met with failure.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania mean to say that there were any political manipulations in all these things happening in Luzerne County? The Senator would not charge the W. P. A. with such activities, would he? Let us go ahead with Luzerne County. The report continues:

The investigators of the committee reported further that in Luzerne County large numbers of W. P. A. workers were mailed postal cards requesting them to call at Democratic headquarters on particular dates at different hours.

The investigators reported that there was some evidence that lists had been prepared of relief workers at the W. P. A. head-quarters in their county, and it is believed that these lists were used in mailing out the postal cards. Further evidence from the investigators showed that when these relief workers called at the Democratic headquarters they were solicited for campaign contributions, in some cases the amount requested being $100. The investigators further stated that they had affidavits that at these visits by relief workers contributions were actually made. The investigators of the committee further reported that the Democratic leader who was interviewing these relief workers and to whose office they were sent, was employed by the Unemployment Compensation Service, which aids in administering the social-security law and whose salary is paid, in part at least, from funds coming from the Federal Treasury, and was on leave from his official position, working for the Democratic Party.

I should like to tell the Senate the story they told about calling the workers into Democratic headquarters. Perhaps the Senators know the story they told. They said they wanted the W. P. A. workers to become interested in their projects. The reason they called them into the Democratic headquarters, according to their own statement, according to the W. P. A. boss, was that W. P. A. workers were not doing good work and he wanted to call them in. May I quote him exactly? Here are his exact words as to why he called them into Democratic headquarters. This is a good one. He says he—Wanted to get them interested in the welfare of the Democratic Party.

He meant they had reports the men were loafing on the job from people passing a project, and that reflected on the Democratic Party, and they tried to get the workers interested so as to stop such criticism. They were interested in stopping loafing on the job because it hurt the Democratic Party.

That is why they called them into Democratic headquarters. Senators can believe that if they want to, but I do not believe it. Then he says he did not mean any individual, but groups, and that those cards had nothing to do with solicitation of campaign funds. They just called the workers in to discuss with them the question of loafing on the job. I thought the foreman was to look after loafing on the job, and that workers were not called in for any other purpose.

Let us look into that a little further. The bosses on the Luzerne County pay roll became very active a month before the election. Why? Because it was to their interest to carry Luzerne County in the election.

I do not want to discuss conditions in Luzerne County much more, because I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but I do want the record to be complete. I want the record to be known so that no Senator can sit back and say, "I did not know that happened. I would not have voted for the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins if I had known that happened in the W. P. A." Who was responsible for the conditions in Luzerne County? The district director. Who appointed the district director? The State director. Who appointed the State director? Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins had only to tell the district director to stop it and it would have been stopped. He could have fired him if he so desired, but was he fired? Does the Senator from Pennsylvania know whether the district director in that district has been fired since the election?

Mr. DAVIS. Not to my knowledge. The State director is still administering W. P. A. funds in Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLT. If he was not fired, was he promoted?

Mr. DAVIS. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. HOLT. Very well. Let us go into Northampton County, Pa., for just a moment:

Investigators also reported that in Northampton County they had obtained evidence that in three cases either the forelady or the supervisor of a women's sewing project under the W. P. A. had handled the sale of tickets for three different political gatherings, the tickets being in two instances $1 apiece and in another instance $1.50.

I want to understand the Pennsylvania situation clearly, and I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania was that a Republican gathering to which they sold tickets in the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. DAVIS. It was a Democratic gathering.

Mr. HOLT. At any rate, the tickets were sold.

The evidence further showed that large numbers of these women on this sewing project purchased tickets. The supervisor of the W. P. A. admitted to the committee that at least 30 tickets were sold for one of these political gatherings, that 125 were sold at another, and that 123 were sold to or at a third political gathering. The investigators also reported that the ticket selling by foremen and forewomen on W. P. A. projects was general in that county. The committee was informed that a newspaper reporter from the Washington Evening Star had secured affidavits confirming the report of the committee's investigators with respect to certain of these findings.

Of course, I would not want anybody to think there was any politics connected with selling to women on sewing projects tickets for a political gathering at a dollar and a dollar and a half apiece. Here were women with families working on a sewing project to earn enough to feed their families, and then the W. P. A. foremen, who were direct political agencies, coming to them and making them buy tickets for political gatherings in the State. Oh, no, there was no politics about it; none at all!

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does not the Senator think they are entitled to some credit for not charging a hundred dollars a ticket, according to the orthodox Democratic formula? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. The difference was in the menu, I think. [Laughter.] In other words, at the $100 dinner there was a better menu than at the $1 dinner. In this connection it will be recalled that when they sold tickets in Pennsylvania to the Hershey ox roast one of the men who bought a ticket said he went there but could not find any ox. [Laughter.] Maybe the money was to pay for the ox. Whose ox is being gored? Perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania knows about the menu; I am not entirely familiar with it.

Proceeding further with the committee report, I again emphasize that Mr. Hopkins was the Administrator, and was responsible for the administration of this condition. What has he done? Has a single person been "fired" in response to this investigation? None to my knowledge.

Now, let me go ahead and read further from the evidence:

There was evidence presented to the committee that a Democratic rally was held at Hershey, Pa., on or about August 27, for which tickets were sold at $1 each; that a Mr. Halloran, a director for the fifth W. P. A. district of Pennsylvania, turned over to Chas. H. Spangler, chief pay-roll examiner of this district, 5,000 of these tickets; that Mr. Spangler distributed for sale approximately 4,500 of the 5,000 tickets to administrative workers, supervisory persons in the field, and to W. P. A. relief workers.

How much do you suppose, Mr. President, they took in at that Hershey ox roast? An affidavit shows that they took in $105,000 at the Hershey ox roast. That was some ox, let me say. [Laughter.] That is what happened in W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania. What have we heard about it? The W. P. A. has been silent; Mr. Hopkins has been silent. It is said that Mr. Hopkins did not know anything about it. Well, if Mr. Hopkins, as Administrator, did not know anything about these conditions, someone had better wake him up before he is named Secretary of Commerce, for, otherwise, sometime somebody may take the Commerce Building away and he will not even know about it. [Laughter.] Senators can believe that he did not know anything about it if they want to, but I do not believe it.

Now, let us look a little bit further into conditions in the State of Pennsylvania.

The committee's investigation in Pennsylvania showed that in some instances pressure was brought to bear on W. P. A. employees and workers by individuals outside the W. P. A. For instance, under date of October 24, 1938, Mr. Joseph F. McElwee, chairman of the Democratic committee in Montgomery County, Norristown, Pa., mailed a letter addressed to "Fellow Democrats," which stated that at the direction of Senator Joseph F. Guffer and Mr. David L. Lawrence a joint meeting of all State, Federal, and W. P. A. workers would be held in Norristown on a certain date at a specified time. The letter went on to say: "There will be no excuse accepted for lack of attendance."

I hope Senators appreciate the meaning of that suggestion. Word was sent out that a Senator of this body was going to speak to the W. P. A. employees, so they got notice, and in that notice there was this statement:

There will be no excuse accepted for lack of attendance.

What was meant by that? In other words, "We will check up on who is there, and if you are not there, you will get a 403." They did not say that, but that is what they meant. I quote further from the report:

A representative of the committee attended the meeting mentioned in Mr. McElwee's letter and reported that about 2,500 persons were present. It could not be determined how many of these persons were State, Federal and W. P. A. workers. The meeting was conducted as an ordinary political rally and no request for contributions was made.

Here is a meeting called concerning which it is said, "There will be no excuse for lack of attendance." If any Senators desire to check that letter, they can turn to page 245 of part II of the report and find the actual letter there with its complete wording.

Now, I should like to return to Luzerne County for a moment because the report does go back to that county.

In further reference to Luzerne County, the committee found that not only truck owners and truck drivers, but timekeepers, foremen, and other workers and employees were, in numerous instances, solicited for contributions and for the purchase of political tickets; and that such solicitations were not confined alone to persons at Democratic headquarters, but were made by W. P. A. employees and State highway department employees occupying supervisory and administrative positions with those Federal and State agencies, and that a number of contributions were made as result of these solicitations.

The report also goes ahead to show that not only were contributions made, but demands were made upon the men to change their registration from Democrat to Republican.

One of the letters that was sent out—a postal card with a letter—was addressed to a truck operator. With that was enclosed a 1-cent postal card addressed to the Democratic headquarters, corner Main and Clinton Streets, Johnstown, Pa., and here is what it says:

Dear Mr. Di Francesco-

This was the card he was supposed to send back—

Answering your letter of recent date, relative to the mobilization of automobile for election day.

I do not own an automobile.

There was a place to mark.

I own an automobile which will be available for your use on election day, November 8, in election district ———,

The recipients of the letters were supposed to send that card back to this man. It was sent to W. P. A. truck owners. They wanted to use the truck or the car at election time.

Here is another letter that was sent to different truck owners. Here is what it says:

Please arrange to attend a meeting of W. P. A. truck owners Friday evening, November 4, at 8 p. m.

When was the election? November 8, I believe.

Please arrange to attend a meeting of W. P. A. truck owners Friday evening, November 4, at 8 p. m. at Turner's Hotel, Jackson and Railroad Street, Johnstown, Pa. Subject will be—

This is what the subject was going to be at that meeting, 4 days before the election—new registration for 1939 and "P. U. C." and hauling men.

Signed by Charles A. McCloskey.

This is the letter that the man received when he was asked about automobiles:

automobiles may be operated on election day.

If we are mistaken in our information that you own an automobile, then you will so indicate on the enclosed card. If, however, you do own an automobile which you wish to volunteer for use on election day, please so indicate on the same card and also where the automobile will be operated.

It is necessary to have this information at headquarters at the earliest possible convenience, and we therefore trust and hope that you will give us your cooperation in this matter.

Very truly yours.

Very truly yours,

SAMUEL R. DI FRANCESCO, Campaign Manager, Cambria County.

Of course there was not any politics to that! They just wanted to know who were running W. P. A. trucks, and who were operating W. P. A. trucks, and to tell them, "Here is a card. We shall expect you to go out and work for the Democratic ticket on election day."

Of course one could go ahead and show many, many instances of politics in W. P. A.; I should like to have Mr. Hopkins answer a question about this matter I shall discuss. The Sheppard committee refers to it. This is not an individual case. It shows manipulation of public funds which Mr. Hopkins certainly should know about. If he sat there not knowing about it, he is unfit to be a member of the President's Cabinet. If he sat there and did know about it and did not do anything, then, my friends, he is worse than unfit to be a member of the President's Cabinet.

This is what the Sheppard report says on page 28:

The investigation further disclosed that the State highway department in Pennsylvania was generally active politically and that on State-road projects partly financed through W. P. A. funds there was a great amount of political activity. Evidence was obtained to show that the State highway department had been receiving undue financial advantages as against the Federal Government in the matter of its contributions to road projects regardless of whether such advantages had served political purposes. This evidence was to the effect that the sponsor's contribution was supposed to be 20 percent of the cost of the road projects but that generally nothing like 20 percent was shown. The committee's investigators obtained evidence to show that sponsors have borne and paid 7.4 percent of the cost of road projects and that W. P. A. has borne and paid 92.6 percent of the cost of these projects. The investigation further disclosed that the State highway de-

It is not peculiar that in the year of the election it was found out that the State could not pay the 20 percent which the sponsors assured the Federal Government of paying and cut down their percentage to 7.4 percent? I have not checked this up. I am taking the word of the Sheppard committee on the subject. It is impossible for me to check the figures, because they are not available, but the report goes ahead to show what the condition was.

Whose money was that? That was not the money of the State of Pennsylvania. It was money appropriated by the Congress of the United States to feed hungry people; and this is what the report says:

The evidence shows that the State highway department, the largest single sponsor, has borne and paid 6.4 percent and the W. P. A. has borne and paid 93.6 percent of the road-project cost, but that due to failure of the State highway department to report substantial expenditures made during 1935, 1936, and 1937 this percentage is lower. The total amount expended on roads by the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, in accordance with evidence placed before the committee, from the beginning of the road program to and including September 30, 1938, was $259.568.804, and that the before the committee, from the beginning of the road program to and including September 30, 1938, was $259,568,804, and that the amount expended by W. P. A. on road projects sponsored by the State highway department was $201,220,946. Evidence before the committee was further to the effect that the total net encumbrances of W. P. A. in Pennsylvania from its beginning, July 1, 1935, to September 30, 1938, was $536,561,871. The total number of W. P. A. workers employed on all road projects in Pennsylvania so f November 4, 1938, was 168,487, and the total number of W. P. A. workers as of November 4, 1938, on road projects sponsored by the Pennsylvania State Highway Department was 141,746. The total number of persons enrolled in Pennsylvania on W. P. A. so of November 4, 1938, was 278,324 relief, 11,100 nonrelief, or a as of November 4, 1938, was 278,324 relief, 11,100 nonrelief, or a total of 289,424

Were the funds manipulated and juggled in order that that particular thing might occur?

We find many such things, not only in Pennsylvania but throughout the United States. We find them because we have sat idly by and tolerated them.

Now let me read from the record what the committee says about some of the occurrences in Pennsylvania, and some say Mr. Hopkins knew nothing about them. Mr. Hopkins knew nothing about the W. P. A. You may sit and vote as you please. It is your privilege to vote as you please; but if you vote for confirmation in this case you are voting to confirm a man who was responsible for this conduct of the W. P. A. You are voting to reward a man who was administrator of the W. P. A. during all these occurrences and did nothing about them.

Now let us see what the committee said happened in Pennsylvania. I am quoting from the committee:

It is the opinion of your investigator that the sending out of the above letter, naming, as it does, Federal and W. P. A. workers, constitutes a flagrant violation of ethics, but for which there is apparently no recourse in law.

This referred to a letter I read a few minutes ago.

Just a violation of ethics. The Hatch amendment would have gone after those who did it; but, of course, that amendment did not include the State officials, and we were told that when you are fighting State officials you have to get an even chance to use the money.

The report goes ahead and says:

It is further reprehensible for the letter to state that no excuse for lack of attendance would be accepted.

Now let us look for a minute or so-and it will be only that-at Carbon County, Pa.

The reason why I am giving all these facts is that I want the Senate to know that it is not a case of just one incident. These instances occured throughout the country; and I want many incidents given, in the time I shall talk, these to be known by the Senate and known by the country. It cannot be said, "Oh, that just happened in a place or so." With all of these Mr. Hopkins must have known something about at least one.

The investigation of the Sheppard committee shows in Pennsylvania:

First. That W. P. A. truck owners in Carbon County, Pa .-

That is another county in Pennsylvania were instructed on September 2, 1938, by Warren Morthimer, W. P. A. foreman for said county, to attend meeting at 311 South Street, East Mauch Chunk, Carbon County, Pa., between the hours of 5 p. m. and 7 p. m.

2. That W. P. A. truck owners were contacted at 311 South Street, East Mauch Chunk, Pa., by one William J. McGinley, garage inspector, State highway department, State of Pennsylvania.

3. That William J. McGinley asked and requested each W. P. A. truck owner to contribute $100 to the Democratic election cam-

4. That three W. P. A. truck owners refused to make the contribution of $100 as requested and on September 14, 1938, were separated from W. P. A.

Think of that! They refused to give $100 each to the campaign fund and were fired on September 14, 2 months before the election. There would not be any politics in that. Do not misunderstand me at all. Mr. Hopkins says there is no politics in the use of W. P. A. money; but let me go ahead.

- 5. That five (5) W. P. A. truck owners had contributed to the Democratic election campaign.
- I wonder if they are still on the W. P. A. pay roll. I presume they are.
- 6. That Warren Morthimer, W. P. A. foreman, Carbon County, Pa., and William J. McGinley, garage inspector, State highway department, State of Pennsylvania, each emphatically denied that they at any time contacted any W. P. A. truck owner or requested them to make a campaign contribution.

That reminds me of another denial.

7. That although Warren Morthimer and William J. McGinley emphatically denied their participation in any solicitation of campaign contributions from W. P. A. truck owners, the preponderance of evidence discloses that they did, in fact, participate.

It not only shows that, but it shows that all these things were known to the W. P. A., and that nothing was done about them.

The Senator from Pennsylvania called attention to a number of things about Pennsylvania in letters to Mr. Hopkins. He directed the letters to Mr. Hopkins personally. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if that is not correct.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, that is correct, and I have on my desk here now copies of the letters I directed to Mr.

Mr. HOLT. In other words, Mr. Hopkins was apprised of these violations in Pennsylvania. Did he do anything about it?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that he was notified of all of them, but he was notified of some of them.

Mr. HOLT. Did he do anything about those of which he was notified?

Mr. DAVIS. No. Mr. HOLT. This is what the Sheppard committee found about the charges brought by the Senator from Pennsyl-

In general, the complaints submitted to the committee by and through Senator Davis are, in their main essentials, clearly substantiated.

That Federal funds have been used in the State of Pennsylvania directly and indirectly for political purposes.

That W. P. A. workers and employees of the various classes have been maced for political contributions, for the purchase of tickets to political rallies, picnics, and the like, not only by numerous political leaders and political henchmen but by officials and employees of the State highway department, the employees and employees of the State highway department, the employees and officials of other lesser political subdivisions of the State—and by officials and employees of the Works Progress Administration.

Not one of them has been discharged, to my knowledge, and the Senator from Pennsylvania tells me he does not know of any of them who have been discharged. was in charge of this program? Mr. Hopkins was.

Let us go ahead with the fourth complaint, which is very important.

That such macing was accomplished and done with full knowledge on the part of high Works Progress Administration officials in the State, and under such circumstances and conditions as to lead inevitably to the conclusion that the Administration's officials in the national offices have been and were aware thereof.

Think of that. It was found that not only was it known by the high officials of Pennsylvania but that the officials "in the national offices have been and were aware thereof." Mr. Hopkins was in the national office. What has he done about it? Not one thing. Yet they are kicking him upstairs to get him out of the line of fire of the W. P. A. investigation. Of course, they would like to have him confirmed without any statement. That is the reason why they promoted him. It was thought that would keep down any talk about the W. P. A. But the people are finding out the facts.

Let us see what else the committee found, not what Rush HOLT found, but what the Sheppard committee found:

That the business and affairs of the Works Progress Administration in the State of Pennsylvania have been, were, and are so affected by politics and political motives that, in numerous instances, needy persons entitled to relief and relief work have been deprived thereof for the sole reason that their political beliefs and convictions failed to agree with those in charge of administering the funds made available by Congress for relief and relief work.

Think of it! Needy people were deprived of food because they would not vote as they were told to vote. No; no politics in the W. P. A.; none at all. I would not even imply that.

Now, let us go to the sixth thing they found:

That W. P. A. workers and employees throughout the State of Pennsylvania have been threatened, intimidated, and coerced to change their voting registrations as the result of undue persuasion and pressure upon them not only by officials and employees of the State highway department and other lesser political subdivisions of the State, and by political leaders therein, but by officials and supervisory employees of the Works Progress Administration as well.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. That applies not only to Carbon County but to practically every county in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLT. It applies not only there but it applies throughout the whole United States. Mr. Hopkins certainly must have been blind if he did not know about it. He can take either horn of the dilemma-either plead ignorance or admit malfeasance. I do not care which course he takeshe can take his choice—but he was either sitting back, unfit to handle these cases through ignorance of the facts, or he sat back unfit and not doing anything about it even though he knew about it. He can take his choice.

Let us see now what the seventh charge of the Sheppard committee was:

That numerous W. P. A. workers and employees and others, who were entitled to be and should have been free of coercion and intimidation, have been and were induced and coerced to make political contributions by and through certain letters circulated over what purports to have been the signature of United States Senator Joseph F. Guffer, who, during the campaign ended November 8 last, served as State campaign manager for one of the two principal political tickets in the State and National contest.

Here is another charge by the Sheppard committee, in the report of that committee:

That in numerous instances high officials of the Works Progress Administration and employees of other agencies the expenses of which are, in part at least, paid with Federal funds, the officials and employees of the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, and the officials and employees of lesser political subdivisions of the State stepped aside from their official duties and devoted their time to an active furtherance of political matters and interests, without the formality of regionizes at their part of the state of t the formality of resigning or taking any proper leave of their official positions and duties.

Here they were, working for politics in W. P. A. time; not resigning. Oh, no; do not think there was any politics about it. Mr. Hopkins is such a saintly man that he would not tolerate that; I am sure he would not.

Let us go ahead with other charges about the State of Pennsylvania:

That workers and employees of the Works Progress Administra-tion, of other Federal agencies, of the State highway department, and of other lesser political subdivisions of the State were imposed upon, intimidated, and coerced in the matter of attending political meetings and functions by and through representations by political leaders; that such attendance by them had been directed by Senator JOSEPH F. GUFFEY and other persons occupying official positions.

No, no politics at all; none at all. Here is another charge: That the business and affairs of that administration are affected by politics, is so strongly supported by facts other than those recited by him that further and comprehensive investigation thereof is clearly indicated.

That the facts disclosed clearly indicate that, through connivance, if not through actual fraud, the State highway department has been and is receiving undue financial advantages as against the Federal Government in the matter of its contributions to the costs of road projects, regardless of whether such advantages have served or do serve political ends and purposes.

Those are the things which happened. The Sheppard committee found them out. The people of the State of Pennsylvania found them out. Oh, no, Mr. Hopkins did not know. He can say he did not know about it. But let me read a press dispatch which came in. When these complaints were being filed with him from Kelly about the Government machine in Pennsylvania, this is what Mr. Hopkins said, as quoted from an article in the press on April 29:

In response to questions Hopkins said he would not say anything about the merits of charges by one politician against another, but added this-

This is what Harry Hopkins said:

I don't intend to let these babies operate on me.

This is Mr. Hopkins speaking:

I don't intend to let these babies operate on me-

Referring to politicians of the State of Pennsylvania.

Yet today these things are found out, and Mr. Hopkins, like the three monkeys, heard nothing, saw nothing, and said nothing.

I have called attention to what happened in the State of Pennsylvania. I now read a quotation from the Saturday Evening Post, not a recent issue, but one which came out in plenty of time for Mr. Hopkins to know about it:

At present the Pennsylvania W. P. A. has only 6,000 nonrelief workers and few more than 2,000 administrative employees, as already stated. But in the all-important year 1936 its nonrelief workers were many more than 10,000 and its administrative employees numbered about 3,000. None of these jobs have required advance certification of need. In the Jones W. P. A. they have required another kind of certification-clearance from the Guffey organization.

They asked the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] about it, and this is what he said:

I just put in Eddie Jones and left the rest to him.

No, no politics about the W. P. A.! This was printed a long time ago. We can show these things being brought out in the State of Pennsylvania a long time ago. But why continue telling about the State of Pennsylvania? We all know those things, and to my own personal knowledge Mr. Hopkins was apprised of this political situation, and instead of discharging the people who participated in it, he promoted them to better jobs. He promoted them instead of demoting them for doing these things.

Here is a letter. I quote the actual letter, which I have in my possession.

I hand you herewith a list of doctors in Ohio County. Separate the Democrats from the Republicans and list them in order of priority, so that we may notify our safety foreman and the com-pensation men as to who is eligible to participate in case of injury.

Separate Democratic and Republican doctors to treat injured W. P. A. employees. There is no politics to it; none whatsoever. Do not misunderstand me about that.

Here is another letter, and I have this one in my possession. This is what it says:

The time to correct mistakes is before they are made, if possible. Consequently, we do not want anyone on this job who is not right. These hundreds of applications going on should be taken to the designated leaders in each county, and sort them. Then the local leaders cannot blame the personnel office if the right boys are not on.

Those are letters which have been written. All of us know those things are happening.

Here is another one from another State:

DEAR COMMITTEEMAN: Contact all houses in your division and get the names of all men on relief; also of those holding W. P Urge them to register Democratic on March 26 or else lose their

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES MCDONALD.

No politics in that? No politics at all?

I call attention to another little incident showing the way they play politics. I am going to take you a moment to my State.

There is in the employ of the W. P. A. in my State a man named Raymond Lewis. Raymond Lewis is a brother of John L. Lewis, the director of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the C. I. O. Neither Raymond Lewis nor John L. Lewis is a resident of the State of West Virginia, never lived in the State of West Virginia; but when the W. P. A. was started in the State of West Virginia Mr. Raymond Lewis was brought in from another State and put on the W. P. A. pay roll.

While they were telling the relief workers there was no money to buy food with which to feed them Mr. Raymond Lewis has had his salary increased by $1,200. I wonder if there is any politics to that! I wonder if Mr. Raymond Lewis, the brother of John L. Lewis, has become so particularly important as to have his salary raised in the State of West Virginia on the W. P. A., when they are telling the relief worker, the poor, unfortunate fellow in the ditch, or the woman in the sewing room, that there is not enough money for them.

With respect to my own State I will say that I have checked with my records and have found that since the work started, in the administrative staff of the W. P. A. alone there have been salary increases amounting to $78,000 a year. Yet there is not enough money to feed the fellow down in the ditch. They have enough money to raise the salaries of the bosses, and all that was done down here in Washington and down through the State offices, yet Mr. Hopkins knows nothing, sees nothing, says nothing.

In the time during which I have spoken I have tried to show the political situation in the W. P. A. I have not gone into the State of Tennessee. If I did, I would talk until day after tomorrow. But I have shown the Senate the situation in Kentucky. I have shown the Senate the situation in Pennsylvania. I have shown the Senate a little concerning the situation in West Virginia. I could bring to the attention of the Senate many instances all over the United States. I could show the Senate that Mr. Hopkins was out drumming up votes in the campaign.

We now have the issue before us. There is only one thing to determine Mr. Hopkins' qualifications to be Secretary of Commerce, and that is: What kind of a job did he do as Administrator of the W. P. A. in Washington? If he did a good job or a bad job, let us look at it. He was the Administrator when all these things were happening. He not only tolerated what was going on, but helped it. And with all his power he promoted these things that have been going on in the W. P. A. Yet, in order to avoid an investigation of the situation he was kicked upstairs into the Department of Commerce.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Hopkins is confined to the Works Progress Administration.

When I began speaking yesterday I set forth Jefferson's three qualifications of a candidate for office. First, is he honest? Second, is he capable? Third, is he faithful to the Constitution.

I shall reverse the order and take up the third one. I ask Senators to read Mr. Hopkins' speech made during the battle over the Supreme Court of the United States, and see what is Mr. Hopkins' belief with respect to the Constitution. He was one of the leaders in the purge movement.

Is he honest or is he capable? His record will determine that. If he occupied the position of head of the W. P. A. and tolerated the things that were going on, as they have been described to the Senate, knowing that they were going on, he is not fit to be a member of the President's Cabinet; and if he occupied that position and did not know that those things happened he is too ignorant to sit in the President's Cabinet. One of those two things is true. He either knew or did not know what was happening. He cannot excuse himself for not knowing what was happening, because all the people of the United States knew. If he did know what was happening, and played with the politicians of the country, he should indeed be censured.

As I have said many times, I know he will be confirmed. but I wanted to put in the RECORD the history and story of the man and of his administration, because there is no better way to judge him than by his conduct in official life. I have tried to do that in the time I have spoken before the Senate. I have given the Senate his history. I do not believe he is qualified to be Secretary of Commerce, and shall vote against his confirmation.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, even in my limited experience in Congress I have many times found it difficult to determine-

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may ask for a quorum call?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to assure my colleagues who have been called into the Chamber by the quorum call that the call was through the courtesy of one of my colleagues and through no desire of mine to force Senators to listen to what I have to say. I shall not take it unkindly if Senators care to leave the Chamber.

I shall speak very briefly, Mr. President, but, I hope, very expressively of what is in my mind and what is in my heart.

Even in my limited experience in the Congress I have very, very many times found it difficult to determine my legislative course or my action and vote on legislative matters, because I have found that my personal interest, my personal predilections, and especially my personal resentments, sometimes did not comport with, or were in fact at variance with, what I conceived to be my public duty. This is one of those occasions. I have some personal resentments in the matter which is before the Senate for consideration, and they are very deep ones. However, I shall vote for the confirmation of Harry L. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce, or vote "yea" on the motion to advise and consent to the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins, who has been named by our President to the position of Secretary of Commerce.

I feel that I owe it to my colleagues and myself, and I know I owe it to the people of Iowa, to explain the reasons for this action. I think I am justified in referring to some particularly personal matters in this connection. Last summer, shortly before the June primary in my State, I found my name at the head of a list of proscribed Senators, not because I deserved to be at the head of the list by reason of any qualities which I possessed but merely because the State of Iowa primary was the first one to be held for the list of Senators thus proscribed.

That list of proscriptions was prepared by a group of men whom I then designated, and whom I now designate, as a band of political termites, who emulate or follow the habits of that insect by boring from within into the foundational timbers for their own interest, in a subterranean and secret way, instead of coming out in the open, without any regard for what the destruction of those foundational timbers might mean to the party edifice or the governmental edifice which is erected upon those basic principles.

At the same time some of these men—most of them I will say—were men comparatively new to the Democratic Party, men who attempted to define democracy and democratic principles, and to eliminate from the party many Senators who had been fighting for democratic principles long before these men could lisp the A B C's of the alphabet.

Mr. Hopkins made a statement with regard to the Iowa primary. I credit him with very frankly admitting in the hearings that he made the statement. However, when Mr. Hopkins admitted making the statement he said, "That statement is the beginning and the end of my interference in the Iowa primary."

I want to assure him that it was not the beginning; and I want to assure him that it was not the end. It was not the beginning because while there were newspaper reports at the time to the effect that the statement was inadvertently made, it was not inadvertently made. I have proof which is satisfactory to me, from newspapermen on whom I can rely, who were told that if they would go down to Mr. Hopkins' office on that particular day they would obtain a statement with reference to the Iowa primary which would make an interesting story for publication. If there is any accident or inadvertence to that circumstance it is not apparent to me.

It was not the end, Mr. President, because the people of my State, and I believe the people of every State in the Union, resent just as deeply as we do the attempts of any one outside the citizenship of a State to determine for the people of that State whom they shall send to the United States Congress.

Mr. Hopkins has said that he is sorry for the statement. I credit him with sincerity in that regard. However, 8 months have elapsed since Mr. Hopkins made the statement with reference to Mr. Gillette in the Iowa primary, and from that time to this, sorrow or no sorrow, regret or no regret, he has never contacted me and expressed regret that the remark was inadvertently made, or intentionally made, up to the time I am now addressing the Senate.

I have these resentments, Mr. President, but I shall vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Harry Hopkins.

Let me tell the Senate why.

I have opposed with all my strength, limited as it is, any attempt on the part of the executive department to have enacted into law any measures which could conceivably be used, in my opinion, whether they were so intended or not, to exercise control over the judicial department or the legislative department. I have opposed every such effort without charging anyone with trying to do it, because I felt it essential to keep the several coordinate departments of our Government separate and independent, and to maintain them as the checks on one another that they were intended to be. I resent, and will oppose just as strongly, any attempt on the part of the legislative department to exercise control over the executive department.

I do not believe that there is any greater burden that can be laid upon human shoulders than the Presidency of the United States. I do not believe that any man can have forced on him any greater load of worry than that of being elected President of the United States. He is charged with full responsibility for the executive department. If there is any right upon which he should Jealously insist, if there is any right to name those with whom he is to work in that department, and particularly the official family, who are close to him, and his nearest advisers. I cannot conceive, Mr. President, how we as Senators can in justice to the Chief Executive deprive the President of that right. There is not a Senator in the Chamber who would not insist on such a right were he President of the United States.

I reserve to myself the right to differ with the President whenever my conscience and my judgment so suggest. However, I do not claim, and I will not exercise, the right to try to handicap him in any way in the work he has to do. If I were President, I should want to select the members of my official family with whom I should work, on whom I could depend, and whose advice I could take.

One of the last men on earth I would want in my Cabinet is Harry Hopkins. However, the President wants him. He is entitled to him. I think it is absolutely unjust for persons like myself, who harbor resentments, to deprive the President of his right. I shall vote for the confirmation of Harry Hopkins.

There is one more element, and then I shall have finished. I have a tremendous duty to the people of the State of Iowa. The vote which I shall cast is not my vote. It is the vote of 3,000,000 Iowans, one of the votes that they have in this body. The other is to be cast by my colleague, who at this moment graces the chair. It is the vote of the people whom I represent. I have pondered long and carefully over how it should be cast. It will be cast as I have just stated.

In Iowa we have a motto on our State seal which says, "Our liberties we prize. Our rights we will maintain."

I am speaking for that motto, to which every Iowan subscribes and to which I believe every American citizen subscribes. I do not want the vote which I cast in favor of the confirmation of the nomination of Harry Hopkins to be construed here or anywhere as a vote of approval on the part of the people of my State, who have once and again during the past summer expressed themselves at the ballot box. I do not want it to be construed as approval, limited or unlimited, for anyone outside our own citizenship, high or low, anywhere, at anytime, to attempt to dictate to the people of my State, wittingly or unwittingly, intentionally or unintentionally, purposely or without purpose, whom they shall send to the Senate of the United States, or to the House of Representatives from a district of my State, or to attempt to curtail or limit their right to participate in the legislative deliberations of the Congress of the United States through representatives of their own choosing.

And, in the words of the great Virginian, Mr. President,

"If that be treason, make the most of it."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in talking on the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Murphy for Attorney General of the United States I quoted a passage from a statement by the President of the United States, in which he said something like this:

The measure of a man's sincerity is what he does, not what he

That can be applied to Mr. Hopkins in this particular instance.

Now, let us measure Mr. Hopkins' qualifications for Secretary of Commerce. To start with, how does he stand in this Nation? The Gallup polls, which have come to be considered rather accurate in estimating public opinion, have recently reported that 66 percent of the people of this country, as evidenced by that poll, after being checked, are opposed to the nomination of Mr. Hopkins. Of the businessmen of the United States, who constitute the group which should be especially recognized in this appointment, because it is with them Mr. Hopkins will have to deal particularly, a canvass shows 78 percent opposed to Mr.

Who is Mr. Hopkins? Mr. Hopkins was born in the State of Iowa. He has spent his entire life in social or Government work. Mr. Hopkins has a very interesting background. He has had a very forgetful memory, in fact, one of the shortest memories, I think, on record.

First, looking into Mr. Hopkins' background, according to the testimony before the committee, he fails to remember whether or not he was a Socialist, enrolled as a member of the Socialist Party. At first, some time ago, he denied that he had ever been a Socialist, and now he fails to remember whether or not he was ever a Socialist. So, for the record and the Members of this body, let me present here certain

The registration book of the thirty-fifth election district of the thirty-fifth assembly district of Bronx County, for the year 1915, pages 30 and 31, sixth line, shows that Harry L. Hopkins, 25 years old, of 2391 Davidson Avenue, 3 years a resident of New York State, 1 year a resident of the county, 1 year a resident of the election district, having cast his last previous vote at Grinnell, Iowa, and in 1911 employed as a social worker at 105 East Twenty-second Street, Manhattan, is officially enrolled as a member of the Socialist Party.

I come now to the registration book of the twenty-ninth election district of the nineteenth assembly district in New York County for the year 1916, and I refer to pages 30 and 31. The seventeenth line shows that Harry L. Hopkins, 26 years old, of 507 West One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street, 4 years a resident of the State, 4 years a resident of the county, 7 months a resident of the election district, having cast his last previous vote at 2391 Davidson Avenue, occupation, city hall; place of employment, city hall; enrolled as a member of the Socialist Party.

There is the official record, Senators, of the man who a short time ago said that he was never enrolled as a Socialist.

There is the record of the man who has recently, at the hearings before the Committee on Commerce, said he could not remember; there is the man who was enrolled, as the records of New York City show, as a Socialist. There is the man of whom Mr. Paul Crouch, editor of the New South magazine, which is well known as a communistic publication. in an open letter, says:

Other New Deal people who should be on the list of possibilities for President of the United States in 1940 are Governor Murphy, of Michigan, and Hopkins.

Just think of that! These are the two nominees proposed, two men whose names have been before this body, are approved by this communistic organ for President in 1940.

Now, what is Mr. Hopkins' public record? He has been a boys' club leader; he has been engaged in social work; he has been engaged in relief work. The nearest he has come to having any contact with the businessmen of this country with whose activities the Department of Commerce has much to do, is in spending the Nation's money—and he is a good spender, for he has spent billions of dollars. He is the outstanding spender of all time. This man, who never met a pay roll in his life, this man who knows none of the problems of private business and industry, is to regulate the great channels of industry in this Nation.

Now, I desire to discuss for just a moment some of the remarks made by some of the Senators who have preceded me. I am sorry the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is not present at the moment, and so I will refer to the New Jersey situation, about which I should like to secure some information. I wonder if the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Barbour] would permit me to ask him a question or two in my time?

Mr. BARBOUR. I would be very glad, indeed, to have the Senator ask me any question.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it a fact that the Senator's opponent in the recent election in New Jersey was W. P. A. director for the State of New Jersey?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is correct. My opponent was the State administrator of W. P. A.

Mr. BRIDGES. Did he resign?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; he resigned that position either when he was nominated on the Democratic ticket for United States Senator or shortly before that time.

Mr. BRIDGES. Who was appointed in his place?

Mr. BARBOUR. His deputy was appointed acting administrator. His deputy had been associated with the director for many years; in fact, since the W. P. A. organization was started in New Jersey.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. Ely, then, was one of the original W. P. A. directors?

Mr. BARBOUR. He was; yes.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it true that after he entered the contest as a candidate checks went out to W. P. A. workers and literature went out to W. P. A. workers bearing his name?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I am quite sure that is true; at least, I was told on good authority that checks went out. and I myself saw literature that still carried his name as the State administrator.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator.

Now, Mr. President, let me refer to the philosophy expressed here yesterday by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. He made a statement-

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator allow me to say to him that the Senator from Kentucky has been called out of the Chamber on a matter of importance which no one else could properly handle? I understand, however, the Senator from Kentucky will return shortly.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will wait, then. I am also sorry the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is not present, because I wish to discuss the position of the Senator from Iowa. I will, however, refrain from doing that for the moment.

I desire briefly to take up now, out of courtesy to the Senators whose return I shall await, the question of why Mr. Hopkins actually has been appointed to this office.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt] covered some of those points; but, you know, one of the duties of the Secretary of Commerce, a most interesting duty which he will be called upon to supervise next year, is the United States census. The United States census is a unique institution. Once every 10 years, thousands of census takers are sent out by the United States Government. They go to every home and every farm in every town and city in every county in every State of the Union. That is where Mr. Hopkins will come into his own. This great authority on relief and politics, politics and relief, the man who has regimented the armies of relief workers against certain outstanding Democratic Senators; and in the election campaign of 1940 he really will "go to town." Where could the President of the United States turn in this country to find a greater authority for marshalling and arraying an army of census takers to go from home to home and farm to farm in every city, town, in every county in the Nation?

What do you suppose the census takers will say when they reach these homes? First there probably will be a knock, knock, knock on the door. The lady of the house will come to the door. The census taker will say, "I am a census taker. I am working for Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins is my boss. I want to ask you some questions."

"To start with, how many people are there in this house over 21 years old? You know, madam, all we are interested in is the persons who vote. Ordinarily, we take a census of everybody; but this year we are giving particular attention to the voters."

The next question probably will be: "If you have any Federal mortgages on your place, a farm mortgage under any of the credit associations, or a home mortgage, what is the number of it? We want to know, and we will attend to you later in case you do not vote right."

Then they probably will say, "Did you ever hear my boss, Mr. Hopkins, or his superboss, Mr. Roosevelt, talk over the radio? If so, you have your instructions. If not, I want to go a little bit more into detail about what I have in mind. So let us proceed about this voting business."

That, perhaps, is exaggerated; but that is somewhat the program that we may see carried out in 1940. Make no mistake about it. That is one of the primary reasons why Mr. Hopkins has been elevated to the post of Secretary of Commerce in this country today. Mr. Hopkins knows his stuff. He has demonstrated it in the past; and, as the President has said, the measure of a man's sincerity is not what he says, but what he does-and we know what Mr. Hopkins did. Mr. Hopkins may now be for the Hatch amendment; but the fact remains, by the President's own standard, that we judge him not on what he says but on what he does. So, based upon what he did, we can predict that an army of census takers will be going forth in 1940 to do what I

Under Mr. Hopkins' instructions they are going to be against the purged Senators; they are going to be against many of the Senators who are on the other side of the Chamber. They are going to be out to promote the personal fortunes of Mr. Hopkins, who has already been endorsed by one of the leading communistic publications of the country for President of the United States. He is the fair-haired boy of the left-wingers.

So we have the picture of this young man from Iowa who came to the big city a Socialist, and now a New Deal Democrat, who has never met a pay roll, who knows none of the problems of industry, who has just been a good disciple in the ranks of the purgers, directing a department heading up all kinds of industry in the Nation.

I have here an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune of December 24, 1938, entitled "From Bad to Worse." I should like to read it; but, in order to save the time of this body, if there is no objection, I ask to have it incorporated in my speech as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Without objection, the editorial will be inserted in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of December 24, 1938] FROM BAD TO WORSE

In the words of once all-too-familiar communiqués, President

In the words of once all-too-familiar communiqués, President Roosevelt has ordered Harry Hopkins to fall back from a hard-pressed post in the line to a "position previously prepared in advance." Unfortunately, as in the great war, there is scant reason to think that the new position is stronger than the old. There are, indeed, good grounds for suspecting that it is vastly weaker. For in his dugout, as head of relief, Mr. Hopkins was at least attending to something with which he was familiar and for which he had been trained. That is to say, he had spent his life as a social worker giving away money that someone else had earned. What possible qualifications can Mr. Hopkins have for his new job as Secretary of Commerce? He has never run a business or, for the matter of that, participated in a business. On a number of occasions he has paid lip service to the profit system. But has he any real appreciation of how profits are earned and of the heavy responsibilities of meeting a weekly pay roll and monthly bills and solving the endless other difficulties of cost and salesmanship which commerce, from the smallest unit to the largest, manship which commerce, from the smallest unit to the largest, involves?

The cynics may retort that when Mr. Hopkins turned politician The cynics may retort that when Mr. Hopkins turned politician in his handling of relief he became more crass and brutal in purchasing votes with taxpayers' money than any hard-boiled ward heeler would ever dream of being. He not only shelled out the dough but boasted of doing so. Indeed, he went so far in trying to buy one more election with relief funds and in seeking to make the purge work that he will face in the Senate as ugly a set of charges as a nominee for the Cabinet post has confronted in many record. If he is confirmed in office as now seems probable it will charges as a nominee for the Cabinet post has confronted in many years. If he is confirmed in office, as now seems probable, it will only be after the hardest kind of fight and a spreading before the country of a record for manufacturing politics out of human misery that will do the administration far more harm than good.

Let it be agreed that this social worker, under pressure from the politicians, perhaps with a desire to demonstrate his own right to be one of them, exhibited an extraordinary callousness toward the decencies of government and a depressing faith in the corruptibility of the hard-up. When he decided to abandon idealism he became a realist and a cynic with a vengeance. We have vastly too much respect for business as it is practiced in this country to conceive that Mr. Hopkins' sudden conversion will aid him in comprehending the problems of commerce. It is not bribery that American business demands but justice and a realization by those in authority that you cannot destroy all hope of reasonable profits and expect the profit system to function.

If there is any evidence that Mr. Hopkins is equipped either and expect the profit system to function.

If there is any evidence that Mr. Hopkins is equipped either with the standards of ethics or with a knowledge of the profit system sufficient to fit him for sitting down with American businessmen and helping to end their difficulties, we shall be glad to hear it. On the record, the President out of personal friendship and a hope of building up a political heir, is retreating under pressure of criticism to a position far less defensible than the one he has been holding. And the country seems likely to suffer not less but more. less but more.

Mr. BRIDGES. I also have before me an article written by Mark Sullivan which has a bearing on this subject. It is entitled: "Hopkins' rise to commerce chief likened to youth in Pinafore. Mark Sullivan scans new Secretary's history and that of ambitious clerk who became 'The ruler of the Queen's Navee.'

Let me read the first verse of the rhyme incorporated in this article. Then I am not going to burden the Senate further by reading it, but shall ask to have it made part of

> When I was a lad I served a term As office boy in an attorney's firm.
> I cleaned the windows and I swept the floor, And I polished up the handle of the big front door. I polished up that handle so carefullee That now I am the ruler of the Queen's Navee.

That experience typifies the experience Mr. Hopkins has had for this new responsibility, this new job that he is

I ask, without objection, to have the article made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of January 14, 1939] HOPKINS RISE TO COMMERCE CHIEF LIKENED TO YOUTH IN PINA-FORE—MARK SULLIVAN SCANS NEW SECRETARY'S HISTORY AND THAT OF AMBITIOUS CLERK WHO BECAME "THE RULER OF THE QUEEN'S NAVEE"

(By Mark Sullivan)

Washington, January 13.—Events of the day ought not to be permitted to go by without observing their resemblance to events of the past, as described in history or literature. Contemplation of one of the most conspicuous episodes of the present week in national politics led me to turn to some verse, in which one can sometimes find diversion.

Among the most entertaining bits of English rhyme is a ballad which tells the story of an ambitious and worthy youth. Starting lowly, and in an occupation far removed from maritime, he was nevertheless able, by diligence, to work his way up and up, until he entered politics, became a knight, and at the peak of his career was able to sing:

"I am the monarch of the sea, The ruler of the Queen's Navee."

The office which this hero attained by a lifetime devotion to another line of work was, I suppose, First Lord of the Admiralty. Whatever his title, he was "tops," and he told how he arrived there. I quote from the comic opera Pinafore. Anyone who wishes to read the rest of this engaging story of success achieved by diligence can find it in the plays of Gilbert and Sullivan, in the Modern Liberty. Modern Library:

"When I was a lad I served a term As office boy in an attorney's firm.

I cleaned the windows and I swept the floor,
And I polished up the handle of the big front door. I polished up that handle so carefullee
That now I am the ruler of the Queen's Navee." *

As office boy, he was so good that he advanced to junior law clerk, to articled clerk, to serving writs, and finally:

"Of legal knowledge I acquired such a grip That they took me into partnership.

And that junior partnership, I ween,
Was the one ship that I ever had seen.
But that kind of ship so suited me,
That now I am the ruler of the Queen's Navee. Now landsmen all, whoever you may be, If you want to rise to the top of the tree Stick close to your desks and never go to sea And you all may be rulers of the Queen's Navee."

What this ballad teaches, the reader will observe, is that experience in one line may lead to elevation in a wholly different line. Granted intrinsic merit—and granted also perhaps a gift for politics, together with the favor of the great—there is no reason why a man's honors should be restricted to the particular kind of career he has led. To those who really have greatness in them, experience in one area of life can with complete appropriateness lead to ence in one area of life can with complete appropriateness lead to honors in a wholly different area.

The proof of this we have seen this week. We have seen a man made Secretary of Commerce—made, so to speak, first lord of commerce, the governmental symbol of rule over industry, business, trade, and all that pertains thereto; monarch over mill and mine. When we turn to examine the career which led to this distinction, we find it in Who's Who.

WHO'S WHO IS FORMAL

Who's Who, being an austere book, given to formal and condensed phraseology, does not tell this American success as charmingly as Gilbert and Sullivan told the English one. But the successive stages of advancement are set out with detailed thorough-

"Hopkins, Harry L., began as supervisor Assn. for Improving Condition of Poor; exec. sec. Bd. Child Welfare, 1918-22; div. mgr. New Orleans for Am. Red Cross, 1922-24; then asst. dir. Assn. for Improving Condition of the Poor; then dir. New York Tuberculosis and Health Assn.; apptd. exec. dir., N. Y. State Temporary Emergency Relief Administration, 1931, chmn., 1932; apptd. Federal Administrator Emergency Relief 1933, Works Progress Administrator ministrator Emergency Relief, 1933. Works Progress Administrator, Nothing about commerce in that. But to suggest that a Secretary of Commerce ought to have some experience in commerce would be as unreasonable as to say that the ruler of the Queen's Navee ought to have had some experience with ships.

I wonder if any American satirist will find material for a comic opera in Mr. Harry Hopkins?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I fail to see present any of the Senators to whose States I wish to refer; so I shall proceed anyway.

I cannot quite understand the philosophy of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], whom I admire very much personally, whom I like as a friend, when he comes here and stands before this body condemning Mr. Hopkins, and then states that he is going to vote for his confirmation. Cabinet members, as well as other high Government officials, are subject, under the United States Constitution, to confirma-tion or rejection by the Senate. True, the President of the United States should have a wide latitude in making his selections, but the Senate, under the Constitution, has a right to confirm or reject all appointments. If we sit idly by and adopt the philosophy of the Senator from Iowa to the fullest extent, then we would sit idly by and let some President name Al Capone, or somebody else of his record, to the Cabinet. If that theory holds, that is what we would be bound to do.

The Senate of the United States has had no compunctions about turning down other men who have been nominated for Cabinet positions by Presidents of the United States, and I do not believe we should have any compunctions at this time; and certainly if the theory I have mentioned can be applied, it can be carried to almost any extent, which is, of course, unsound.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] yesterday said that there were some districts in Kentucky in which the number of either those on relief or those administering relief-I did not quite get the statement-ran in the ratio of 10 Republicans for 1 Democrat. I should like to know where that condition exists in the State of Kentucky. The State of Kentucky is a far different State than I have heard if that is true, and I hope the distinguished Senator will produce records to substantiate that statement in the days to come. Of course, this may be correct, but I did not realize that in any place in Kentucky the ratio of Republicans to Democrats ran 10 to 1.

The Senator from Kentucky further stated that the relief rolls normally were higher in the spring and summer and fall than in the winter, or at least I understood him to say That seems rather a contradiction of the fact that right now we are being pressed on all sides to restore the cut made by the House in the relief appropriation bill because we are told we are going through the hard winter months, the hardest time of the year, when the relief roll is the highest.

Mr. Hopkins' record has been pretty well covered here, but there is one statement I have not heard referred to. Probably it is like the "spend and spend, tax and tax, elect and elect" statement; he probably will deny it; but it was made, and it was quoted in many newspapers in the land, and, as far as I know, to date Mr. Hopkins has not denied What he may do tomorrow I should hate to predict. That was when he was questioned relative to the status of certain W. P. A. projects. He turned with contempt and said, "They are too damned dumb to understand." That is the attitude of the man who is now appointed Secretary of Commerce to regulate and direct recovery in this country. The American people are "just too damned dumb to understand."

I know some persons who may be too dumb to understand some things. There are some of them about the country, but the great majority of persons are not too dumb to understand. At least they understand enough so that in the Gallup poll 66 percent of them do not want Mr. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce, and 78 percent of the businessmen who have been interviewed do not want him for Secretary of Commerce.

What was the first official act of Mr. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce? It was to issue a statement giving a clean bill of health to his predecessor on the story that appeared and the charges made by Mr. Elliott, of the Comptroller General's office, in regard to the way in which Government boats were being used for private parties and outings. One of Mr. Hopkins' first acts was to rush to the defense of his predecessor in that respect. I am glad he has sensed his first duty and his first obligation. I am not informed as to the facts in this case, but I was interested in Mr. Hopkins' statement.

Mr. President, I had intended to cover this subject somewhat more thoroughly than I have done, but in the debate and discussion here over the past 2 days the matter has been pretty well covered and the record has been pretty well made relative to Mr. Hopkins' qualifications. So I am not going to take more of the time of the Senate.

But in closing may I say that probably there never was, in the recent history of our country, at least, a more ill-fitted man than Mr. Hopkins appointed to a post in the Cabinet.

We have had some bad Cabinet members in the past and some of them I can only condemn for their actions, but certainly Mr. Hopkins, from the viewpoint of his previous record, can be looked upon with a great deal of doubt as to the kind of a Cabinet member he will make. I believe that if I were speaking here as a partisan Republican for what I believed to be the best interests of the Republican Party, I might speak and vote to confirm Mr. Hopkins, because I believe he will be a noose around the neck of Mr. Roosevelt and the administration; but as an American citizen, I believe it is my duty to oppose him. So I propose to register my vote in opposition to the confirmation of his nomination.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I repeat the announcement made at the time of the last roll call as to the absence of certain Senators.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the debate on the question of the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins has naturally enough entered into the field of the work and activities of the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenditures—the so-called Sheppard committee—and the general subject of political use of relief funds as disclosed in the committee's report. I shall be entirely impersonal, but I hope that at the end of what I have to say it will be clear to the country that some Democrats are as bitterly opposed to the pressure of politics in the administration of relief as are Republicans, and as all patriotic citizens ought to be.

Mr. President, apart from the immediate question before the Senate and in order that there may be no misinterpretation of my vote as indicating any condonation or palliation of the pernicious practices revealed in the report of the Sheppard committee, I wish to express the views I have long entertained on the subject of relief and its administration for political purposes. Particularly do I desire at this time to address myself to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber.

In my opinion, the recession in the Democratic vote in the last election was due in large part to three factors, which I shall enumerate:

First. The unsatisfactory administration of Federal relief funds by Federal and local agencies; the dissatisfaction with the administration of the National Labor Relations Act; and controversies concerning the application of the Social Security Act and the pay-roll taxes levied thereunder.

Second. The fear of higher taxes and the apprehension respecting the impairment of our national credit by reason of our rapidly growing debt and continued governmental expenditures beyond our income.

Third. The growing belief that some of those in important administrative posts are not standing foursquare for those fundamental and traditional democratic theories and policies which our people believe have been our safety and security in the past, and which most Americans still cherish.

I am not now asserting or attempting to prove the truth of all of these complaints. I am simply saying that, whether true or mistaken, they were, in my judgment, very much in the public mind, and all of them contributed somewhat to the election returns last November. It is my opinion also that the Democratic Party can go forth to future victories if these objections are corrected.

The objectives sought in unemployment relief; in the freeing of organized workers from coercion and economic pressure by employers; and in extending aid to the aged and incapacitated, and the statutory provisions therefor, in my opinion, were unquestionably among the greatest accomplishments of any political party in the history of the Republic. The tragedy of it all is that, in part at least, the appreciation of the electorate has been dimmed through the manner in which some of these laws have been administered.

One of these matters is here for discussion now—politics in relief administration. I speak on that subject with some knowledge since I was a member of the Sheppard committee drafted for this service by the Vice President against my own expressed desires to perform an unpleasant task—unpleasant because it was an investigation that led into some internal matters in the Democratic household.

The resolution creating that committee was drafted and adopted by the Democratic Senate of last year. I interpret that action to indicate a sincere and earnest desire upon the part of all Senators, but particularly the Democratic Senators, to insist that relief funds be administered free from political pressure within the party or as between the parties.

Such a course of action might very properly be presumed to be not only in the interest of decent government, but also in the political interest of the party in control of the Government. For certainly it must be seen that the most effective way to benefit politically by the distribution of relief would be to do the job honestly, efficiently, and in such a spirit of kindliness, generosity, and charity that all citizens of all parties would applaud the work; whereas it must be equally apparent that partisan administration of charity would lead to public disgust and condemnation.

What did the committee find, not upon its own motion, but from the investigation of complaints filed with it by Senators and candidates of the various political groups and parties seeking primary nominations and party elections? The story is too long for repetition. Let me quote only a sentence or two from the statements issued to the press by the Sheppard committee during the course of its investigation, which pointed out these abuses. Here is one sentence which referred to one State only:

Apparently every scheme and questionable device that can be used in a political contest to raise funds, to influence votes, and control the election is in full swing.

Here is another sentence:

Reports to the committee indicate that methods were used to influence votes and money was being spent on such a lavish scale (in some States) that it was almost unbelievable that a political election could reach such a low level. If conditions reported to the Sheppard committee were widespread and general, the American people would be shocked. To get a real picture of the situation, the committee should have an investigator in almost every voting precinct, which, of course, is an impossible task.

I may state here that I do not mean to infer that these abuses were universal and extended throughout all the States. But surely such things are reprehensible and indefensible, even if confined to particular localities.

Let me add also that the political pressure was not confined to the Democratic Party. Local authorities, of opposite political faith from the national administration, used the certifying roles for political advantage where possible. But even in these instances we, as Democrats, cannot escape blame, for the Federal Government has authority to review these certifications and remove from the rolls the names of those not honestly entitled to relief; and, indeed, it has the authority to withhold relief entirely in any community where it is found to be prostituted for political purposes.

All that I have said leads to this conclusion: We have now sufficient evidence of these abuses to take action to remove the cancer. We can do it by adopting the recommendations of the Sheppard committee when they come before us; and we can, in our appropriation of relief funds, condition their use and administration in a manner that will in a large measure end this nauseating experience.

If I had my way, and the Constitution permitted it, I would make it a treasonable offense to play politics with relief funds.

I may suggest also that in the appointment of future senatorial committees to supervise campaign expenditures, and compel compliance with the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, it be done in the early part of the session so that the committee may be fully organized and its investigators experienced and ready. We should avoid in the future the position of the Sheppard committee of being obliged to organize and assemble an investigating staff in the midst of the campaign.

I suggest also that in future resolutions the committee be given authority to name culpable persons-officials and employees of the Government-distributing relief funds, and not limit the committee, as was the Sheppard committee, "to investigate whether all funds appropriated by the Congress had been spent or were being spent in such a manner as to influence votes cast or to be cast in any primary or election in which a candidate for the Senate was to be nominated for election."

Senators, we are not dealing with political pressure upon the beneficiaries of the usual political patronage-namely, Federal officeholders. The difficulties of dealing with that problem are apparent. That evil, however, is infinitesimally less. We are dealing with the inalienable rights of our fellow citizens, the rights of the destitute and the poor, to enjoy a free ballot. We boast of our democratic rights of free speech, free assembly, freedom of conscience, and freedom of worship; but what about a free, untrammeled ballot?

The problem is simple and clear—the maintenance of the integrity of the elective processes; the preservation of democracy at its most vital point, the ballot box; the free exercise of the voting franchise; and to that end the prevention of any improper use of money and of any coercion or intimidation by any person, group, or agency inside or outside the Government.

The gravity of this offense, I repeat, is that if relief is associated with political pressure of any kind, it amounts to denying the crust of bread to the hungry man unless he votes the mind of his particular benefactor who has the power to deny him food. Is there a graver or a more serious political offense than denying to a man a crust of bread unless he agrees to vote for a particular candidate or to support a political party?

If we do nothing else this session, let us free the poor and the destitute from political servitude.

Mr. President, I intend to vote for the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins to the Cabinet post to which the President has appointed him. We have his present disclaimers of personal responsibility for the political abuse of the W. P. A. in particular localities. We have his affirmation of his personal disapproval and detestation of such practices. I think we may agree that the selection of the members of his Cabinet is a peculiarly personal prerogative of the President-of any President-and that as Senators we should not withhold confirmation of the President's nominees for Cabinet office, except for grave cause and unmistakable disqualification. I cannot persuade myself that such is the present case.

PREVENTION OF AND PUNISHMENT FOR LYNCHING

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I regret very much to disturb the present course of discussion, but I desire to call attention to the fact that certain influences seem bent upon wasting the remainder of the session of the Congress in what would be futile and unnecessary discussion. I hold in my hand Senate bill 845. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper] introduced yesterday the so-called antilynching bill, with a public statement to the press that "the battle must go on." The Senator from New York is present. The language sounds like that of the Senator from New York. I do not know which of the Senators prepared the statement. I did not see it in its entirety. But the statement was that "the battle must go on."

Mr. President, I want to say to these Senators that, while we very much regret the necessity, yet, speaking for myself, and I am sure for other Senators in the Chamber, we are prepared, if necessary, for "the battle to go on"; and if these Senators want to bring about a situation such as they brought about at the last session of the Congress, with the tacit cooperation, I suppose, of the leadership, they are going to waste about half of the time of this session of the Congress, because there are some Senators here who, so long as their legs will hold them up and so long as their mental faculties are normal, propose to discuss the bill as we discussed a similar bill at the last session of the Congress.

The discussion at the last session of the Congress resulted in bringing the press of the United States, the Northern press, the great newspapers of the United States, to the position of denouncing this measure, and saying that it ought not to be passed.

I hold in my hand a statement from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This seems to be the parent organization of all these movements. Let me say that I have nothing against the colored race. I have nothing against this association, so long as it pursues matters on their merits and not for political and personal purposes.

The campaign now inaugurated, however, is for cloture. I have before me the official statement of the association, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IMPORTANT-IMMEDIATE ACTION REQUESTED

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE New York, December 6, 1938.

To Branch Officers:

The main item of our legislative program this year is passage of a Federal antilynching bill. Preliminary conferences have been held with Members of Congress and our legal committee. The new bill has been drafted and will be introduced as soon as Congress convenes in January. We are going to make an even harder fight this year than last to secure passage of this bill. Success depends on the fullest cooperation from our branches and cooperating organizations organizations.

The long filibuster in the Senate last year defeated the bill, We can only break a filibuster next year by cloture. In order to invoke cloture we must have a two-thirds vote. In order to secure a two-thirds vote we must have the cooperation of all political parties. We must forget party lines in the interest of this legislation necessary for the protection of our citizens. Last year our branches cooperated in our efforts; this year we hope for even fuller cooperation from the entire membership of every branch.

Here are our immediate plans: Personal interviews with Senators mean more than telegrams, petitions, and letters. Congress opens in January. Soon your Senators will be leaving for Washington. We are urging each of our branches to organize delegations and personally visit both of your Senators before they leave for Washington. It will take a little time and expense, but it is worth it—it is a part of our program.

We are attaching to this letter a brief record of your Senators' records on cloture. Regardless of their records send a delegation to each and—to each and—

(a) If he voted for cloture and signed pledge, thank him and urge him to continue his efforts on behalf of the bill.

(b) If he voted for cloture but has not signed pledge, thank him for voting for cloture and ask him if you can depend on him to continue his efforts and to vote for cloture.

(c) If he did not vote for cloture last year, urge him to agree to do so this year—tell him of the need for this legislation.

We are enclosing a brief memorandum on organizing a delegation. This memorandum includes suggestions which will help you. The responsibility for this bill rests on every branch and every member of this organization. We solicit your cooperation. Please let us know the results of your conferences.

Very truly yours,

WALTER WHITE, Secretary.

P. S .- As soon as the conferences are held please rush us a detailed report.

MEMORANDUM

DECEMBER 6. 1938. Re delegations to call upon Senators in regard to antilynching

1. Obtaining an appointment: Either telephone or send a telegram immediately for an appointment with both your Senators. If you are not successful, continue your efforts until an appointment can be obtained.

2. Organization of delegation: Appoint a special committee to request representative citizens to join delegations. Impress upon them the necessity of being present and being on time. Delegations should include representatives from all reputable and responsible organizations interested in our problems such as Y. W. C. A., Y. M. C. A., churches, fraternal groups, labor organizations, political parties, societies, clubs, etc.

Stress should be placed on having representatives of large groups as well as prominent individuals.

as well as prominent individuals.

3. Plans for the delegation: Arrange for transportation of the delegation to the home or office where the appointment has been made. Transportation can be arranged either by a motor caravan, by bus, or by train.

Have a preliminary meeting and elect a spokesman for the Prepare a list of the members of the delegation present and organizations represented to leave with the Senator.

4. Suggestions for spokesman: If your Senator voted for cloture but has not signed the pledge it does not mean that he is not in favor of cloture in the next Congress. Explain that we are anxious to be able to know how many Senators will vote for cloture this year.

If your Senator did not vote for cloture last year urge him to promise to do so this time. The evil of lynching transcends party lines and objections to cloture in general under the present rules of the Senate. The only way to defeat the fillibuster is by limiting debate by cloture.

Urge your spokesman to be tactful but firm in his presentation to the Senators. Our only hope is to obtain cloture and a vote against cloture is a vote against the bill.

5. Following your conferences keep the entire committee together. This will mark only the first stage in mobilizing public centiment around the antilypoking bill.

sentiment around the antilynching bill.

New York: Senator Robert F. Wagner, New York, Democrat, cosponsor of the bill and voted for cloture in last Congress. Signed pledge to vote for cloture in next Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. I quote the third paragraph of the letter. It is addressed "To branch officers." It is headed "Important—immediate action requested." The date of the letter is December 6, 1938. I read the third paragraph:

Here are our immediate plans: Personal interviews with Senators mean more than telegrams, petitions, and letters. Congress opens in January. Soon your Senators will be leaving for Washington. We are urging each of our branches to organize delegations and personally visit both of your Senators before they leave for Washington. It will take a little time and expense, but it is worth it it is a part of our program.

We are attaching to this letter a brief record of your Senators' records on cloture.

They have their eye on you, Senators. On the issue of cloture they have your record for the last session.

Regardless of their records, send a delegation to each; and—
(a) If he voted for cloture and signed pledge, thank him and urge him to continue his efforts on behalf of the bill.
(b) If he voted for cloture but has not signed pledge, thank him for voting for cloture and ask him if you can depend on him to continue his efforts and to vote for cloture.

We are enclosing a brief memorandum on organizing a delegation.

Senators do not know anything about organizing delegations. They will obtain the information now from this association.

This memorandum includes suggestions which will help you. The responsibility for this bill rests on every branch and every member of this organization. We solicit your cooperation. Please let us know the results of your conferences.

Very truly yours,

WALTER WHITE, Secretary.

P. S .- As soon as the conferences are held please rush us a detailed report.

If any Senators are interested in finding their record on cloture, I have the official record sent out by this organization. They have already conducted a campaign, Mr. President, not only to get Senators to agree to vote for cloture but to make them sign on the line, in black and white.

They do not trust the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner]. They do not trust his word. They made him sign a written pledge that he would vote for cloture. That is what the organization say. I had assumed that because of the Senator's Herculean efforts of last session, his standing with the organization would entitle him to their confidence, but it seems that it does not.

I do not know whether the pledge was signed before a notary public, or was merely signed without acknowledgment.

In the statement which accompanies the letter from the association, under the heading of "New York," we find the following:

Senator Robert F. Wagner, New York (D), cosponsor of the bill and voted for cloture in last Congress. Signed pledge to vote for cloture in next Congress.

Mr. President, the idea of Senators of the United States, long before the session convenes, going up to a desk somewhere in some little office, where it is dark, as though the blinds were already pulled down, and signing, in advance, a promise to vote to cut off debate in the United States Senate, going back on the traditions of 100 years! The Senate is the only free forum left in the country where the voices of the representatives of the people may be heard. However, those who signed the pledge said, "We will vote now, in advance, to cut off debate, and ram the bill down the throat of an unwilling Senate." Senators know it is an unwilling Senate. Senators do not want to pass this bill. The people of the country do not want the bill passed. The press of the North does not want the bill, as was shown at the last session of the Congress. However, the signers of the pledge said, in effect, "We will sign an oath to force the Senate to cut off debate, and ram down the unwilling throat of the United States Senate a bill which it does not want."

Mr. President, that will not happen. I think I know what I am talking about.

The Senator from New York and his colleague have a recruit in this Congress. In the last Congress the sponsors of the bill were the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys]. In this Congress the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper] has joined the funeral party. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the Senate. I should not have made these remarks except that these Senators not only have introduced the bill-that is all right; let them introduce it-but they have sent out a blast to the country to the effect that the great "fight must go on." If it must go on, some of us are ready to meet those Senators, in the committee or anywhere else. I can tell them now that the bill will not pass.

NOMINATION OF HARRY L. HOPKINS TO BE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins, of New York, to be Secretary of Com-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I expect to vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins. According to my belief, the debate so far, while very ably conducted, has not been exactly fair to Mr. Hopkins.

I am only slightly acquainted with Mr. Hopkins. I never met him until he took charge of this great work. Since then, of course, like all other Members of the Congress, I have often come in contact with him. I presume every one of us has been impressed, either favorably or unfavorably, with the work he was doing and with his motives and intentions in either trying to keep politics out of relief or to put politics into relief. If I am correct, Mr. President, the Congress of the United States is more to blame than is Mr. Hopkins or anyone else for putting the country in a condition in which the evils of partisan politics would have an opportunity to intrude themselves into the relief question.

Like all other Senators and other patriotic persons, I am very bitterly opposed to politics entering into the relief question in any degree whatever. My ideas are quite well known by my colleagues; and I know they will agree with me when I say that, in the judgment of some of my colleagues and friends, I am perhaps regarded as being rather a crank on the subject of nonpartisanship in office. I wish I could have my way. If I could, I would have nonpartisanship enter into every official act of the Federal Government from top to bottom.

I would not abolish parties; I am not complaining of the partisanship that infuses men and candidates at elections when they are advocating the principles of their party. But I believe, Mr. President, in the doctrine that when a man is once elected to office he ought to cease being a politician and a representative of a party and should represent all his constituents and all the people of the country, regardless of Unfortunately I think there has grown up in this country ever since I have known anything about public life a party feeling, a party lcyalty that, in my humble judgment, goes beyond patriotic duty. I think that the Congress, through many years, under the control of both the great political parties, has been the main instrument in building up that kind of sentiment, a sentiment that extends to the rank and file of most of our people, that parties are justified when their representatives hold official position to carry the benefit and the welfare of the party away beyond what, in my judgment, is their patriotic duty.

I am not questioning the fidelity, I am not questioning the honesty of individuals in any political party. I am merely expressing my opinion—which is not of much value, I concede; it has not had any effect during all my public life in controlling either one of the great parties—that such a theory of public duty should be abandoned.

I think I am going to show, Mr. President, that the condition of things which I have tried briefly to describe, and which I will go into more fully in my remarks, has confronted Mr. Hopkins in his official duty in carrying out the great mandate of the Congress. It was his duty to carry out the law of Congress. He had a right to take and ought to have taken into consideration the debates in Congress to ascertain whether he was carrying out the law as Congress really intended it to be carried out. In my judgment, the record will show, if he had done such a thing, that he would have been justified in putting more politics than ever was put in by him into his official duties and the administration of his office, although I think the record will show that he has tried to keep both out of politics. I know the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] has said there is a disagreement as to that, and that is one reason why I have taken the floor. I want to put in on the other side of this question some evidence that bears directly on the point, and which refutes, in my humble judgment, much of the evidence that has been produced-honestly produced, I concede-by those who are opposed to the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins.

We have dealt with the relief question for several years. It has been before us in various forms. We have had several bureaus and governmental corporations instrumental, in one way or another, in bringing relief to the unemployed. Mr. Hopkins has had, perhaps, to an extent, at least, the larger duty of that kind to perform, but his has not been the only one. The principle has been the same in all the others. Away back in 1934 the Senate had before it a bill amending the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. There was offered at that time an amendment to that bill. I desire to read it.

This is the amendment:

(m) In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation and in the promotion of agents or employees no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any agent or employee of the Corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board.

I think that is a very mild provision. There is no penalty attached; there is no crime created; the provision merely separates the offender from the service and outlines the duty of the Board and the object that it has in view. It takes partisanship out of the consideration.

That amendment was debated at great length in the Senate. On the 19th day of March 1934 the Senate reached a vote and adopted the amendment by a roll-call vote of 40 in favor to 33 against. However, so earnest were many of the Senators in their objection to that amendment that a motion to reconsider it was made on the same day. It was openly announced on the floor of the Senate that there were some absentees who wanted to be present and vote on the question. It was again debated on the same day; another roll call was had, and the motion to reconsider the amendment was lost by one vote. Thirty-four Senators voted in favor of reconsideration and 35 against.

The bill as thus amended went to the House of Representatives, and the particular amendment was stricken out. Several other amendments were also in the bill as it went to conference. The conference report omitted the particular amendment and the conference report that omitted that amendment was brought back to the Senate.

It is true, Mr. President, that there were some other amendments involved. It is true also that the question came up again on the conference report. I concede very frankly that in voting on a conference report many Senators were movedand I think very properly moved-by the consideration that the report if adopted is the end of the legislative proceedings on the measure and they are anxious to have the bill pass. So they take into consideration the vote by which disputed amendments were agreed to. A Senator often votes for a conference report which he dislikes very much. But the amendment to which I have referred was debated again when the conference report came up. There was an attempt made to reject the conference report because the amendment was excluded. The object of that amendment, as shown on its face, was to take politics out of the relief question. It was to make a business proposition of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The same idea prevailed there that has prevailed in other legislation to which I shall call attention later. It was to get rid of politics; it was to raise the relief question above political machines and political bosses. The conference report, however, was agreed to by a vote on a roll call of 40 to 30; and thus politics was left in the law.

The purpose of those who favor the amendment was to eliminate politics. They were defeated, and a law was enacted without any attempt on the part of the Congress, so far as the law was concerned, to eliminate the abuse of political machines in the handling of the question of unemployment and relief.

The amendment was rejected by the House and was finally rejected by the Senate-a House and a Senate both controlled by Democrats. In my judgment it is no defense to say that when the Republican Party was in power, and controlled both Houses of Congress, it did the same thing in many other but different ways. That is no defense. You. the representatives of the Democratic Party, promised the country that you would do better than the Republican Party: and it was up to you, if you were to redeem your promise. to do better than the Republican Party. But you were tried, and you followed the rule of the very men whom you had condemned in campaigns, and gave it as an excuse that you were at least no worse.

I may say now, Mr. President, that you were reminded in this discussion, running over several days, that these chickens would come home to roost; and they are here now, my Democratic brethren. You suffered in the last campaign because you refused legislatively to take politics out of relief. You have already been held responsible. The country already has in part held you responsible, in my judgment. In this particular case I think you were found wanting when weighed on the scales of justice.

The last campaign, I think, to a very great degree, was to quite an extent disastrous to the Democratic Party because of the action I have just narrated and the others that I am about to narrate. It is not becoming for us, as a Congress dripping with the blood of partisanship in our National Legislature, to try to lay the blame upon an Executive official because he carried out the law which we ourselves refused to perfect by putting in a provision that politics should be eliminated.

Mr. President, we went on. I am not going to mention all the things that occurred, because it would take too much time; but here is another amendment. It was known as the Hatch

LXXXIV--36 amendment. On June 2, 1938, the Senate voted on it. That amendment read as follows:

SEC. —. No person employed in any administrative capacity by any agency of the Federal Government whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds appropriated by this act shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. Any such person shall retain the right to vote as he pleases and to privately express his opinions on all political subjects, but shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

The amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] was quite fully debated and a roll call was had on it in the Senate, and the amendment was defeated by a nay vote of 40 against a yea vote of 37, showing again that the Senate of the United States was not willing to put in an act of Congress anything that would remove politics from its administration.

It does not become us now to condemn somebody who followed the law which we ourselves enacted, even if Mr. Hopkins did it in this case. I am not saying that he did or did not. I myself think Mr. Hopkins had the most difficult job to perform that was ever given to a human being. I do not believe any man on earth could fulfill the duties of that office and give satisfaction even to a majority of the people of the United States. It was an impossibility; but we strangled Mr. Hopkins with our own law. We refused to put in the law any provision which would have made it unlawful to do the various things that the Sheppard committee, for instance, have reported to us as having been done. Therefore we ought to shoulder the blame; we ought to take upon ourselves the guilt, at least in great part, for any deficiency which has resulted in the carrying out of any of these laws; and there have been many. Even when the executive authorities were doing the very best they could, as I shall show later, to keep politics out, politicians put it in nevertheless.

Another amendment on this subject was offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin]. It is longer than the amendment which I have just read, but I think I ought to read the entire amendment at this time:

SEC. —. (a) No part of any appropriation in this act shall be used for any political purpose, and no authority conferred by this act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for any

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds appropriated by this act to use or threaten to use his official authority, or influence for any of the following purposes:

(1) To interfere with, restrain, or coerce any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any primary or other election;

(2) To encourage or discourage membership in, or contribution to, any political party by discrimination, threatened or executed, in regard to the granting or withholding of benefits, or the execution of any of the powers, functions, or purposes, included in this

(3) To discriminate against any person in regard to benefits from the United States because such person has filed charges or given testimony with respect to any matter arising under this act;

(4) To discriminate against any individual in regard to benefits from the United States because such individual has voted at any election according to his free choice, or because such person is a member of, or has made contributions to, the political party of his own choosing; or

(5) To discriminate against any corporation in regard to benefits from the United States because any officer or director thereof is a member of, or has made contributions to, the political party of his own choosing.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person whose compensation or any part thereof, is paid from funds appropriated by this act, to act as election official, ballot clerk, or watcher, or in any other similar capacity at any polling place in any primary or other election.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds appropriated by this act, to solicit, persuade, or induce, by the exercise of his power to administer, supervise, regulate, or otherwise put into effect, this act or any part thereof, contributions to a political party, or any agency thereof, for any purpose whatsoever.

(e) It shall be unlawful for any person whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds appropriated by this act, to be detailed to service, or to serve as a political campaign worker for any political party.

(f) Any person who violates any provision of this section shall be punished, if such person is an individual, by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 3 years, or both, and in all other cases, by a fine of not more than $25,000.

Mr. President, that amendment was fully debated on the floor of the Senate, and a roll-call vote was had upon it. The amendment was defeated by a vote of 35 against to 33 for, and defeated, in the main, by Democratic votes. The Democratic Party is properly chargeable, I think, with the failure of that amendment, as it is properly chargeable with the failure of the other amendments to which I have referred. If we are to rule by party, then the Democratic Party must suffer for the evils to which I have referred. If that must be the way we are to rule, if partisanship cannot be obliterated from official action, then it is right that the party in control should suffer.

According to my doctrine, partisanship in government is not a good principle. As I stated a while ago, I do not think we ought to know such a thing as party in the discharge of our official duties. We ought to do the best we can to represent all the people, regardless of party, regardless of conditions. In that way, according to my theory, we would get better government, and we would bring greater happiness to our people. We would not have such charges as those made now, some of them established, involving the disgraceful things which have been brought to light by the Sheppard committee.

A little later on there was another Hatch amendment, which was a little different from the first one. The second one was defeated, also.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The second vote was on June 3.

Mr. NORRIS. No; this was on April 14, 1938. The one to which I refer was defeated by a vote of 39 nays to 38 yeas. It was the same proposition in principle, and was again defeated.

Mr. President, I do not believe we can reach any other honest conclusion than that Congress must take some of the blame for the disgraceful things which have been shown in the Sheppard report. I think we are mainly to blame, and it seems to me that we ought to be fair enough to say that when an administrative officer is carrying out a law which we have enacted he would be justified, in this case, for instance, in letting politics creep in if he wanted to, although I do not think Mr. Hopkins did that.

Congress has been doing this kind of thing for a hundred years, and the result is that the people of the country, regardless of party, patriotic as they are, have grown up under a system of partisanship, in which corruption rules. It is understood that political officials must contribute to their party, to such an extent that it is not considered an evil, no matter what means are used to get the contribution. It is a general sentiment over the country-all wrong, in my judgment-all because Congress has built it up by the laws it has passed and through its failure to enact certain laws.

Mr. President, permit me to refer to an illustration in my own life which demonstrates the point. Two years ago I was a candidate for reelection to the Senate. The committee having charge of my campaign had a headquarters, received contributions, and did the usual work that comes to a political campaign committee. Long after the election, before I ever knew that this incident had occurred, in visiting with the man who had been chairman of that committee, he told me of this occurrence. He said, "There came into my office one day during that campaign a nice-looking woman, of middle age, who said: 'Here is $10, my contribution to Senator Norris' senatorial campaign."

He had never seen the woman before, and he said: "Who are you?" She told him her name.

"What does your husband do?"

"My husband is dead."

"Have you any children?"

I think the answer was that she had two minor children.

"What are you doing?"

"I am working for the W. P. A. I have a work job." "What did you do before you got that position?"

"I was on relief."

He said, "Who told you to come here? Who told you to make this contribution?"

She said, "Nobody."

"Did you ever talk with anyone about it?"
"No one on earth."

"Well, why did you come?"

"Why," she said, "is not that expected of all workers? Is not that expected of anybody who has a job? I don't know anything about politics, but in a general way I supposed that if I had a job I had to pay somebody."

The woman was very much surprised when he said to her, "I cannot take your money. We receive no contributions from people working for the W. P. A."

This incident demonstrates that the ordinary person in this country has lived under this kind of a system for so many years that it is a part of his life; it is taken as a natural thing.

I learned afterward, on making inquiry, that that committee had received various contributions from people on W. P. A. work. None of those contributions was asked for in the first place, and they were all returned. No one had been requested to make them.

Mr. President, is there any wonder that local politicians, local political bosses, interested in the success of some candidate for office, will find it very easy to go among these workers and people on the relief rolls, and get their pennies, get their small contributions, perhaps, to go into a corrupt political fund? The people will ask no questions about it; they will assume it must be done. They have heard of both political parties taking contributions from such people, they have heard of various people who were threatened with loss of their jobs if they did not contribute. So it was a country-wide condition which Harry Hopkins had to meet. It was an impossibility for him to keep politics out. He had the whole United States under his jurisdiction. He had to build up an organization covering the entire United States, and he had to depend upon the recommendations of someone.

I happen to know, because I have had conferences with him about his work, that one of the things that was almost a nightmare to him was the fact that politicians, so influential and powerful that it was extremely difficult to withstand the pressure, were making so many demands. There is no doubt in my mind that practically anyone in Mr. Hopkins' place would many times have compromised, at least in some degree, when this great pressure was brought to bear upon him.

At one time when I was in Mr. Hopkins' office he was telling me about a certain State, which has been mentioned in this debate, to which he had just sent a telegram, and he read me a copy of it. It was a telegram removing a high official in that State because Mr. Hopkins had gotten evidence which demonstrated to him that this man was insisting that the laborers on W. P. A. should make contributions, that a list of them had been given to politicians in order that they might solicit from them.

With such a sentiment prevailing over the country, generally understood by practically all the people, when the political boss in a county comes to a man who has a job and says, "I want a dollar a month," or "a dollar a week," or some other sum, to go into the campaign fund, what will that man say? He will be afraid to say anything. The probability is that he will make the contribution. He may take the money that ought to be used for the purchase of food for his starving family or clothes for his ragged wife; but his job is everything to him. The dirty politician and machine boss does not care whether he gets the money from starving babes and ragged women, so long as he gets the money. And the man above will never know about it; for such things cannot all be followed up.

Mr. President, I am going to show the Senate what happened in my own State. I am going to show how difficult it is to keep politics out of relief. Politics was not kept out of relief in my State. I do not suppose it was kept out anywhere. I think I shall be able to show as earnest and honest an effort to keep politics out of relief as ever was attempted by any human being.

I have before me some orders which were issued by the Works Progress Administration in my State. It will be found as I read them that most of them are connected up with Harry Hopkins himself. They refer to what he has said. They refer to orders he has given. They show an attempt on the part of a man in my State who wanted to carry out these orders, to bring the information home to every laborer and person employed on W. P. A., in order that he might protect himself against any attempt to get contributions from him or to influence his vote in any way.

I have before me a letter from J. R. Smith, addressed to me. I wrote Mr. Smith recently. I was familiar with these orders, but had not kept them all. Copies were sent to me at the time they were issued and I knew they existed. When Mr. Hopkins was appointed Secretary of Commerce I asked the State W. P. A. office to send me copies of all the orders Mr. Hopkins had issued regarding politics. The letter referred to is written by Mr. Smith, the deputy administrator in my State. It is dated January 17, 1939, and is as follows:

Mr. Felton-

He is the administrator-being absent from the city I am taking the liberty of answering your telegram of January 16, 1939. We are enclosing copies of all orders issued by Mr. Felton in Nebraska regarding political activities

On March 13, 1938, copy of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins' general letter No. 8 was mimeographed and sent to the attention of all W. P. A. workers. This was accompanied by memorandum to all district directors, copy of which is enclosed.

Administrative bulletin DA-136 was issued March 12, 1938, and Bulletin DA-134 was issued March 18, 1938. Memorandum was issued May 7, 1938, calling attention to Administrator Hopkins' radio talk on Politics and the W. P. A.

I have a copy of that order. I did not know of it until I read this letter, but I sent and got a copy, and later I shall ask permission to have it printed in the Congressional Record so that the whole record may be at the disposal of anyone who desires to read it:

On October 18, 1938, memorandum was issued and instructions to post this bulletin on all project bulletin boards.

In addition to the above written instructions verbal instructions were given numerous times to all field representatives and project supervisors that anyone using their position to influence W. P. A. workers' votes would be immediately dismissed by the Works Progress Administration.

Very truly yours,

J. R. SMITH, Deputy Administrator.

I am going to read the memoranda and orders referred to so that Senators may judge for themselves whether these men were trying to carry out the orders of their superior, Mr. Hopkins, to eliminate politics from the W. P. A., although the law we passed did not say that they should do it.

The following is written on the W. P. A.'s letterhead:

LINCOLN, NEBR., March 16, 1936.

To: All district directors. From: J. R. Smith, assistant State administrator. Subject: General letter No. 8.

We wish to call your particular attention to the copy of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins' general letter No. 8, which is being mimeographed and will be forwarded to you very shortly.

It is important that you see that this letter is delivered to each project foreman and that every W. P. A. worker has an opportunity to read the letter or have it explained to them.

Yours very truly.

J. R. SMITH, Assistant State Administrator.

Here is another order:

General letter No. 8.

To: All State works-progress administrators.
Subject: Notice to all W. P. A. workers.
All State works-progress administators are hereby instructed to post in every district office and to deliver to every project foreman an exact copy of the following regulation.

Mr. President, that general letter went to everyone connected with W. P. A. It was put in the hands of all the foremen, was placed on the bulletin board of every office. Here is what it said:

No employee of the Works Progress Administration, either administrative or engaged on a project, is required to make any contribution to any political party. No Works Progress Administration employee's job will be in jeop-ardy because of the failure of said employee to make such contribution

No employee of the Works Progress Administration shall at any No employee of the Works Progress Administration shall at any time solicit contributions for any political party, and evidence of such solicitation will be cause for immediate discharge. The question of whether or not to contribute to any political party is a matter entirely for the voluntary decision of said employee.

No person shall be employed or discharged by the Works Progress Administration on the ground of his support or nonsupport of any candidate of any political organization.

HARRY L. HOPKINS, Administrator.

I read another order dated March 12, 1938.

To: All field and area engineers, supervisors of women's and professional projects. From: D. F. Felton, State administrator. Subject: Political activity.

Field engineers and women's and professional project super-visors are hereby instructed to post in every office of the Nebraska Works Progress Administration, and to deliver to every foreman for posting on every project, the following regulations:

NOTICE

No employee of the Works Progress Administration, either administrative or engaged on a project, is required to make any contribution to any political party. No Works Progress Administration employee's job will be in jeopardy because of the failure of said employee to make such contribution.

Senators will notice that the notice contained in this order is practically a copy of the order sent out by Mr. Hopkins, which I previously read. This order came from Mr. Felton, State administrator, the man who had charge of all the works-progress projects in the State.

No employee of the Works Progress Administration shall at any time solicit contributions for any political party, and evidence of such solicitation will be cause for immediate discharge. The question of whether or not to contribute to any political party is a matter entirely for the voluntary decision of said employee.

Political solicitation in the guise of the sale of tickets—

That, Mr. President, is something new Political solicitation in the guise of sale of tickets, etc., is pro-hibited, as are solicitations of any kind during working hours. Foremen will be held responsible for halting solicitations during working hours.

No person shall be employed or discharged by the Works Progress Administration on the ground of his support or nonsupport of any candidate of any political party.

Supervisory employees are again warned against political activity in behalf of any party or candidate. Foremen must prevent any political talks or distribution of political literature during hours of work.

D. F. FELTON, State Administrator.

On March 18, 1938, Mr. Felton sent out another letter very similar in kind, directed to all Works Progress Administration employees. Inasmuch as it covers in principle the same ground as the one I have just read, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this order of Mr. Felton be printed at this point in my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The order referred to is as follows:

From: D. F. Felton, State administrator.

Subject: Political activities.

The question has again arisen as to the policy of this Administration with respect to individuals participating in political activities and having W. P. A. employment simultaneously.

No candidate for public office, or supporter of such candidate, shall be permitted to address workers or distribute campaign material during working hours of any project.

Project supervisors and administrative field staffs will be held personally responsible for any political activity on projects under their supervision. Dismissal is the penalty in all cases where violations of these regulations are found.

D. F. FELTON. State Administrator.

Mr. NORRIS. Coming down to October, just before the election, we find another letter from Mr. D. F. Felton, State administrator, addressed to project workers, foremen, supervisors, and administrative employees. It is as follows:

Works Progress Administration, Lincoln, Nebr., October 18, 1938.

To be posted on all project bulletin boards.

MEMORANDUM

To: Project workers, foremen, supervisors, and administrative employees

From: D. F. Felton, State administrator.

It is my desire, as expressed in repeated memoranda to the field, that everyone connected with our administration in any capacity should know and understand the rules under which we work. I especially desire that all be informed on any question involving especially desire that all be informed on any question involving personal rights.

I am repeating once more our rules regarding elections so that there can be absolutely no misunderstanding. Whatever your job, every person working for the W. P. A. has the right to vote for any candidate he chooses. Regardless of rumors, newspaper stories, or radio comments to the contrary, no W. P. A. worker is required to contribute to any political party or any campaign fund in order to hold his job. No one will lose his W. P. A. job because of his vote in any election or his failure to contribute to any campaign fund.

Moreover no supervisor or administrative person may attempt to influence the vote of any worker or solicit contributions to campaign funds from the people who work under him. Anyone who uses his position with the W. P. A. in any way to influence the votes of others by threat or intimidation will be dismissed. This has always been an absolute rule of the W. P. A. Administrator Harry L. Hopkins has repeatedly called attention of both you and myself to these rules. It is my responsibility and desire to see that there are no exceptions. I want you to let me know if anybody tries to tell you anything different.

I believe people of Nebraska know and appreciate the work which has been done. This is a big program and we are all responsible for seeing that it works. Personally I am proud of the fine things which W. P. A. workers in Nebraska have built and done. New wealth has been created and the life of the country has been enriched.

Your personal opinions and your politics are nobody's business but your own. I urge you as American citizens to take the responsibility vested in you for selecting those who, in your opinion, can best conduct our public affairs. We should appreciate and exercise the franchise given us by our form of government.

In order to permit you to take your individual part in the coming election, I am authorizing the closing of projects at noon on Tuesday November 8

Tuesday, November 8.

State Administrator.

I do not know how Mr. Felton could go any further. I do not know how anybody could in better faith try to keep politics and contributions to political parties out of the W. P. A. work and its duties.

It seems to me we ought first to consider the magnitude of this great undertaking. In Nebraska, where all these admonitions went out from the man at the head, there were nevertheless many instances in which local politicians in one way or another obtained possession of the lists and, in violation of all the rules and all the honest attempts to stop such practices, did the very things which were denounced. Such things were usually done, not by employees but by local politicians and county or municipal bosses.

I think it was quite as impossible to keep all politics out of the great work of which Mr. Hopkins had charge as it would be to fly without wings. It was an impossibility. No greater burden has ever been placed upon the shoulders of one man in all the history of our country. I think Mr. Hopkins did the best he could in a very difficult situation. In fact, when Congress refused to put any stipulation in any of the laws directing officials to keep politics out of the W. P. A. work, we gave the green light to go ahead to every executive who had charge of the enforcement of the law. It seems to me that in justice we ourselves ought to shoulder most of the blame.

Mr. Hopkins delivered an address over the radio on May 8, 1938. It is a long address. I have not read all of it myself. I did not happen to hear it over the radio. However, I should like to read one extract from it. It will be remembered that Mr. Felton, of Nebraska, the man who had charge of the work in that State, sent out a letter calling attention to the fact that Mr. Hopkins was to deliver this speech over the radio and telling when and how the address could be heard.

Mr. Hopkins said in his radio address:

I have sent a letter to every worker in this country who is participating in the program which I administer. It says in part:

"I want to repeat once more our rules about elections so that there can be absolutely no misunderstanding. Every person who works for the Works Progress Administration, whatever his job, has the right to vote in any election for any candidate he chooses. Moreover, no W. P. A. worker is required to contribute to any posupervisor may attempt to influence the vote of any worker or solicit contributions to campaign fund in order to hold his job. A., and it is my responsibility and yours to see that there are no exceptions. What's more, I want you to let me know if anybody tries to tell you anything different. Your personal opinions and your politics are nobody's business but your own."

Mr. President, I ask that the entire address be printed at this point in the RECORD as part of my remarks, without further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

POLITICS AND THE W. P. A.

For the sake of some unnamed critic who at this very moment may be planning to attack the W. P. A. for spending relief funds on radio time, I want to say at the outset that I am "not speaking at Government expense." This time is being contributed through the courtesy of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The radio chains and radio stations of this country have made available to the W. P. A., without cost, every minute of radio time we ever have used. I want to thank them publicly for their generosity.

On March 13, 1936, when the W. P. A. was only a few months old, I issued a notice to all W. P. A. workers which included the following sentences:

"No employee of the Works Progress Administration is required to make any contribution to any political party. No person shall be employed or discharged by the Works Progress Administration on the ground of his support or nonsupport of any candidate of any political organization."

of any political organization."

That statement was issued because 1936 was an election year and partisan voices were being raised in a thunder of charges that the holders of W. P. A. jobs were being coerced to vote in favor of the administration which had created the W. P. A.

Now we are in another election year, and again the charge is being made. It isn't being made in as many places as it was 2 years ago, and the opposition is being much nicer to me personally. They usually say: "Hopkins means all right, but he doesn't know what the local wardheelers are doing in the precincts."

I don't want anybody to think I regard these charges lightly, or feel they are not important. This is a serious matter. I know full well that the American people are very jealous about the way relief funds are administered, and deeply resent the idea of any political tampering with them. Surely I don't need to say at this late date how heartily I agree with this point of view.

The W. P. A's job is to direct the spending of Federal money this late date how heartily I agree with this point of view.

The W. P. A.'s job is to direct the spending of Federal money for work-relief projects in such a way that both the workers and the communities get the most for the money. Beyond that, the program is localized. Local officials pick out the improvements they want, and draw the plans. Local welfare officials certify to us the people who are eligible for W. P. A. jobs and we put as many of them to work as we can with the money Contract of the proportion of the proportion gress appropriates.

I don't want everything centralized and regimented any more than you do. We have to watch over this Federal money, and see that this program is sound and honest. Beyond that, it is up to each community, and the kind of local government you have

Is up to you.

I have sent a letter to every worker in this country who is participating in the program which I administer. It says in part:

"I want to repeat once more our rules about elections so that there can be absolutely no misunderstanding. Every person who works for the Works Progress Administration, whatever his job, has the right to vote in any election for any candidate he chooses. Moreover, no W. P. A. worker is required to contribute to any political party or any campaign fund in order to hold his job. No supervisor may attempt to influence the vote of any worker or solicit contributions to campaign funds from the people who work under him. Anyone who uses his position with the W. P. A. in any way to influence the votes of others by threat or intimidation will be dismissed.

"No one will lose his W. P. A. job because of his vote in any election or his failure to contribute to any campaign fund. This always has been an absolute rule of the W. P. A., and it is my responsibility and yours to see that there are no exceptions. What's more, I want you to let me know if anybody tries to tell you anything different. Your personal opinions and your politics are nobody's business but your own."

This letter will be placed in the hands of three and a half million workers. I now want to invite anybody who finds any evidence that this policy is not carried out to give me that evidence.

My subject tonight is "Politics and the W. P. A." and the question of whether W. P. A. workers will be permitted to vote as they please is just one part of it.

they please is just one part of it.

There are a number of other ways in which politics can be played with the question of unemployment relief. One of the most cowardly ways is to attack millions of unfortunate people whose only offense is that they can't find private jobs.

For years the few people who don't like Federal work relief have been saying that W. P. A. workers are a bunch of loafers who don't want to work, and who won't take private jobs when they are offered.

Now that the W. P. A. has been operating nearly 3 years, we have full documentary answers to those charges. The new charge have full documentary answers to those charges. The new charge this year is that W. P. A. workers are working too much—that they are getting out and finding extra work on the side. These stories grew out of a limited survey of several thousand skilled workers in five cities, where about 60 percent of this small group were found to be getting a day or two of extra work each month. I don't think this is important, in spite of the play it got in the papers, and I do think it is the perfectly natural thing for a good American workman to try to do.

Suppose you were a skilled worker with a family, under similar circumstances. Would you, or would you not, hunt odd jobs in your spare time?

circumstances. Would you, or would you not, hunt odd jobs in your spare time?

I am willing to grant that a great many W. P. A. workers probably are trying to get odd jobs on the side, even though only a few of the ablest and best trained are succeeding in even a small

But where does that put the political critics who still are saying that the unemployed don't want private jobs so long as they can take it easy on the W. P. A.? I have contended from the beginning that it is ridiculous even to entertain the thought that any important number of American workmen with families are going to cling to a W. P. A. job if there's a chance of something better. better conditions is so small as to be insignificant.

A. workers are not refusing decent private jobs. I can say that with complete confidence because for more than a year we have investigated every charge of this sort we could find. And out of the thousands of workers involved in such charges the number who actually refused to take decent jobs under decent conditions is so small as to be insignificant.

We visited 29 canneries because a produce company listed them and said they needed workers, and we found that only 1 of them needed a few women to clean strawberries. Over half of them weren't even operating. A contractors' association demanded that we stop W. P. A. construction in a certain State because it needed electricians. We immediately submitted the names of over 300 unemployed electricians in that State. It apologized to us, but it didn't hire any electricians. The demand was printed prominently in the papers, but not the apology.

There are hundreds of other stories like these in our files. We'll send summaries of them to anybody with an interest in them. It send summaries of them to anybody with an interest in them. I don't cite any of them in a spirit of intolerance, but only in fairness to the unemployed and to the W. P. A. Our workers want private jobs, and we want to help them get private jobs.

I want to make this appeal to all fair-minded Americans: Don't nistake political fiction for fact. Sensational charges too often are regarded as big news, no matter how flimsy the evidence on which they are based. When an investigation proves they were in no sense true it's old stuff and a line or two is printed about it back among the want ads.

It is often said or implied nowadays that a lot of Federal money as been wasted—particularly by the W. P. A. This, too, is politics—the political propaganda of people who are still unwilling to accept the idea that every citizen has a right to a certain minimum of security. They resent the beginnings that have been made in this direction because the Federal Government has made them, and Federal taxes are based upon ability to pay. Surely you can remember, all through 1930 and 31 and 32, how carefully and completely the Federal administration doded every responsiyou can remember, all through 1930 and '31 and '32, how carefully and completely the Federal administration dodged every responsibility for relief. This same crowd has fought the W. P. A. every inch of the way, and is still fighting it. It wants to return relief to the States. That not only will put the cost of it on real estate and sales taxes and take it off the income tax, but it also will lower relief standards generally.

These fellows are having a hard time with the W. P. A. First they said the workers wouldn't work, and now they say they work too much. First they said W. P. A. work was all boondoggling and leaf-raking, and now they say we're building too many fine big public improvements, and there ought to be a law not to let us build anything that costs more than $25,000!

I say to you once more that, in spite of overwhelming public

I say to you once more that, in spite of overwhelming public sentiment, this crowd still wants a dole for the unemployed instead of work, because in immediate dollar outlay a dole looks

I am always glad to argue with them that a dole is not cheaper to anybody who can see beyond his own nose. It is my conviction, and one of the strongest convictions I hold, that the Federal Government should never return to a direct relief program. It is degrading to the individual; it destroys morale and self-respect; it results in no increase in the wealth of the community; it tends to destroy the ability of the individual to perform useful work in the future and it tends to establish a permanent body of dependents. We should do away with direct relief for the unnelpoyed in the United States. We should reach a concept where the able-bodied unemployed are entitled to a job as a matter of

The giving of useful public work to the able-bodied unemployed appears, at first glance, to cost more. But what do you get for

I would like to take only the W. P. A., which is alleged to be one of the most wasteful of the emergency agencies, and do a little auditing of it for you. In its first 2 years of operation well over a million of its workers went back to private jobs. It is difficult to appraise the value of a thing like the human spirit, but I am convinced that those people kept fit and kept their heads up because of their W. P. A. work.

But we might deal only with tangible assets. The W. P. A. recently took a complete inventory of all the work that had been completed on its 158,000 projects. It has completed 43,000 miles of new roads and improved 116,000 miles. It has built 19,000 new bridges, 185,000 culverts, 105 new airports, 12,000 new schools and other public buildings, 8,000 parks and playgrounds, 15,000 small dams, 10,000 miles of water and sewer lines. W. P. A. workers have planted 10,000,000 trees and improved millions of acres of land in manifold ways. manifold ways.

Those are just a few of the accomplishments in the field of construction. Four-fifths of the program is construction work, because that is the kind of work which four-fifths of the needy unemployed can do best. The other one-fifth of the W. P. A. program consists of projects for what is generally known as white collar workers—unemployed men and women trained as clerks and doctors and salespeople and architects and nurses and artists and teachers and many other professional or technical pursuits. Some of the women have been trained only as housewives and yet are the eco-nomic heads of families.

Jobless W. P. A. teachers have taught more than a million Ameridoness w. F. A. teachers have taught more than a million American adults to read and write English, reducing illiteracy in this country almost one-fourth. Would you call that a tangible asset?

Women on the W. P. A. have produced 85,000,000 garments for men, women, and children who hadn't enough clothing. They have served 128,000,000 hot school lunches to hungry children and renovated 30,000,000 library and school books. Would you question the value of such services?

These are only a few of the things the Nation got because it had the courage to give public work to its able-bodied unemployed. These things constitute national wealth and national assets. Any private business which builds improvements to its physical plant counts those improvements as assets and considers itself richer ccunts those improvements as assets and considers itself richer because it has them. Government alone counts the cost of such improvements on the red side of the ledger without setting up the assets they represent on the black side. I am not particularly concerned about the bookkeeping so long as the American people know their money is not being wasted but is being used carefully and constructively to make democracy work.

Up to this point I have told you only what the W. P. A. says it has done. All the bookkeeping thus far has been our own, even though it has been honest bookkeeping. We are extremely fortunate, however, in being able to inject here the results of an independent Nation-wide study of the program which has just been completed.

Ten national organizations agreed with us near the close of last year that an impartial survey of the merits and demerits of the Federal works program would serve the public interest, and agreed to cooperate in such an undertaking. The organizations which to cooperate in such an undertaking. The organizations which cooperated are the American Engineering Council, the American Institute of Architects, the American Municipal Association, the American Public Welfare Association, the American Society of Planning Officials, the National Aeronautic Association, the National Education Association, the National Education Association, the Vnited States Bureau of Public Roads, and the United States Conference of Mayors. So much for the prestige of the survey, which was called the United States community-improvement appraisal. appraisal.

The appraisal was carried out in 42 States. About 9,000 local The appraisal was carried out in 42 States. About 9,000 local reports were submitted by the various community officials. These local reports were studied, judged, and evaluated in each State by a committee of civic leaders selected by the State sponsoring organization. These State appraisal committees included engineers, architects, labor leaders, farm leaders, heads of women's organizations, college presidents, social-welfare experts, bankers, ministers, editors and publishers, and many others.

I can give here only a few brief excerpts from the findings of these committees. But I hope they will convey to you, as they do to me, that the Federal works program is a far different thing in the eyes of those who really know it than its political opponents would have you believe.

Out on the coast we'll take northern California. I quote: "The most obvious characteristic of the community reports is their virtually unanimous endorsement, regardless of political differences, of the work-relief program. The public facilities constructed are permanent and much needed. The workmanship is found to compare favorably with private industry."

Here's the State of Washington: "Improvement projects have maintained a high technical standard, have been well planned, and in many cases have stimulated community planning. They could not have been undertaken without Federal aid. Work pay rolls have meant increased purchasing power."

In the Middle West, here is Minnesota: "The projects are not only useful but permanent, the quality of workmanship satisfactory."

factory.

Now Indiana: "Public-works improvement in Indiana is 10 years in advance of what it would have been without the various Federal programs. It is the opinion of the governmental officials of this State that the quality of workmanship is on the whole as good as that on private construction."

good as that on private construction."

Here's northeast Texas: "The projects have created in the workers a sense of real public service. The committee finds a wide variety of permanently useful projects carried on in a manner which commends public respect and approval."

Now, let's move over into the deep South, to Georgia: "The workmanship on construction projects compares favorably to that found on privately constructed jobs. The committee emphatically calls attention to the fact that there has been no suggestion of misuse of money."

Now, let's take two reports from New England, where unusually close scrutiny might be expected. Maine: "Many improvements of a highly desirable and permanent nature have resulted. The advantages of work relief over direct relief have been conclusively demonstrated."

Massachusetts: "Through the Federal works program, tax rates

Massachusetts: "Through the Federal works program, tax rates have been favorably affected and improvements of permanent value have been secured. The relative worthwhileness of the program to the needy unemployed is not debatable."

That's only 8 State reports, but there are 34 others like them.

I have not quoted them on the question of work versus the dole, because they all favor a work program for employable people. I hope a great many of you will look up the appraisal in your own

State, see who made it, and read it.

Evidence of this sort is why I have no hesitancy in speaking of the careful and constructive use of Federal money. I am proud to have been associated with the millions of hard-pressed men and women who stepped from the relief rolls and wrought such a record of achievement—such a triumph of democracy—across the face of this country.

I notice that the only living ex-President of the United States says we are headed extraight for faceless. He wants us to return to says we are headed straight for fascism. He wants us to return to the policies he pursued in 1930, 1931, and 1932. He wants, in some the policies he pursued in 1930, 1931, and 1932. He wants, in some occult way, to go in for production and work and yet to stop spending. He is still talking about waste in the W. P. A. and still wanting to return relief to the States. He proposes to take one-third of the present relief away from the unemployed.

Mr. Hoover has just come back from visits to several of the Fascist nations, and he ought to know certain things which seem to have escaped him completely.

What he seems to have missed entirely is the basic fact that fascism came to those countries because the masses were not getting their fair share of things and were willing to submit to anything in the way of a change.

fascism came to those countries because the masses were not getting their fair share of things and were willing to submit to anything in the way of a change.

I am entirely willing to lay down the record of this administration alongside that of Mr. Hoover for the purpose of judging whose policies make toward dictatorship. I wonder if his stubborn refusal to recognize realities, when the house was crumbling about his head, strengthened the people's faith in democracy. I wonder if the pious phrases he gave to millions of desperate people, while denying any Federal responsibility for relief, strengthened the popular faith in this form of government. I wonder if the tear gas with which he greeted the bonus army was his idea of the full flower of democracy. I say it is policies like these which strike at the existence of our form of government. Is it dictatorship to try to operate a government for all the people and not just a few? Is it dictatorship to guarantee the accounts of small bank depositors, and keep phony stocks and bonds off the market? Is it dictatorship to save millions of homes from foreclosure and make possible the financing of new ones? Is it dictatorship to give the farmer the same break as the manufacturer, and protect the rights of labor to bargain collectively? Is it dictatorship to give a measure of protection to millions who are economically insecure, and jobs to other millions who can't find work? Is it dictatorship to try to put a floor under wages and a ceiling over working hours?

I have confidence in this Nation's ability to solve its problems by democratic means. I think the American people are defer-

I have confidence in this Nation's ability to solve its problems by democratic means. I think the American people are deter-mined we shall go ahead instead of back—determined that the whole economic curve move uphill.

Conditions are serious today, but people are not frightened, as they were a few years ago. The measures I have just cited are reason they are not frightened.

This administration met the depression by fortifying the purchasing power of its people. It understood the effect on business activity of putting money in the pockets of workers and of putting workers on pay rolls. The measures put through by Congress set the wheels turning and raised the national income from $40,000,000,000 in 1932 to $68,000,000,000 in 1937.

What caused the present decline in business? I have my own opinions and I am quite sure that anybody who fixes on some one single cause of the decline is pretty sure to be wrong. It is very apparent that consumer incomes did not increase fast enough to apparent that consider incomes du not increase actuse of the decline is to duck behind words which do not explain. I believe that the major contributing factors were: (1) Purchasing power in the hands of consumers failed to keep pace with production; (2) tremendous increase in inventories; (3) the failure of the promising building revival because of rising costs; and (4) unwarranted increases in

Our problem is how to get the national income up—how to so treat destitution and low incomes and unemployment that the underprivileged one-third of the American people can become consumers, and thus participate in our economy.

The passing of the frontier left a gap which we have not filled. As long as we had a frontier, aggressive and resourceful individuals could repair the ravages to their families caused by the ups and downs of the business cycle. The new frontier is idle men, money and machines, and all the resourcefulness, ingenuity, and courage that resides in twelve or thirteen million unemployed is helpless to take up this new frontier without tremendous organization of productive forces such as only government can supply when business is in the doldrums. ness is in the doldrums.

Our failure to conquer this new frontier of idle overhead has cost us at least $200,000,000,000 in lost income we might have produced and didn't since 1929. That $200,000,000,000 is about equal to the 1932 value of the entire wealth of this Nation. We have been losing nearly every year since 1929 almost two-thirds as much as the entire national debt.

But raising the national income to full employment levels is not enough. To attain more than a fleeting prosperity, income must be distributed among the mass of people so that consumption can parallel output.

No one in his right mind is suggesting that we divide up the present national income. It has to go up. And certainly I do not believe that Government spending can do the whole job. Without the traditional investment of private money in a rising economy there can be no permanent recovery.

But a subsidy of purchasing power started the ball rolling 5 years ago, and it can start it again. This is not a new thing. Ever since the early days of the Nation, the Government has been in effect subsidizing purchasing power. It gave the railroad systems wast grants of land, and it gave the manufacturers protective fariffs. Why should anybody question further subsidies of puratariffs. Why should anybody question further subsidies of purchasing power, just because they are given to many individuals instead of a few?

The problem is not simple There are no ready panaceas for un-employment Sincere men and women will differ as to its cause and cure. Its solution can only be achieved by the fullest cooperation between Government, labor, agriculture, and business It can only be solved if they all work for the same end, avoiding wage only be solved if they all work for the same end, avoiding wage reductions, keeping prices in line, and reducing them as soon as unit costs justify it. It can only be solved if profits to business under genuine competition are encouraged; if labor is paid a fair wage; if the farmers attain a proper share in the national income, and if the great masses of people, who for any reason cannot obtain a minimum share in the national income, are protected by an all-inclusive program of social security.

On this basis I believe that not only can we get a rising national income but we will be able to maintain it, for it will be based upon income but we will be able to maintain it, for it will be based upon a balanced distribution of purchasing power and well-being among all the American people. That is the way to fulfill the destiny of a democracy, to provide economic security without regimentation, and, above all, to maintain the personal as well as economic freedom of every individual in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say. It has seemed to me that an injustice has been done Mr. Hopkins. I may be entirely wrong about it. From my personal contact with him, which has been quite limited, I admit, I had formed the belief that he was sincere; that he was honestly trying to do a very difficult job under very difficult and sometimes almost impossible circumstances. It seems to me that it is only fair that what I have put into the RECORD should go into the RECORD, not because I expect to convince any other Senator or change the vote of any other Senator, but because in all fairness, Senators, whatever your decision may be, I want all the record, so far as I know of it, to be presented for such consideration as you individually think it is entitled to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I doubt if there is any Member of the Senate who passed through a more difficult primary campaign than did the Senator from Maryland who now addresses the Senate. Every artifice that could be used was used by the National Government without stint, in the cruelest, most brutal, and most unwarranted interference in the affairs of a sovereign State in the history of this Republic. It seems almost anomalous, in the face of that situation, that the W. P. A. in my State was not more widely employed than it was.

One of the reasons why it was not more widely employed was that in the appointment of a director for the State of Maryland, at a time when I was consulted about such matters, I sought the best qualified man I could find in the entire length and breadth of my State, and I selected an outstanding engineer who had served on many big projects, one who had no political following or influence that was known. I told him when he took office that I hoped he would never allow, from me or anyone else, the slightest scintilla of political pressure to be exerted in the conduct of the W. P. A. in the State of Maryland. So far as I know, Colonel Dryden has lived up to what he said he would do at the time of his appointment.

However, Mr. President, there were others in the administration of W. P. A. in my State under him who were not so careful of their political activities as was the head. In one community workers were dismissed because they had Typings' pictures on their automobiles and wore Typings' buttons while working in W. P. A. gangs. In another section of the State the W. P. A. foreman handled the campaign of that great liberal who was my opponent in the last election. I can truthfully say that I never exerted the slightest bit of pressure on any employee of the Federal Government in my State, from the highest to the lowest. Nor did I ask any of them to contribute to my campaign fund; nor did I ask any of them to vote for me. They were as free, insofar as I was concerned, as if I had been in Siam during the conduct of that election.

But while that was the practice of the present speaker, who was only a candidate, higher authorities than Mr. Harry Hopkins did not live up to such ethics in the political arena. P. W. A. was used in my State for political purposes not merely by a few jobs here and there, but a $3,000,000 bridge, if you please, Mr. President, was dangled before the eyes of the people of my State in an effort to sway them from allegiance to my cause and to my support in that contest in one of the most disgraceful exhibitions of using political funds to sway the election ever known in the history of the entire world. There is not a Senator on the floor who will dare say that is not the case.

I introduced a bill in this body providing for the building of a bridge across the Potomac River 10 years ago and reintroduced it session after session, in the hope that private capital, at first, would become interested. The bill lay dormant and, in company with Representative Kennedy of my State at the last session, I again introduced the same bill, providing for the building of a bridge across the Potomac River in southern Maryland toward the Atlantic Ocean. The bill passed, and about 3 weeks before the election, although the bridge site was not in the congressional district of my opponent, and although he had had nothing to do with the passage of the bill providing for its construction, at that time the President of the United States, with Mr. Lewis, rode in an automobile provided for him by the people to the site of the bridge, and there, without any engineering examination, without any approval by P. W. A., without any preliminaries, the good people of my State were told that the bridge was going to be built immediately. Mr. Lewis was there ostensibly to take upon his shoulders credit for securing this bridge with the legislation for which he had nothing whatever to do in its conduct through the Congress.

So outrageous was the handling of that piece of political maneuvering that the entire press of the Nation rebelled, and the people of southern Maryland, who founded the colony of Maryland, stood there, like the fine men and women they are, absolutely unmoved even though a $3,000,-000 bridge was dangled before their eyes as bait. I may say parenthetically that one of the things I shall carry to the grave is the knowledge that in the election shortly following that occurrence they voted for me 3 to 1, even with the promise of a bridge to be built on their very shores. When one old tobacco farmer down in that section was asked by reporters if he was going to be present when Mr. Lewis and the President came down to inaugurate the building of that bridge he said, "I have got a date with a lady in Leonardtown on that day that I just cannot break." [Laughter.] And when the reporter asked him for whom he was going to vote, he said, "I ain't a telling."

That one little isolated incident was followed by a trip across the bay, not by the President of the United States but by the head of the Democratic Party, traveling on Government property, and when a landing was made at Crisfield, on the lower Eastern Shore, there the head of the Democratic Party rode in an automobile provided by the taxpayers, up the Eastern Shore to the city of Denton, where the Representative in Congress from the Eastern Shore has his home, for the Eastern Shore is one congressional district. Was that using Government property, was that expending Government money for political purposes?

Then the broadcasting company called me on the telephone and said, "Inasmuch, Senator, as our facilities are going to be given to the President free of any charge, we offer them to you free of any charge to make answer." I said, "That is unusual; your facilities are not being given to the President but to the head of the Democratic Party. You have charged me for every minute of time I have used up to this hour. What right has any man in America to have free time in this political contest while you charge me for every minute of time that I use? I do not want your free time, and I do not want you to give it to anybody else, for no man under our democratic form of government has a right to have free time on the air while every other candidate running for office must buy his time in the conduct of his political campaign." I was persuaded to take a Nationwide hook-up that would not cost me a cent, and then a Statewide hook-up, but I said I thought it was unfair, it was unjust, it was undemocratic; that in every debate that my opponent and I had had in the months that had passed we both had to buy time, but now time was to be given free to an outsider who was coming into my State to intervene in that election.

Why should we censure Harry Hopkins? Is there a man in this body who does not know that Harry Hopkins did no more than was expected of him? Why make fish of one and fowl of the other?

I believe Harry Hopkins would have acted in many of these cases if the green light had been given him to act. I believe his refusal to act was because he was advised to go very slowly in certain States; and I believe in their honest hearts most Senators will agree that that observation is sound and fair. Certainly Mr. Hopkins did nothing so blatantly wrong as was exhibited in the case of the proposed bridge across the Potomac River at Morgantown, in Charles County, Md In all these instances not an act can be pointed to that was inspired by Mr. Hopkins. I think he was guilty of negligence many times in not acting when information came to him about the conduct of the W. P. A.; but I do not believe Mr. Hopkins, except in some talk, inspired many of the pieces of chicanery which have been related on this floor. But in the case of the bridge to which I have referred, there is not the question of a doubt that it was ordered to be built to influence the election in the sovereign State of Maryland.

Where are the men who always find wrong in the conduct of elections—the men who voted out William Vare, of Pennsylvania, and Frank Smith, of Illinois, and other Senators for improper use of election funds? Where are they today? Most of them are as silent as the tomb, even though under their naked eye there was exhibited in this little State of mine, just over yonder, a circumstance which makes the Vare election machinery look like 30 cents on the dollar.

I could be vindictive and take it out on Mr. Hopkins, but I am going to vote for his confirmation, because if I did otherwise I should only be striking at the man who was not the front of these political operations.

We all know that in the recent primaries in many States every ounce of energy and support was thrown into the balance to determine the elections along certain lines. While I think Mr. Hopkins is a proper subject of censure, I should feel that I had not brought in the right verdict in the circumstances were I to take it all out on him, who claims that his loyalty as a "member of the team" is his way of performing his duties in the Cabinet or wherever he may be located.

Before I leave the subject of outside interference in State elections, I desire to read what four great Presidents of this country have said about it.

The first I shall read from is George Washington, who

There had been the most scrupulous and pointed caution observed on my part not to express a sentiment respecting the fitness of any candidate for representative that could be construed by the most violent torture of the words into an interference in favor of one or to the prejudice of another, conceiving that the exercise of an influence, however remote, would be improper; such conduct would have been incompatible with the rule I have observed of not interfering directly or indirectly with the suffrages of the people in the choice of their representatives.

Let me read what Thomas Jefferson had to say about interference in the election of representatives of the people:

From a very early period of my life-

He said-

I determined never to intermeddle with elections of the people and have invariably adhered to this determination. * * * I think the officers of the Federal Government are meddling too much with elections. * * Every officer of the Government may vote at elections according to his conscience; but we should betray the cause committed to our care were we to permit the influence of official patronage to be used to overthrow that cause. * * * I proposed scop effer coming into office to entain the event too forms. proposed soon after coming into office to enjoin the excutive officers from intermeddling with elections as inconsistent with the true principles of our Constitution. * * One thing I will say: That as to the future, interferences with elections, whether of the State or General Government, by officers of the latter, should be deemed cause for removal.

Those are pretty strong words.

Now let us see what John Tyler had to say when he became President of the United States:

The right to remove from office, while subjected to no just restraint, is inevitably destined to produce a spirit of crouching servility with the official corps, which, in order to uphold the hand which feeds them, would lead to direct and active interference in the elections, both State and Federal, thereby subjecting the course of State legislation to the dictation of the chief executive officer and making the will of that officer absolute and supreme. I will at a proper time invoke the action of Congress upon this subject, and shall readily acquiesce in the adoption of all proper measures which are calculated to arrest these evils, so that of denser in their tendency. so full of danger in their tendency.

And now let me read the words of the present President of the United States about the interference of the Government or its officers in State elections, uttered at a time when he was the Governor of New York State, and when the Federal Government, from an administration of a different political complexion than that to which he adhered, tried to invade New York State in order to influence the elections in that State.

Said President Roosevelt:

We, in this State, in every city, and on every farm know the high impropriety of interference by the Federal Government in the purely local affairs of any State, and we are fully conscious of the effective manner in which the people of this great State will at the polls show their resentment against such conduct. Before we look into the soundness of the instruction given to the people of this State by these representatives at Washington.

the people of this State by these representatives at Washington, we have a right to demand that they show their credentials.

It is hard for me to soar on the wings of idealism in the face of what has happened in my own State of Maryland. But that is not the whole story, Senators. The palace guards met in the White House itself, and there they determined that one of the most effective attacks on the Senator from Maryland would be to dismiss some Federal official, put in his place some temporary man, and then, after the election was over, give the office permanently to some man who had been right in that great struggle. I learned of this determination the night after the conference took place. By an odd chain of circumstances, I learned where the conference was held, who was present, and much of the conversation. I knew that the man they had picked to go was

Mr. Harry Webb, the Federal housing administrator of Maryland. Mr. Webb has about as much political influence in Maryland as I have in the State of Kansas or California. He is a real-estate man. He had never before held political office, and he took over the duties of that job because he was especially fitted to do the work.

I sent Mr. Stewart McDonald, the head of the Federal Housing Administration, this telegram, in substance:

I learned from authentic sources that a proposition is afoot to remove Mr. Harry Webb as director of Federal housing in Maryland, and place in his stead a man who is friendly to one of the Representatives in the House of Representatives from Maryland. and after the election to give the place to the manager of my opponent's campaign. Will you please affirm or deny?

I received no answer for 9 days. It was a hard thing to answer. The conspirators had been caught red-handed; and, even though my telegram was published in the press, they just could not figure out the right way to handle it. So after 9 days of waiting I sent another telegram, calling Mr. McDonald's attention to the first one, and asking that he give me a reply thereto. The fire was getting too close; so Mr. McDonald quickly called Mr. Webb on the telephone and asked him to come immediately to Washington.

It takes about an hour and ten minutes to get from Baltimore to Washington. There Mr. Webb was first bludgeoned and then entreated to resign; and being a man of some pride and dignity, feeling that he was not wanted, and not knowing anything about the political show—because I had not let him in on the secret—his resignation was gently extracted. Then the personnel officer gave out a statement that Mr. Webb had been asked to resign, while Mr. McDonald gave out a statement that Mr. Webb had voluntarily resigned, and both of the statements went to the press within 10 minutes of each other. They forgot to coordinate in issuing those statements.

Well, Mr. Webb was out. The temporary man was put in. The other day, after I received a mandate from the people of Maryland to the extent of 204,000 majority—44,000 more majority than President Roosevelt received in the great landslide of 1936, carrying every county in my State without an exception, carrying every district in Baltimore City without an exception, the only time the feat has been achieved in the history of our State—with that mandate, my opponent's campaign manager was appointed to be the Federal director of housing in the State of Maryland, and thus the statement in my telegram had come true.

When the Federal housing bill was pending the Senator from Nebraska begged and plead with us to keep politics out of the Federal Housing Administration. He did not want the Senate to have the right to confirm those who were appointed, for fear we would select someone who might have a political string tied to him. So the law was written accordingly, and, far be it from me to say that politics was injected in the case I have just detailed. Mr. Mullikin was appointed Federal housing administrator, though he never in his entire life had any experience in handling Federal mortgages, which had been the main business of Mr. Webb, the old director. That is another patent illustration of what is going on today.

I could remain silent. I could be crouching and servile. I could come up to the mourners' bench. I could be very sweet and sorry, and perhaps I would be allowed to name some of the patronage in my own State. But, just as I was a free man before the primary, I am still a free man, and the representative first of the people who live in the State of Maryland, and of nobody else beneath God's sun.

I shall vote for the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins for the reasons I have detailed. To make fish of Mr. Hopkins, in the silence which will follow the recital of the facts I have just uttered, would be to pick out one man and hang him for murder and leave 55 other men, guilty of the offense, go scot free. If the Senate desires to go into this whole thing, if it wishes to clean house from top to bottom, that is one thing; but why make fish out of Mr. Hopkins, when he was only the tool, so to speak, of those in high authority, who, in my judgment, connived at the very actions which have been related on this floor?

You cannot drive the relief rolls up 50 percent in 1938, when they went down 30 percent in the same period in 1937, and explain it in any other way than that the appropriations were used for politics; and that is exactly what every Senator here knows was the case.

I wish to close as I opened. What is going to be done about the conduct of a high official who gives credit for the construction of a bridge to one of the candidates in a political campaign, outside of that candidate's own congressional district, and holds it up, as the press said, as an inducement to the people to vote for this hand-picked candidate to represent them in the Senate of the United States? If we are going to remain silent about that—and every man knows the facts I have related to be true—then I am not going to pick out Mr. Hopkins, a little bit of an agent, and slaughter him when the situation is as I have stated. What is going to be done about the removal of the Federal housing administrator in my State—a pure snatching of a man away to make office for the campaign manager of a defeated candidate? Where is all the talk about the mandates I heard in 1936? Mandates are convenient things with which to bamboozle legislators while they are with you, but they do not apply when the mandate comes against the thing for which you contend.

I expect to remain here for 2 years shorn of all patronage, shorn of all influence, although I received the largest vote ever given a candidate in the history of my State. That is democracy, Senators; and who is the defender of that course who will rise and say it is right? Is there a Senator on this floor who desires to rise and defend it? I pause for an answer. No one responding, I take it for granted that every man on this floor condemns such a course.

I see sitting before me my friend the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Minton], who, in the midst of a campaign, not in his own State, gave out a statement to the press that even if Tydings were elected he could not take his seat, the way the corporations were pouring money into the State to help elect him.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator ever see a statement like that coming from me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I saw it in many newspapers.

Mr. MINTON. Well, it is a dirty lie!

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to hear the Senator say so. Mr. MINTON. This is the first time I have heard of it.

Mr. MINTON. This is the first time I have heard of it.
Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to hear the Senator state that,

Mr. MINTON. I say it now, and I say that this is the first time I ever heard of such a thing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I saw the statement. I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. I am glad the Senator made the statement. I am glad to know it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to hear the Senator's denial.

Mr. MINTON. Never did I say a thing about the Senator's race in Maryland. That is the Senator's own business.
Mr. TYDINGS. I apologize to the Senator. I would not

Mr. TYDINGS. I apologize to the Senator. I would not have mentioned it except that I saw the statement in print, and it was not contradicted. I assumed, therefore, that the Senator had made it.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator know in what newspaper he saw it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot tell the Senator offhand.

Mr. MINTON. It was not Frank Kent's column, was it?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it was not. I assure the Senator that I should have been a little more cautious; I should have asked him in private, because there are a couple of columnists here in the Capitol who will print almost anything, and I will get around to them a little later. I am just starting.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is not referring to Frank Kent, is he?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. The Senator knows to whom I am referring.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. Kent is one of these peddlers of gossip.
Mr. TYDINGS. These, Senators, are the facts: We have just rung down the curtain on one of the most disgraceful political campaigns ever conducted in the history of this country. In the State of Georgia, represented by one of the best Senators in this body, another high official was removed, a man friendly to the Senator who was a candidate. So I might go on all over the country.

I defy any living human being in my own State to say that I ever solicited, directly or indirectly, a single dollar from any employee of the Federal Government, high or low; that I ever brought the slightest pressure on high or low to make any one of them vote, and I am sorry that people holding higher offices than that which I now occupy, and who should have had more consideration for the proprieties of the occasion, cannot say the same thing.

I could be vindictive. There are some facts upon which I could make out a good case in reason and righteousness for voting against Mr. Hopkins. I know Mr. Hopkins has been derelict. I do not think he has inspired any of these things, but I do not think he has been diligent when utterances have been made by those under him in the W. P. A. and when facts warranting action have been called to his attention. But I am going to believe that I know how such things occur. Mr. Hopkins is a "member of the team," and I am not going to shoot Mr. Hopkins in midair while he is flying from one loyalty perch across the room to another loyalty perch. [Laughter.]

A few years ago I had to cast a vote on the seating of Senator Vare, of Pennsylvania, and Senator Smith, of Illinois. While at times I am a little quick tempered, I hope that if I can possibly help it I am not keen to do harm, no matter how justified, to any man. It was a difficult matter for me to vote William Vare and Frank Smith out of the Senate. I know something about practical politics, and I know that in the welter of a political campaign perhaps none of us are so pure that we in every little respect and degree have kept the faith. I did not want to sit here like a hypocrite and send those men out, and remain here with others who I thought perhaps deserved their seats no more than Vare and Smith. But as the evidence of slush funds in Pennsylvania and in Illinois unfolded, the Senate almost unanimously voted to unseat those men. I can see the righteous anger with which the credentials of those two Senators were attacked by men who today are on the other side. All that is done now is good and pure and lovely and beautiful! All that has taken place is of no consequence. The great desire to keep politics out of this and that is all glossed over in a wave and a splurge of words and oratory. That is the situation in the United States Senate today, that defenders of the faith of the ballot, if you please, have now all departed from their old, accustomed stations.

I shall not blame any one for voting against the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins, not that he has been guilty of acts of commission, perhaps, although some of his statements amount to that, as much as he has committed mistakes of omission by not disciplining those who have been parties to the practices which the Senate investigating committee have brought to light on this floor. But I have a feeling that somehow or other Mr. Hopkins in his mistakes was guided by a strong, unseen hand, and I am just going to be human enough to give Mr. Hopkins another chance, because I know that the real, motivating force behind whatever sins of omission there might have been will be entirely overlooked in this debate, except perhaps insofar as I have been so indiscreet as to mention it myself.

I do not know what we can do about such matters as happened in southern Maryland. I do not know what we can do about free use of the radio time to attack a man in his own State while charging him for all the time taken by him in his own speeches. I do not know what can be done about the matter of traveling in Government-owned property to make campaign speeches and to take part in elections. I do not know what we can do about the removal of Mr. Webb, a poor innocent bystander, a man whose loyalty to President Roosevelt could never be questioned, who contributed far beyond his means to both the campaign funds, and who at times remonstrated with me because I did not always stay in line on each and every proposition which was advanced. But because he liked me, although he never made a speech in his life, or to my knowledge ever asked any one to vote for anybody else, and in order to make a berth to be at the disposal of those who were parties to this whole scheme of political manipulation, he had to walk the plank, and just 3 weeks ago in his place was put the campaign manager of my opponent.

And now there has come to the Senate another matter. The Representative from the Eastern Shore, Representative Goldsborough, whose home town is Denton, where the meeting was held against Senator Tydings and for Lewis, has just been nominated as United States district judge for the District of Columbia. I would not say and I do not wish to imply that there was anything improper in Mr. Goldsborough's appointment. On the contrary, so far as I know, there is nothing improper in it. It is, however, significant that the nomination should be here, and I mention it only to show that my mandate in such matters is not as great as some people in 1936 said might be the case if one were lucky enough to get a mandate.

This, Senators, is briefly my own position in this matter. For the reasons I have stated I shall vote for Mr. Hopkins, feeling that I should be punishing the child rather than the parent were I to withhold my consent to his confirmation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a moment or two. I desire to speak just a few words in behalf of the confirmation of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce.

I never knew Mr. Hopkins until he came here as W. P. A. Administrator. Before meeting him I heard him make a speech at a relief gathering in Washington. He made a fine impression upon me at that time, and afterward when I became more closely associated with him I found him to be one of the most delightful of gentlemen and a high-minded, honest public official. I do not know of a more kindly, patient, forbearing, sensible gentleman, or a man more attentive or zealous in his work.

Notwithstanding all the criticism which has been made of him, I am convinced that Mr. Hopkins has made as good a W. P. A. Administrator as any man who could have been appointed to that job. He has made mistakes, of course, but what man worth a continental has not made mistakes? Taking it by and large, I think Mr. Hopkins has done a good job. I know he is a perfectly honest man; he is a well-educated man; he is gifted with a striking and delightful personality; he has had a vast experience, and I do not know of anyone who would fit in better as Secretary of Commerce than Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. Hopkins has the ability, the personality, the education, and the experience in public affairs which fit him for the duties of this particular office. I sincerely hope the majority by which he is confirmed will be a very large one. Unless I am tremendously mistaken, it will be a large one. Mr. Hopkins deserves the large vote he will receive in the Senate.

Mr. President, yesterday the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed] had something to say about W. P. A. in Tennessee, and about the report of the Senate committee in that behalf. I have that report in my hand, and I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the report dealing with Tennessee, as it appears on pages 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and part of page 23, be printed in the Record at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Tennessee: The report of our investigators in Tennessee shows that there was a vigorous effort throughout the State to raise campaign funds by contributions from Federal employees in behalf of the coalition group, to wit, Cooper-Stewart-Hudson ticket, including not only those having civil-service status, but those having relief classifications as well, with circumstances in certain instances indicating intimidation and coercion, or efforts partaking of intimidation and coercion;

That such employees included not only certified and nonrelief workers of W. P. A., but certain employees of other Federal agencies, such as employees of the soldiers' home at Mountain City, Tenn., employees of the Postal Service, employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, employees of the Bureau of Public Roads, and other

Revenue, employees of the Bureau of Public Roads, and other governmental agencies;

That contributions from Federal employees for the coalition ticket were solicited by attorneys and other persons and from W. P. A. noncertified workers by foremen, timekeepers, and others with the knowledge of ranking W. P. A. officials; and that similar contributions were solicited and obtained for the Browning group—that is, the group in opposition to the so-called coalition ticket in the primary—from State employees whose salaries were derived in part from Federal funds: from Federal funds

That there was a failure to keep lists of names, addresses, and amounts of contributions for senatorial candidates in many counties by county campaign workers and managers; that this practice occurred to such an extent as to make it virtually impossible to occurred to such an extent as to make it virtually impossible to determine the amount of funds expended for political purposes by both sides in the primary;

That poll-tax receipts, which are prerequisite to voting by persons between the ages of 21 and 60 years, were frequently purchased in bulk by friends of candidates for office on both sides for the purpose

That Works Progress Administration labor and materials, paid for with funds appropriated by the Congress for emergency relief purposes, namely, farm-to-market roads, have been used in the construction, improvement, and repair of private drives and roadways under circumstances and conditions giving rise to a fair construction, improvement, and repair of private drives and roadways under circumstances and conditions giving rise to a fair inference that such use may have been suffered and permitted for the purpose of influencing votes and voting in behalf of both sides.

As an example of methods employed, a laborer in the Post Office Service at Knoxville testified under oath that about July 2, 1938, he received a letter asking him to call at the office of a prominent attorney, a former United States district attorney, and was told when he arrived there that he would be expected to subscribe a certain amount of money to be used for the coalition ticket, including the coalition candidate for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator, Hon. Tom Stewart; that he knew of 10 or 15 other postal employees who had received similar letters; that the letter was addressed to him at the place of his employment, a United States post office, and received by him there. The Federal law makes solicitation by anyone of a Government employee for a subscription for a political purpose in a Government building a felony punishable by fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 3 years, or both, and it has been held in court decisions that a subscription requested by letter when the letter is addressed to a Federal employee at a Federal building is the same as a solicitation within the building (209 U. S. 39; 163 Fed. 926). The attorney testified under oath that he addressed a number of letters to post-office employees who were Democrats but addressed them all at their homes; that a number of employees calling on him in response to these letters, made contributions to him for the coalition ticket, of which he kept no record, and the total amount of which he did not remember; and that he delivered these contributions to the county chairman, Seaton Garrett.

The committee has evidence of similar solicitation by W. P. A. Garrett.

The committee has evidence of similar solicitation by W. P. A. workers and private parties in different parts of the State in behalf of both sides.

behalf of both sides.

Seaton Garrett, county chairman of the coalition ticket for Knox County, testified before one of our investigators that he made no report or return to any official of the amounts collected by him in Knox County for the coalition ticket. Similar testimony to that of the former United States district attorney and Garrett was taken in various parts of the State by our investigators.

An employee at the soldiers home at Mountain City, Tenn., testified that a few weeks prior to the primary election of August 4, 1938, several sample beliots were passed around, and the employees were given to understand that this was the way the superintendance.

1938, several sample bailots were passed around, and the employees were given to understand that this was the way the superintendent expected the employees to vote. Several other employees also made affidavits as to circulation of sample ballots at the soldiers home in behalf of the Cooper-Hudson-Stewart ticket. A number of employees at the soldiers home denied that activities of this kind had taken place, but the weight of the evidence, in the opinion of the committee, is the other way.

The committee received charges from John R. Neal, Senator George L. Berry, and O. M. Tate, Jr.

Mr. Neal's charges were as follows:

"First every State primary election official was illegally ap-

Mr. Neal's charges were as follows:

"First, every State primary election official was illegally appointed as board consisting of Federal Marshal Henry A. Bell, United States District Attorney Horace Frierson, W. P. A. Contractor Herbert S. Walters, former United States official Wardlaw Steele, and the active head of the Shelby County machine, Roxy Rice; second, the Shelby County machine senatorial candidate, Hon. Tom Stewart, has already spent many thousand dollars above ten thousand limit allowed by law, said funds being supplied by W. P. A. and other Federal officeholders through assessments against them; third, Shelby County, controlled by a machine that has twice been investigated and reprimanded by senatorial committees, has registered twice the number of legal voters and though a purge has been ordered, the State primary board, composed of a majority of Federal officeholders, can arbitrarily allow any person to vote whether registered or not, as no appeal is provided by Tennessee law to give any court jurisdiction; and because ballots and poll lists in Shelby County are invariably destroyed immediately after returns are reported, no evidence can be adduced in contests. Therefore, unless your committee impounds ballots and registration books as I request, candidates have no other redress; in recent county meetings connected with coming ballots and registration books as I request, candidates have no other redress; in recent county meetings connected with coming primary, deciding votes in every instance were cast by W. P. A. officials and workers. Customs and laws of 20 years' standing were swept aside and candidates refused representation on county boards, as provided by law. Many W. P. A. officials have assumed direct supervision of General Stewart's candidacy; for example, Mr. Seaton Garrett in Knox County. Immediate action urgent in view of short time remaining before primary."

The committee finds these charges were in the main not sustained. So far as the conduct of the election in Shelby County on primary election day is concerned the committee's investigators.

on primary election day is concerned, the committee's investigators reported no conditions or conduct calling for criticism by this reported no conditions or conduct calling for criticism by this committee.

Senator Berry's first charge was that—
"The administrator of W. P. A. in Tennessee, Col. Harry S. Berry, and his direct and immediate assistant, Mr. Rhoton Clift, were in fact, but not in name, the campaign directors of the coalition ticket in Tennessee, among which was one candidate for the Democratic nomination to the United States Senate. These facts have been submitted to the Administrator of W. P. A. at Washington and to other important and prominent officials in Washington prior to the results, requesting action to be taken in abridging this interference in the political affairs of the State of Tennessee, but without avail."

The investigation discloses that Col. Harry S. Berry, State administrator, and Mr. Rhoton Clift, deputy administrator of W. P. A., Nashville, Tenn., by sworn statements, deny that they had any part in the management of the coalition ticket. Senator Berry presented no evidence to sustain this charge. The committee, how-presented no evidence to sustain this charge. The committee, how-ever, directed its investigators to make an investigation of the charge. No evidence could be obtained to show that either Colonel charge. No evidence could be obtained to show that either Colonel Berry or Mr. Clift exerted any influence on employees of W. P. A. Evidence was obtained by the committee's investigators which showed that Colonel Berry had caused to be issued a statement regarding political activities of W. P. A. employees, both relief and nonrelief workers, and that this statement contained regulations providing penalties for including in any political activity while being employed by the Works Progress Administration.

Senator Berry's second charge was that—"It has been said, and my advice is that the statement came from the administrator, Col. Harry S. Berry, that they had raised from assessments and collections from W. P. A. personnel and relief workers $125,000. This can be sustained by placing Colonel Berry and Rhoton Clift under oath, and others who are prepared to take oath at the declaration. The latter persons are ascertainable."

The committee ordered its investigators to look into this charge, and they found no evidence to sustain it.

and they found no evidence to sustain it.

The third charge by Senator Berry was that—"In the month of July, and prior to the primary of August 4, 1938, many thousands of men were placed upon relief, among them great numbers were placed upon the lists of personnel."

numbers were placed upon the lists of personnel."

The investigation discloses that beginning about June 1, 1938, the Washington office of the Works Progress Administration started to increase the W. P. A. rolls in the States constituting region III, of which Tennessee is a part. The investigation discloses that Tennessee received a smaller increase in proportion to the other States comprising region III. The increase in the rolls was distributed on a mathematical basis to each and every one of the 95 counties, based on certified relief rolls of each county. This increase, therefore, necessitated a corresponding increase of personnel in the administrative and supervisory staffs of the Administration. This increase was proportionate and apparently had no relation to the administrative and supervisory stalls of the Administration. This increase was proportionate and apparently had no relation to the primary. The investigation also discloses that the increase of personnel by the W. P. A. of both relief workers and administrative employees was without the solicitation of State officials of the W. P. A. and was entirely at the instance of the National Administration in Washington.

The fourth charge advanced by Senator Power is that

The fourth charge advanced by Senator Berry is that—
"The W. P. A. in Tennessee solicited persons to accept positions with the W. P. A. who were not in need of employment and who were not subject to relief, but who possessed certain political influence."

The committee found no evidence to sustain this charge. Senator Berry's fifth charge is that—"It has been stated, and it is my belief to be a direct statement, that during the month of July, and immediately prior to the primary of August 4, 1938, that W. P. A. checks were sent in Tennessee and received by persons who had not contributed nor had been previously employed in W. P. A. duties and activities as measured by the purpose of the Congress of the United States in appropriation of the money."

The committee found no evidence to sustain this charge. The sixth charge submitted by Senator Berry is as follows:

"From the daily press I have observed that during the extraor-dinary month of July 1938 the W. P. A. administrator in Tennes-see announced an increase in the amounts to be paid men upon relief. It is extraordinary that this should occur, of course, during the month of July 1938, when a Democratic primary campaign was being held."

On this point Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator, made the following statement to this committee:

"It is a matter of long-established record that States in the southern region have often protested the disparity in wages paid to the W. P. A. workers in this region and the scale paid in other regions. With the increased distress in the South among the unemployed, it became apparent that the wage scale should be W. P. A. in the 1937 Appropriation Act, however, made it impossible to do this. As soon as the 1938 appropriation became available the W. P. A. was able to make these long-deferred adjustments."

The seventh charge submitted by Senator Berry is as follows: "In addition to the foregoing, attention is directed to the fact that solicitations and collections were made in the city of Washthat solicitations and collections were made in the city of Washington among Tennesseans employed in the Federal service, both in and out of the civil-service category. Visits were made by persons to departments and the threat of coercion and intimidation was imposed in order to secure moneys, all of which were used in the Democratic primary in behalf of the coalition ticket—among which one was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the senatorship of the United States. This fact can be determined by your committee upon investigation of Tennesseans employed in departments in the city of Washington, both civil-service and nondepartments in the city of Washington, both civil-service and non-civil-service personnel."

The committee found nothing to substantiate this charge. On October 13, 1938, Mr. O. M. Tate, Jr., manager for Harley Fowler, Republican nominee for the United States Senate in Knoxville, Tenn., addressed a letter to the chairman of the committee, stating that-

"T have endeavored for the last few days to get in touch with the agents of your committee in Tennessee to lay before them information which I have concerning alleged violations of section 312 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act but have been unable to contact them. If they are still in Tennessee, and in this locality, I would appreciate your having them get in touch with me."

After this letter was received an investigator was sent into Tennessee, with instructions to correct Mr. Total and to look into his

After this letter was received an investigator was sent into Tennessee with instructions to contact Mr. Tate and to look into his charge. This investigator made a report to the committee, in which he stated that he had contacted Mr. O. M. Tate, Jr., and that Mr. Tate stated that he was Mr. Fowler's campaign manager, and that he had received a letter addressed to Mr. Fowler from one T. L. Thompson stating that W. P. A. workers in his locality were being forced to contribute to the campaign of the Democratic nominee, but that he personally had no direct evidence or knowledge of any W. P. A. worker being forced to contribute to any campaign fund but had heard from numerous sources that this was being done. The investigator reported that from affidavits obtained from relief workers on W. P. A. in that locality that W. P. A. foremen and timekeepers solicited donations for Democratic candidates from such workers. However, the foremen and timekeepers referred to made affidavits denying such solicitation. solicitation.

In reference to the nomination to the Senate of Hon. A. T. Stewart, who was elected in the general election, the committee finds no evidence justifying any question as to his right to his

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the principal one, possibly the only one who attacked the W. P. A. in Tennessee, was Dr. John R. Neal, who received about four-thousand-odd votes out of a total of over 400,000 votes, and who runs for office in our State practically every 2 years, either for senator or Governor, and receives about the same vote. Dr. Neal made charges which the committee finds are without foundation. In fact, it holds against Dr. Neal's charges. Dr. Neal levied his charges principally against Shelby County, the county seat of which is Memphis, where I live. I quote from the committee report:

The committee finds these charges-

Meaning all of Neal's chargeswere in the main not sustained.

Then the committee continues to say:

So far as the conduct of the election in Shelby County on primary election day is concerned, the committee's investigators reported no conditions or conduct calling for criticism by this committee.

Then it takes up the charges made by former Senator Berry from our State. I think they were seven in number. It sets out the charges specifically, and then it finds that not a single one of the charges made by former Senator Berry is well founded. Those charges refer principally to the W. P. A., and it was found that they were not sustained.

I call attention to the end of the report of the committee on Tennessee, to be found on page 23, where, referring to my present colleague, the committee said:

In reference to the nomination to the Senate of Hon. A. T. Stewart, who was elected in the general election, the committee finds no evidence justifying any question of his right to his seat.

Mr. President, I think the junior Senator from Kansas referred to one thing critical of the situation in Tennessee; and at this point I ask unanimous consent to have reprinted in the RECORD the affidavit of the only witness who made the charge as to the condition at the Johnson City Veterans' facility and the letters of General Hines and others who examined into the matter. Those documents provide a full refutation of that charge. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask that those letters and the affidavit be reprinted in the RECORD at this point as they are found on pages 47 and 48 of the Appendix to the Congressional Record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ERBY HARRISON. Sworn to and subscribed before me this 3d of August 1938. (Signed) L. W. OAKES, N. P. My commission expires October 23, 1938.

Referred to Veterans' Administration: The committee's decision was to refer this affidavit, with its enclosure, to the Veterans' Administration requesting that an investigation be made and that the committee be advised as to the outcome. Pursuant to this ac-tion taken by the committee, this case on September 8, 1938, was referred to the Veterans' Administration for investigation.

Letter from Veterans' Administration: On November 3, 1938, the chairman laid before the committee a letter of October 21, 1938, in further reference to the case of Erby O. Harrison.

OCTOBER 21, 1938.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
My Dear Senator Sheppard: Further reference is made to your letter of September 8, 1938, concerning Mr. Erby O. Harrison, which was acknowledged by Mr. A. D. Hiller, executive assistant to the Administrator on September 15, 1938.

I have caused further inquiry to be made in this matter, and from the information obtained it appears that this former employee voluntarily submitted his resignation as an employee of this Administration because of his resentment of instructions given him with reference to the performance of his duties, and that he was not compelled or requested to resign for political reasons as allowed by him. sons, as alleged by him.

Your interest in this matter is appreciated, and any information obtained by your special committee indicating that this or any other employee of this Administration has been discriminated against or persecuted for political reasons will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

Decision on Harrison case: After further considering the record of this case, the committee decision was that the charge was not sustained by the evidence.

Senator KENNETH D. McKELLAR,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senators: Copy of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures and Use of Governmental Funds in 1938 received, and in view of the wide publicity given to this report, said publicity leaving the inference that the management of this facility was guilty of political coercion and political activity. I am writing you to protest such unfair accurations unfair accusations.

Only one affidavit was secured as to sample ballots being distributed, that being the affidavit of Erby Harrison, this case being reported as docket No. 726 and found on page 349 of the committee's report. It was referred to Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator, who in turn made an investigation and who wrote Senator Sheppard under date of October 21, 1938, stating the true facts in connection with the Erby Harrison case. The decision, as found on page 351, states as follows: "After further considering the record of this case, the committee decision was that the charge was not sustained by the evidence."

There are some 600 employees working at this facility, and

There are some 600 employees working at this facility, and every effort was made to prevent political activity during the last August primary. Every department head was instructed specifically to prevent distribution of political literature, circulars, stickers, etc., and the rules as laid down by the Veterans' Administration and the United States Civil Service Commission were rigidly enforced in connection with political activity.

ministration and the United States Civil Service Commission were rigidly enforced in connection with political activity.

Approximately 15 of the 600 employees testified before the Sheppard committee and all 15 stated under oath that there was not any political activity on the station and that sample ballots were not distributed. Approximately 585 employees were never even interviewed and yet this facility has been branded unfairly by the committee when it states on page 333 that the weight of the evidence indicated that sample ballots were distributed and employees were forced to vote for the coalition ticket. This conclusion of the committee was made in spite of the fact that a number of employees denied that activities of this kind had taken place.

I respectfully request that we be confronted with any testimony given by outside sources as to political activity at this station and that the 600 employees who are attempting to obey the rules of the Veterans' Administration and the United States Civil Service Commission be given an opportunity under oath to testify if we are to be condemned on an ex parte hearing of unknown witnesses

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LEE B. HARR. Manager.

Senator KENNETH D. McKELLAR,

Senate Office Building:

Report of investigating committee published Johnson City Press January 3 accuses superintendent, veterans' facility, distributing sample ballots. Accusation false. Demand show-down as head laundry department. Have 22 employees and all will testify under oath charges false.

D. L. KINSLAND, Superintendent of Laundry.

JOHNSON CITY, TENN., January 4, 1939.

Senator KENNETH McKELLAR,

Senate Office Building:
As head of hospital department, this facility with 250 employees immediately under my supervision, resent Sheppard's report that sample ballots were distributed to employees here and that political coercion was practiced. No witnesses were called from my group of employees, and any and all of us will be glad to testify under oath that such report is untrue and unwarranted.

J. H. S. MORISON, Chief Medical Officer.

JOHNSON CITY, TENN., January 4, 1939. Senator Kenneth D. McKellar,

Senate Office Building: Disgusted with unfair report of Sheppard committee. Have 74 employees under my jurisdiction and was charged specifically with responsibility of prohibiting political activity on station. These attacks are for sole purpose of hurting your friends here, and in my opinion you in 1940.

DAVID H. TAYLOR.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he would object to reading into the RECORD what the Sheppard committee said about Tennessee on pages 18 and 19 of its report?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator desires to have it inserted in the RECORD, I have no objection.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the portions of the report of the Sheppard committee on Tennessee, to be found on pages 18 and 19 of the committee report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt] asked that portions of pages 18 and 19 of part I of the Sheppard committee report, be printed in the RECORD. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I have already asked and obtained unanimous consent to have that part of the report printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and it is not necessary to print it a second time.

Mr. HOLT. Since the request has already been made and granted to have the matter referred to printed in the RECORD, I withdraw my request to have it printed. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn. Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on the pending question.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor. Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire as to the present status of the pending question as it affects the debate. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to address the Chamber at this time?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to address the Chamber at this time. I desire the opportunity of speaking for about 30 or 35 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not yield for that purpose at this

Mr. President, I had hoped that we would conclude the consideration of this nomination today before we adjourned. A number of Senators have indicated their desire to address the Senate on the Hopkins nomination. I have no desire to keep them here to an unduly late hour today. I find that a number of them, thinking there would be no session tomorrow, have made other arrangements. I do not wish to inconvenience them in regard to the arrangements they have made. If the matter goes over until Monday, I am wondering whether we can enter into an agreement to limit debate during the remainder of the consideration of this nomination.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I have made some inquiry, and I think such agreement can be reached, if a limitation of 20 minutes be placed on each Senator who wishes to speak.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the suggestion I intended to make. I ask unanimous consent that beginning with the assembling of the Senate on Monday all debate in connection with the further consideration of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins be limited to one speech by any Senator, and that he shall speak no longer than 20 minutes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will not make that 30 minutes instead of 20 minutes?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no personal objection to making it 30 minutes. The Senator from West Virginia advises me that he wishes to occupy 30 minutes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that.
Mr. BARKLEY. I modify the request therefore and ask that beginning on Monday, during the further consideration of this nomination, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 30 minutes on the question of the nomination now under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret that it will be impossible for me to attend the session of the Senate on Monday because of an engagement in the State of Massachusetts made many months ago. In the meantime I shall try to obtain a pair. If I shall not be successful, I wish the Record to show that, if present on the question of confirming the nomination of Mr. Hopkins, I would vote "yea."

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, while we are in executive session, I ask that the calendar be called for the further consideration of nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read in their order the remaining nominations on the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Forrest F. Hill, of New York, to be Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Franklin W. Hancock, Jr., of North Carolina, to be a member of the Federal Home Lcan Bank Board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions in the Coast Guard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations for promotions in the Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations for promotions in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc

That concludes the nominations on the calendar, with the exception of that of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven and in every manifestation of living nature, we turn our thoughts to Thee with the approach of these sacred moments. Thou art now here; we regret that we are not better. Forgive us, dear Lord, and give us another chance. So strengthen us that we shall avoid that which impairs the tenderness of conscience, obscures the sense of God, or takes the inspiration from spiritual things. We thank Thee for all our hopes and for the delight in sweet anticipations. Enable us to labor patiently, accept discipline willingly, and do our work as men strong, brave, and true. Let us yield ourselves to the Spirit Divine, who gives vision, freshness, and bestows blessings richly to enjoy. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 118)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and ordered to be printed:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, January 19, 1939.

My Dear Mr. Speaker: The powers conferred by section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, as amended, dealing with the stabilization fund, and the powers specified in paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933, as amended, relating to the fixing of the metallic content of the dollar, will expire on June 30, 1939.

The existence of these powers has enabled us to safeguard the Nation's interests and to carry forward international monetary and economic cooperation. It is obvious, however, that the international monetary and economic situation is still such that it would not be safe to permit such powers to be terminated. I believe the sound and wise policy to pursue under the circumstances is to extend these powers until January 15, 1941. The Secretary of the Treasury and other representatives of the Treasury Department will be available to discuss with the appropriate committees of Congress the problems relating to such legislation.

Very truly yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Hon. W. B BANKHEAD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

GOLDEN JUBILEE OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, the great State of Washington which is represented in this House by my colleagues and myself has attained the age of 50 years.

We are celebrating our State's fiftieth anniversary by designating the year 1939 as "Washington's Golden Jubilee Year."

Our State proudly bears the name of the Father of his Country, "Washington." In the 50 years since the Congress of the United States passed enabling legislation for the territory of Washington to become the State of Washington, we have had a most marvelous growth and development, and we have forged ahead until today we stand in the forefront among the great progressive States of this Union.

Within the confines of our State, we have former residents of every other State in the Union, and we are conscious of the great debt of gratitude we owe those pioneers whose intrepid spirit carried them across the wide-open spaces and caused them to endure the hardships incident to reaching the most northwest corner of this great Nation. These pioneers came, not only prepared to perform the difficult tasks of building a great State in a physical way, but they brought with them those fine spiritual and intellectual qualities that have meant so much to our State in its marvelous development and growth. The best ideas in the field of political, social, and economic science of the older States were here brought together, and as result we find the State that bears the revered name of Washington, occupying a high place among its sister States and reflecting honor, glory, and credit upon that great American after whom it was named. Let me predict that the accomplishments in the half century since our State was born will prove small by comparison with those that we shall see in this wonderful State during the next 50 years.

Without in the slightest attempting to detract from the distinction and the credit due any of her sister States, the young State of Washington feels that it can with just pride point to its own accomplishments in face of the fact that it is but one-third as old as the National Congress itself, which is this year celebrating its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary.

Our legislature has just recently assembled in its regular biennial session and this body has the unusual distinction of having in its membership more native-born sons and daughters than any previous legislature in the State's history, there being 50 members of the present legislature who were born, reared, and educated in the State, a number exactly corresponding to the number of years that mark the existence of the State. It has the further distinction of having as its chief executive a native-born son whose knowledge of the State, pride in its accomplishments, and love for it are not surpassed by anyone.

The Honorable Clarence D. Martin, our Governor, upon the convening of the legislature in Olympia, Wash., on January 11 of this year, preceding the delivery of his message to the legislature, delivered to that body and to the citizenship of the State of Washington a proclamation, proclaiming the year of 1939 "Washington's Golden Jubilee Year." [Applause.] It affords me an honor and pleasure to make that remarkable address a part of the permanent records of this Congress by including it in these remarks. The address is as

GOLDEN JUBILEE ADDRESS

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, senators and representatives, and you, my fellow citizens, who have pride and faith in our great State of Washington, 50 years ago our beloved State of Washington was born

So today, in honor of that memorable event, and with profound gratitude to the parents and their pioneering neighbors who made possible the things we now have and enjoy, I should like to speak briefly of the progress and future of our distinctive Commonwealth before presenting my formal message on the condition of the State and its government.

Some of our splendid elderly citizens remember July 4, 1889, when 75 sturdy, purposeful pioneers gathered here in Olympia to draft a constitution for a new State. They worked long and distribution as man will but they were in to draft a constitution for a new State. They worked long and hard, differing and disputing, as men will, but they were inspired by the same purpose, and they finally accomplished it—a constitution for a State of the highest principles of Americanism and democracy, a charter that declared Washington forever to be the abiding place of spiritual freedom, tolerance, charity, and good will. This document was ratified wholeheartedly by the people on October 1, 1889. Then, on November 11, 1889, President Benjamin Harrison proclaimed Washington a severeign State, and 300,000 men, women, and children rejoiced, and joyful celebrations were held in the then distant Spokane area, amid the rolling hills of the Palouse and Walla Walla, in the still unreclaimed valleys of Yakima, Chelan, and Okanogan; in the sparse settlements of Vancouver and the Columbia River, and all up and down the evergreen slopes and the lowlands of the Puget Sound country. And so, my friends, with pride and confidence, and with the cheering shouts of the pioneers, Washington took a place in the great cavalcade of American States.

Today we may proudly agree that Washington kept faith and measurably fulfilled the hopes and dreams of her founding pioneers, and kept pace with the most progressive of her sister States. In 1889, a backwoods territory of straggling settlements—the lawmakers plodding along mud-splashed paths to meet in dimly lighted frame hulldings.

lawmakers piodding along mud-splashed paths to meet in diffigured frame buildings.

In 1939, a proud State of 1,600,000 spirited Americans, a State of importance in industry, agriculture, commerce, and culture, a solid cornerstone of the United States—her legislators, you men and women who should glow with pride, meeting in a $14,000,000 capitol that is outranked by no State capitol in the Union, working in two legislative chambers that are not excelled by any legislative halls in the world.

Today, Washington stands first in the production of lumber; foremost in the production of wheat, dairy and poultry commodities, quality fruits and other products of the earth, the fields, and the hills.

Today, Washington has the finest of highway systems—modern, broad highways running into every part of the State, overcoming mountains, bringing remote communities near to all.

Today, Washington stands foremost in citizenship and culture—first in public education, high-school pupils, literacy, and literature reading.

And today, as always, the people of Washington need not yield to any State, region, or group of people in devotion to the ideals of Americanism, loyalty, tolerance, good will, and unashamed respect and reverence for religion and the things that are God's.

But such a remarkable record of progress within the span of 50 years should not, and must not, be ascribed only to human minds and human hands. Nature provided an exceptionally favorable setting for this noteworthy progress. Rugged snow-capped mountains, clear tumbling streams, sky-blue lakes, deep and calm landlocked salt waters, rolling hills, timbered hillsides, rustic countryside—all yielding abundantly of their peculiar products, yielding enchantment and inspiration, and a healthy environment for all. Our climate is ideal, devoid of extreme temperatures. So far we have no reason to fear elemental devastation—no earthquakes crumple our buildings, no tornadoes twist and carry away far we have no reason to fear elemental devastation—no earth-quakes crumple our buildings, no tornadoes twist and carry away our homes, no hailstorms destroy our crops. Truly, because of Nature's kindness, everyday life is more pleasant in Washington. My friends, we might easily leave these things go unnoticed, but it is manifestly appropriate that this record of progress and the blessings of Providence should be noted and observed. There-fore, as Governor, I am proud to proclaim this year of 1939, which marks the fiftieth anniversary of statehood, as golden jubilee year in the State of Washington.

jubilee year in the State of Washington.

I suggest, too, that this legislature should set aside a day for a joint session to formally open the golden jubilee observance, not only for your own inspiration, but as an example and incentive for all public authorities and good citizens to hold similar observances in their respective jurisdictions and communities. It might be well, if you decide on a session of commemoration, that you make some recognition of the 50 native sons and daughters among you—the largest number of born Washingtonians to ever sit in our legislature. I do not make this suggestion without heartfelt appreciation of the pioneers and other members of this legislature, but simply because a recognition of the native members might tend to impress our young people with the fact that they are of the first native generation to fully inherit this rich, unlimited heritage that is Washington, and the responsibility of developing and protecting it.

this rich, unlimited heritage that is Washington, and the responsibility of developing and protecting it.

Moreover, all of us might well make it a point to invite friends and good citizens of all parts of the country, and especially our neighbors of British Columbia, Idaho, Oregon, and California to visit us sometime during the year of the golden jubile—not only to enjoy the hospitality of an open-hearted citizenship, but also that they, too, may realize that it is indeed a privilege to live, and build, and grow in the State of Washington.

We should realize, and those who come to see us should know, that great as our progress has been, Washington's full bloom and glory still are ahead of us, that her destiny still is in the building glory still are ahead of us, that her destiny still is in the building. We have timber to cut, valleys to irrigate, minerals to mine, raw materials to process, commerce to expand, cheap electric power to utilize, Grand Coulee, Columbia Basin, Bonneville, Skagit, Roza. In fact, we have all the essentials to the building of a Washington far beyond the dreams of the pioneers—a Washington of still greater blessings to all of us who are so fortunate to live within her borders.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Leavy, Mr. Lemke, and Mr. Thorkelson asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and some remarks of certain members of the Government of Puerto Rico in regard to the sugar tariff.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico? There was no objection.

FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL, 1939

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2868, the first deficiency appropriation bill, fiscal year 1939; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may continue for 40 minutes, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2868, the first deficiency bill, fiscal year 1939, with Mr. Doxey in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising that there is some criticism of this bill as reported. It is seldom that any of the committees of the House bring in reports on any measure that meet with unanimous approval or adopt any conclusion on which there is complete accord. Regardless of what committee it is or the subject on which it reports, there are always some who take the position that the committee is either blocking the wheels of progress, or, on the other hand, driving headlong to national catastrophe, as the case may be. In that respect, the Committee on Appropriations is no exception to the rule. As a matter of fact, the Appropriations Committee has perhaps the most difficult task of any of the committees of the House in that it deals in cash, money on the barrel head, and there is no community or State or industry that is not sometime during the session an applicant, directly or indirectly, for allotments from the Federal Treasury, or their equivalent. As a result, it frequently gets to the point where Members or groups of Members feel that they are collectively discriminated against or personally agrieved because they have been denied appropriations the committee was not in position to approve, and so for that reason I wish here this afternoon, at the beginning of the session, before we take up the regular supply bills, to make the plea that was carried on a sign in one of the popular and turbulent dance halls of the West in pioneer days: "Don't shoot the fiddler. He is doing the best he can."

I hope Members will not hold it too much against the Committee on Appropriations when it cannot approve all requests and amendments, and that they will remember that the committee is in a very difficult position and is "doing the best it can."

In drafting the supply bills the Committee on Appropriations is between two fires. On one hand, we have the departments every year asking for more money and wider jurisdiction. We have in practically every estimate received from the departments an exemplification of the omnipresent human trait which magnifies the importance of its own work, and which constantly reaches out for new fields and broader administration. There are no exceptions to the rule.

In every department of the Government, bureaus and divisions are asking more money, larger staffs, and additional projects.

Every year, with every supply bill, the regular establishments grow more complex and reach out into fields undreamed of a decade ago. Every year the cost increases.

I have often heard the opinion expressed by experienced Members on both sides of the House that in every supply bill there are millions of dollars that could be saved. Undoubtedly that is true. For as the departments branch out and take on new duties, they also cling tenaciously to all the old activities and expenditures. For example—an extreme one perhaps, but significant of the trend—we formerly maintained a veterinary department here in the District of Columbia.

It was before the days of motorization, and all street and refuse work was handled by draft animals, and naturally we had to have a veterinary department, to look after them. Those horses and mules disappeared long ago in the van of the motors and trucks and tractors, which took over their tasks, but for many years afterward we still maintained a veterinary department to service horses and mules which had passed on to the Elysian fields.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House that the Appropriations Committee, knowing those facts, being familiar with the facts, brought in a bill providing for veterinarians to care for mules, when there were no mules?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. They did. That was when our former colleague, Mr. Simmons, of Nebraska, from the gentleman's side of the House, was chairman of the committee. When we came in we cut it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. It is encouraging to know that the gentleman has accomplished something.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It was not much of an accomplishment to improve on a record like that. Other instances could be cited. But there is another phase that should be noted. The departments are resourceful in keeping old activities and acquiring new functions. They are in touch with organizations over the country, most of them beneficiaries, which respond aggressively when an old appropriation is to be defended or a new appropriation secured. We had an amusing instance of this just a year or two ago when a sudden flood of letters and telegrams demanded appropriations for the establishment of "eccological" stations. So effective was the barrage that Members rushed in on the floor from all sides waving telegrams and demanding that the Union be saved. For the time it seemed that the amendment would be carried practically unanimously. The only thing that prevented what later proved would have been an unwise expenditure was that the committee asked the proponents of the amendment what "eccological" stations were and as none of them could define the word or explain the use of such stations, support of the amendment collapsed. Such demands from all sections of the country. prompted by grapevine directions from Washington, feature the consideration of practically every major appropriation bill brought up in the House. When analyzed, Members will find that such pressure telegrams and letters do not represent any appreciable sentiment in their districts and certainly do not justify raids on the Treasury against the carefully considered report of the committee which has studied the question for months, and has allowed every dollar the activity is entitled to receive.

Now, on the other side we have our colleagues asking for appropriations in which their constituencies are interested. I think the most difficult duty devolving on a committee is the denial of the request of a colleague. We always do so with reluctance. It would be much pleasanter to comply with the wishes of our friends and go along. In fact so trying is the unwelcome necessity of saying no that when a bill is finally reported you can be certain that if the committee has made any mistakes at all, it has erred on the side of prodigality rather than parsimony. And I would like to emphasize this one thing-here at the beginning of the session, before the supply bills come in and before any Member takes a position either one way or the other on items in these bills, I would like to ask you to guard against that old fallacy that the advisability of making an appropriation depends upon whether the money would be well ex-

You can justify almost any expenditure on that ground. You can show that the purpose for which it is to be expended is a laudable one and that it will serve a great need and result in immeasurable benefits to the country. But that is not the question. We have only so much money to spend. The income of the Government is fixed and definite. When we spend for one purpose that means we must take it away from some other purpose. We must write our appropriations to conform to the amount available for expenditure. We must cut the coat to the cloth. So the question is not whether the money would be well invested or whether the purpose for which it is to be expended is a desirable one. The one question to be considered is that among all the purposes for which we must appropriate, is the appropriation in question more desirable than others demanding consideration. We cannot look at each appropriation solely from its own point of view. We must look at the National Budget as a whole. And the problem which confronts the Appropriation Committee on every proposal is whether it fits into the picture or whether the money should be put to some other use for which there is more imperative need. It is wholly and solely a matter of relative need, and I hope our friends in the House will deal with us charitably and indulgently when, after due consideration, it seems to us that the money requested could be expended in some other way to better advantage. For that is the basic principle under which governments must operate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I wonder if the gentleman could let me have 5 additional minutes?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am sorry. The time has been fixed in the House. I would be delighted if the time were available.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I shall speak particularly relating to the hurricane in New England. Not many have taken the floor thus far relating to it. It is expected that amendments to this bill will be offered.

I am surprised to read this morning in the Washington Post, "House slashes storm funds in slap at Aiken," and that "members of the House Appropriations Committee said yesterday it was a spur to their 'economy-mindedness' in lopping off $3,750,000."

From the debate on the floor of the House yesterday it seemed, indeed, to be a spur to cut this appropriation as a slap at Governor Aiken or the New England States.

I am reminded that last year when Governor Aiken slapped his own Republican Party for lack of liberality, he was a hero on the Democratic side of the House. I am exceedingly familiar with the taking of land for lighthouses and Coast Guard stations and for similar purposes of the Federal Government, and that jurisdiction was requested and that conditions were generally imposed by the States. It is not a new doctrine advanced by Governor Aiken and New England.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Would the gentleman be good enough to name the members of the Appropriations Committee who made the statement that any cut in this appropriation was aimed at Governor Aiken?

Mr. GIFFORD. I quoted the newspaper this morning. Shall I read it to you?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If it contains the name of any member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course it does not, but it reads "A squabble with Vermont's Governor Aiken over States' rights, members of the House Appropriations Committee said yesterday was a spur," and so forth.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I say to the gentleman that no member of the Appropriations Committee made any such statement as that, either on or off the floor of the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman will have to forgive me for bringing this up because the New England newspapers will copy that assertion.

I want to speak particularly of this hurricane problem. It has not been brought sufficiently to your attention. I live in the southeastern section of New England, much of which was engulfed by the tidal wave. You may have a serious forestry problem, but I have a tidal-wave problem, with resulting destruction that was perhaps much greater.

Have the States of New England contributed sufficiently? From the records it appears that-

Some 600 lives were lost. The American Red Cross places the deaths at 488, with 100 additional missing. The Red Cross found that 93,122 families suffered more or less serious property loss; 6,933 summer dwellings, 1,999 other dwellings, and 2,065 boats were destroyed—property estimated at between $250,000,000 and $330,000,000.

This bill carries $3,000,000 for fire protection. You will notice that the total economic loss is estimated at $330,-000,000. Again from the record:

The loss of life has been greater in a few other hurricanes, but the property damage in that storm was the greatest that ever occurred in a single storm anywhere in the world.

The New England States, with all the available forces at their command, set immediately to work. Private citizens offered help in every manner possible. The National Guard of Massachusetts was in service for as much as a couple of weeks. The Massachusetts Legislature immediately bonded the State for $19,000,000 to meet this emergency. We suffered tremendous property loss and damage. Several towns in my district find that the storm has reduced their assessed valuation from 20 to 30 percent. Their tax rates, consequently, will greatly increase. What a suggestion-"that Massachusetts and the New England States have not contributed sufficiently"! And if they receive any of this $3,000,000 they will get it, if you please, only by matching the funds offered. We heard a recommendation yesterday that if $6,000,000 of wheat was in danger of destruction by grasshoppers we should appropriate $6,000,000 to kill grasshoppers. I am glad to vote to kill the grasshoppers—any reasonable amount for that. But do not use such funds to kill them on private property. That, at least, is your apparent position regarding fire hazards. New England is seemingly regarded a rich section. Never before in an emergency like this has money been appropriated in this manner? Ridiculous! Precedents are many, if, indeed, actual authorization under the law may have been lacking. We asked for $8,700,000; the Budget reported $5,000,000; the committee cut it down to $3,000,000, with the provision that funds should be matched before a grant would be made. The Budget recommended an appropriation of $5,000,000, stating that authority exists, as conditions were closely analogous to those which follow a major flood, earthquake, or other disaster creating a national emergency, and so on. Even foreign nations have received outright gifts in cases of disaster. But this happened in New England, the forgotten land of these days.

Is New England rich? The finger has been pointed at us often, and the assertion made that we were rich because of favorable action of Government relating to tariffs. What we do have is largely because of thrift-which is seemingly no longer regarded as a virtue. We sailed the seas, cultivated rocky soil, saved, and furnished the capital assets for much of the rest of the country. We are not asking unusual consideration. If lack of authorization is advanced at this time as an objection, let it be a precedent to be followed in the future for similar appropriations. Poor old New England! You hesitate to give her very much. You envy her apparent better general financial condition. You do not wish to accord her equal treatment. A Communist to his brother, "Fine weather." The other, "Yes, but the rich have it, too." [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield. The gentleman is to offer an amendment, I understand.

Mr. McCORMACK. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy, for I entertain for him the highest feeling of consideration and respect, but I wanted to make the observation that I think my friend does not want to leave the impression that even if other sections do not help New England today that we would not be big enough to help them if they had a similar problem tomorrow.

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly not, and they know we would. They know how much we love them. Why cannot they love us also?

Mr. RANKIN. We do. Mr. GIFFORD. I desire to discuss this hurricane damage a little further that I may bring home to you some realization of the damage wrought. In one instance a colony of 15 or 20 acres covered with small summer homes was entirely demolished. If it had happened 2 weeks previous, when occupied by its summer visitors, the loss of life would have been appalling. The tidal wave came suddenly, and one house buffeting against another, left nothing but kindling wood over the entire acreage. The W. P. A. could come in and clear the streets, and the $19,000,000 appropriated by the State would take care of the roads and bridges destroyed. But how about the private individuals who lose the larger portion of the $330,000,000? I wish to call attention to that phase of the situation this afternoon. Losses having a public nature will be taken care of by governments, but what have we done for the private individual? Our present Vice President, Mr. GARNER, took the floor of this House during the Hoover administration and complained about what we had done for the banks, insurance companies, and railroads. "But what have you done for the private individual?" he asked. I have not forgotten. Well, we thought we had made some provisions to attain that objective.

A meeting of boards of selectmen was immediately called. and of the bankers, representatives of the Red Cross, and the agents of Disaster Loan Corporation. I want to pay the highest tribute possible for man to pay to the Red Cross and perhaps contrast its activities with those of the Government. The Red Cross representatives were at first amazed at the hesitancy of those needing assistance to ask therefor. Never before had they met such a condition. Truly the New England spirit of independence was well and truly exemplified.

The people of New England do not enjoy asking for assistance. But gradually they did come in; and in my congressional district, I am told, the Red Cross finally expended more funds for relief and rehabilitation than in any other particular section of New England. I followed up its work. I was amazed at the demonstrated efficiency of that great organization. The aim was to rehabilitate the unfortunate ones to the very condition they had been in prior to the disaster. If injured, they would succor them even for years to come. They assured us that there would be no lack of funds for such purposes. A wonderful work swiftly accomplished. Not a single case of dissatisfaction with the work or the decisions of the Red Cross has come to me.

Must we so much depend upon the Red Cross to take care of unfortunate individuals in such emergencies? The Disaster Loan Corporation was supposed to take up the matter of rehabilitation after the Red Cross had done its work. Just before I came to Washington I visited the office of the register of deeds and found that only one mortgage had been recorded from that county running to the Disaster Loan Corporation. I found the conditions recited in that mortgage of such interest that I shall at some time later place them in the RECORD. You will wish to read them.

I cannot blame the officials of the Corporation. They did their duty, but their authority to make loans was greatly restricted by the instructions and conditions imposed upon

I want to call attention to a case recommended to the Corporation by the local committee and his own banker. The loan was accepted, but the personal and unusual information demanded was much resented. He was unaccustomed to such searching and seemingly unnecessary examinations. He was not to be trusted to receive the lump sum, but was to be carefully watched as to every transaction involving the use of the loan. When the mortgage is given he must mortgage real estate, buildings, personal property, tools, and equipment "now owned or hereafter acquired." How could he honestly carry on his business under such conditions? This was the case of a highly honorable citizen, vouched for by the Disaster Loan Corporation's own committee and known to everyone in that vicinity as wholly reliable and trustworthy. Such supervision will not be tolerated by our people, and no great amount of money was loaned by the Corporation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman knows that the Disaster Loan Corporation was formed and organized after the great flood in the Ohio Valley of 1937. What the gentleman is stating now is exactly the experience we had. The Disaster Loan Corporation failed absolutely to do what the Congress intended it to do.

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly. At that time we gave it $20,000,000, as I recall it. It loaned some $6,000,000 of that. I was on the committee which set up the Disaster Loan Corporation. I stated to the gentlemen representing that Corporation during the disaster that if they do not lose a lot of money it will be real proof that they have not done their job. We need have little worry that these corporations, controlled by the R. F. C., will lose much money. We have to issue orders from the Congress, as we did when one billion eight hundred million was actually given Mr. Hopkins by the R. F. C.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. At the time the bill creating the Disaster Loan Corporation was up for consideration the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Vinson, in response to a question, stated that the loans were to be made to people who could not give security and he doubted whether they ever would be paid back, and that the real purpose was to get the money into the hands of those who needed it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; we felt that instead of Hopkins giving it away we would lend it and try to get something back, as the prime purpose would be to furnish real relief without the bankers' viewpoint and the attorneys' lengthy and guarded conditions in the mortgage. I have no criticism of the agents of this Corporation. They desired to cooperate and it may yet be a little early to complain too much. I expect later on to receive information as to the number of applications made. the number granted and the sum involved in these loans to New England.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, as usual, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford] is unduly exercised. For my part, I expect to support the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Mc-CORMACK].

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? He referred to me.

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then I object. Mr. RANKIN. I only have 5 minutes. The gentleman from Massachusetts had 15 minutes.

GOVERNOR AIKEN READS A DEFICIT AS A SURPLUS

Mr. Chairman, we are trying to do something for the people of New England, but we have the opposition of the Governor of Vermont, Governor Aiken. We have not got his "consent"

From reading the morning papers, Mr. Chairman, one is led to place a new appraisal upon the value of the judgment of the distinguished chief executive of the State of Vermont, Governor Aiken. If you do not believe he is a "Daniel come to judgment," just listen to this news dispatch of yesterday from Montpelier, Vt. By the way, the headlines say that the legislature was "bewildered" at this revelation on the part of the Governor. The news dispatch reads as follows:

MONTPELIER, VT., January 18, 1939.—The Vermont Legislature to-day received Gov. George D. Alken's special message and amendment to the biennial budget, revealing a mistake of $1,239,444, and trans-forming an estimated surplus of $653,212 for the next 2 fiscal years into a deficit of more than $586,000.

In other words, the Governor of Vermont seems to be unable to distinguish between a surplus and a deficit.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania IMr. RICH! has been asking, "Where are we going to get the money to meet the Government's obligations?" Now we know.

Governor Aiken, of Vermont, who cannot tell a deficit from a surplus, is a candidate for President on the Republican ticket. He has the unqualified support of the Power Trust and other utilities from one end of this country to the other. If, when, and provided he is elected, and after he has been here sometime and they have milled around here in the House and the Senate for a few days, he can come in with a message and read the deficit as a surplus. That will show that the country is again prosperous. He can even read the national debt as an asset. The idea that a national debt is a national blessing originated in New England, at any rate.

Then they can proceed as they did back in the twenties, during the Harding-Coolidge regime, to reduce and pay back the income taxes of the big interests. That will start a boom on the New York Stock Exchange, and, indeed, we will then have real Republican prosperity, such as we had from 1928 to 1932. [Laughter.]

You know, when the Republicans came into power in 1921, they pretended to reduce the national debt. They did not tell you about all the money they gave back to the big incometax payers, they did not tell you how they reduced the taxes of those interests, and they did not tell you about giving those same people rebates. The money they used to reduce the national debt was accumulated how? By simply canceling contracts the Democratic administration had made for war materials before the war closed, and also selling war materials and turning the money derived therefrom back into the Treasury and claiming credit for reducing the national debt to that extent.

They never did balance the Budget with revenues. What they did was to take the taxes off the people who got rich during the war, who made fortunes out of the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world. They had a real deficit from the time they came into power until they went out of power.

They have been searching all these years to find a candidate for President, one of those gentlemen who could perpetrate political, economic, or financial necromancy to such an extent that he could balance the Budget without taxing the people who have the money. Lo, they have found him. An ideal candidate for President on the Republican ticket. Governor Aiken of Vermont, who cannot tell a deficit from a surplus.

All he would have to do would be to come up here before a Republican House, if there were one, and a Republican Senate, if that should ever happen again, and instead of having a national debt of $38,000,000,000 he could read that as a national asset. He could read the deficit as a surplus and show that prosperity had returned. Then demands would begin coming in for us to give that money back to the overburdened rich, as they did during the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime.

When Mr. Hoover was inaugurated the first thing they did was to raise the tariff, which was destroying American industry and American agriculture, and give back income taxes that were collected the year before and that at a time when bread lines were beginning to stretch down the streets of our cities.

So Governor Aiken, with his ability to change a deficit into a surplus with one stroke of his imagination, would make them an ideal candidate.

No, Mr. Chairman, this fight that is going on in New England is all camouflage. It is not being waged to help the people of New England but to try to embarrass the national administration; and it is only hurting the people of New England.

We propose to treat the people of New England just as we do the people of every other section of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Alexander].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to use my time in expressing disapproval of the request for a $3,500,000 appropriation for this new Census Building. I believe most of us were sent down here with the desire on the part of our constituents to reduce taxes, to cut out centralization of power here in Washington, and to cut out Government spending. Here is a wonderful opportunity and a practical place to begin that program, which is demanded by our constituents all over the United States.

I have before me the reports for May and November of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers showing the vacancies in office buildings in the larger cities throughout all the States of the Union. In these office buildings there is a total vacancy of 18 percent, or, expressed in square-feet area, there is a vacancy of 35,651,623 square feet.

The appropriation for this new building calls for the construction of a building having an area of 417,000 square feet for the use of the Census Bureau. Why not go out into the States and rent this space? I know the building owners and managers throughout the country would be willing and glad to give their vacant space at very reasonable rates in an effort to meet their running and operating expenses, their taxes, and the fixed charges on their properties, which have been standing vacant for the past 7 or 8 years.

I have before me a list of the 12 cities in which the Federal Reserve banks are located. I know you are all interested, because these cities are located throughout your districts. In Atlanta there is a vacancy of 368,870 square feet, or 14.56 percent of their total office-building area. In Boston there is a vacancy of 1,276,872 square feet, or 25.96 percent. I could go on with the other 10 cities and show similar percentages of vacancy, but my time will not permit. In my own city of Minneapolis there is a vacancy of 926,980 square feet, or 25.40 percent of the total square-foot area available in that city.

I also have here a list of the cities in which are located Federal land banks, cities such as Baltimore, St. Paul, Spokane, and Omaha. In these cities the percentage of vacancy runs about the same as that which I have indicated for the Federal Reserve bank cities.

I also have here a list of the cities in which there are Federal home-loan banks, and this list shows proportionately the same amount of vacancies as in the cities I have already mentioned.

It seems to me, if we really want to do something for our constituents who send us here to conserve the funds of our Government and to cut their taxes, this is a mighty fine and a very practical place to start. Let us divide up this Census business and send it back to the States, where it belongs. IApplause. I You are going to have to take the census out in the States anyway. Let us cut up into its component parts this census operation for which the request for space here in Washington is made and send it out into the cities I have mentioned, where the space is available. Why build more when we have over 35,000,000 square feet of building area vacant in this country today?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Most of the buildings constructed for governmental purposes cost from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. This appropriation calls for the expenditure of only $3,500,000. Does the gentleman understand this is to be just a temporary structure, erected to take care of the census of 1940?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not understand so, because the report of the committee states the building is to be constructed of brick and concrete, I believe, which it seems to me would constitute a permanent building.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it the gentleman's understanding that $3,500,000 will be the total cost of this building?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not familiar with that but understand good buildings here cost from ten to twenty millions.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is rather a small amount. It will probably only be a start on the final expense involved.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, the lists to which I referred previously in my remarks are as follows:

Federal Reserve hank cities

This vacancy has existed for the past several years. Shall we go on and build more buildings, creating greater public debt and more taxes, to say nothing of the excessive vacancy condition in present buildings in every city, or shall we call a halt by voting down this three and one-half million dollar appropriation for another building? [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, namely: LEGISLATIVE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCormack: On page 3, line 13, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in place thereof "$5,000,000".

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to restore to the bill the amount which was recommended to the Congress by the President, namely, $5,000,000.

We have heard the various speeches made in connection with the devastating results of the hurricane and flood in New England. It is unnecessary for me to review in detail what has already been said. However, for whatever value any expressions of mine may be worth, I assure my colleagues that the damage to that section of New England visited by the hurricane was terrible. Fortunately, I come from a district that sustained no hurricane damage and, fortunately, I come from a district that has no flood-control problem, but I sympathize keenly with the people who live in the districts that were affected by the hurricane, and the people of other sections of the country who have been affected in the past, and who have the fear of being affected in the future by the visitation of floods. As a matter of fact, without any flood problem in my district, I introduced the 100 percent Federal Contribution Act, providing full contribution by the Federal Government. I always felt, even before the passage of the 1936 and 1938 Flood Control Acts, that the flood problems that confronted the various sections of our country, and the people of those sections, constituted not merely a State problem, but constituted a challenge to the Federal Government. I had to take a position for a time in opposition to the Governor of my own State in waging the fight that we did in the passage of the legislation last year.

In the next few days I expect to make some remarks on the flood-control situation as it now exists in New England because the position of the Federal Government is absolutely correct. On the occasion of the remarks I expect to make I shall state for the record the reasons I feel that way about it.

Coming now to the pending amendment, I have helped other sections of the country when they had their problems. I consider the problems, and particularly the emergency problems, of all other sections of the country as being my problems. I hope the day shall never come when I will develop a state of mind where I will look at the problems of other sections of the country from the limited, geographical confines of New England. I try to look at things from a broad, national angle.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Briefly; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. In the 22 years I have been a Member of this body, I believe this is the first time New England has ever come in and asked for Government help.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman. In my 10 years as a member of this body, this is the first time in my recollection we have asked help.

Mr. KNUTSON. New England has helped the West with its grasshopper problem, and the South with its boll-weevil problem, and helped every other part of the country, and has never asked for anything, and I believe we should give them the $5,000,000 without a dissenting voice.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Is the gentleman seeking, by his amendment, to eliminate the matching provision?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; my amendment does not affect the matching provision and I do not intend to offer an amendment to change the proviso recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, although the committee should not have put it in. My amendment seeks only to increase the $3,000,000, which is the amount recommended by the committee, to $5,000,000, which is the amount recommended by the President.

The committee is an agent of the House. The committee has done its work, and anything I may say is not to be construed as a criticism of the committee; but you and I and other Members of the House constitute the principal. The House is the principal and, frequently, as in this case, we are justified, upon hearing the evidence, in saying to an agent of the House, which is the committee, "You have recommended well, but we feel that we should improve upon your The recommendation of $3,000,000 recommendations." shows the need. The President has said $5,000,000 is needed and that that is the minimum. The Department asked for over $8,000,000.

My time is about up. I hope that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will vote for this amendment and thereby give to New England the minimum consideration it is entitled to. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. My district was one of those terribly affected and is one of the districts that was hurt most by the hurricane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 25 minutes. I shall ask for only 5 minutes of the 25 minutes, and in this connection I may say that practically all of the time yesterday afternoon was consumed in debating this item.

Although the time was supposed to be divided equally, the gentlemen on the other side had 2 hours and 16 minutes and this matter was thoroughly discussed during that time. We have been very liberal in the matter of debate and I hope the Members will permit the matter to be concluded in the time I suggested.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I suggest that the gentleman from Virginia make the time 30 minutes, with the understanding that outside of the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Members will be recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I amend my request and ask unanimous consent that the time be limited to 30 minutes and I should like to have the last 5 minutes of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Also, Mr. Chairman, to include therein certain statements from certain supplemental agencies regarding the flood and hurricane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will have to make that request in the House. The Committee has no power to grant it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this amendment. On January 3, the opening day of Congress, I introduced a bill which authorized an $8,870,000 outright grant for the fire hazard. It contains other provisions that I shall not go into detail about, as they cannot be considered at this time. I shall support with great pleasure the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack]. I received a telegram yesterday when I asked a ruling from the attorney general regarding the ability of Massachusetts, under its constitution, to match any Federal appropriation. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts requires, as does the provision in the bill before us, that the States match the Federal money. The attorney general, Paul E. Dever, replied as follows:

Nothing in State constitution prohibits Commonwealth appropriating money to match Federal contribution for removal of timber which is a fire hazard of sufficient magnitude to affect public safety.

With the added two and one-half millions by the Federal Government, we believe this amount is very small to take care of the needs in respect to the fire hazard. I quote now from a disinterested person regarding the extent of the hurricane. Mr. Charles F. Brooks, at the Blue Hills Meteorological Observatory, which appeared in the Geographical Review of January 1939:

The total economic loss is estimated at $250,000,000. the loss of life has been greater in a few other hurricanes, the damage to property in this storm was the greatest that ever occurred in a single storm anywhere in all the world.

Further text of Mr. Brooks' statement follows:

HURRICANES INTO NEW ENGLAND-METEOROLOGY OF THE STORM OF SEPTEMBER 21, 1938

(Charles F. Brooks, Blue Hills Meteorological Observatory)

The hurricane of September last was a whirling, circular storm with very destructive winds spread over a diameter of 200 miles. At its center was the usual calm eye, some 40 miles in breadth. This vortex rushed northward to Long Island and New England This vortex rushed northward to Long Island and New England with the speed of an express train, augmenting wind velocities to extremes of about 120 miles an hour on the east of the path of the center. The wind drove the sea water with such force that, when added to the rise in sea level due to the low pressure and thrown against the coast, the sea rose 10 to 15 feet above the expected level, in itself high water, the time being high tide. Towering surges on this combined astronomical tide and storm wave threw the sea to such heights that demolition was general along the exposed coast and hundreds of persons were engulfed and drowned. Flying spray incrusted windows and salt killed vegetation 20 miles inland, and traces were found even 50 miles from the raging sea. Inland, the rivers, already flooded by 4 days of tropical rains, added to the destruction. from the raging sea. Inland, the rivers, a of tropical rains, added to the destruction.

The gale, roaring in great gusts over the countryside, broke off or uprooted millions of trees, damaged or destroyed thousands of buildings, and, directly or indirectly, downed nearly 20,000 miles of electric-power and telephone lines. Many people were killed or injured by falling trees, chimneys, or flying debris. The damage was most extensive on the tops and sides of hills. There were also lanes of destruction where particularly vicious gusts, attended perhaps by eddies, had plowed through the woods, breaking off trees or uprooting them from the sodden ground. More than 5,000,000,000 board-feet of timber were thrown down, leaf pulp turned white houses green, and leaves that were not blown to pieces were "scorched" by the beating, desiccating gale.

There were some 600 lives lost. The American Red Cross places the deaths at 488, with 100 additional missing, and 1,754 more or less injured. The Works Progress Administration survey places the loss of human life at 682. The Red Cross also finds that 93,122 families suffered more or less serious property losses; that 6,933 summer dwellings, 1,991 other dwellings, and 2,605 boats were destroyed; also 2,369 barns and 7,438 other buildings. The total economic loss is estimated at $250,000,000 to $330,000,000. Although the loss of life has been greater in a few other hurricanes, the damage to property in this storm was the greatest that ever occurred in a single storm anywhere in the world.

Such things had happened before—in 1815 and 1635—and had been vividly recorded in newspapers, meteorological records, and town chronicles, and in Sidney Perley's Historic Storms of New England. In fact, Perley describes 10 storms of hurricane intensity in 2½ centuries and Tannehill lists 8 more, and there have been 4 more in the last 50 years, which makes 5 or 10 New England hurricanes to a century and 1 that is especially fierce and widespread in each century and a half.

At this point I would like to insert in the Record a letter I received from Mr. J. H. Rich, assistant professor of forestry of the Massachusetts State College:

> THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Massachusetts State College, Amherst, January 6, 1939.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. Dear Mrs. Rogers: In my opinion timber salvage in Massachusetts will be a dismal failure unless your bill to guarantee 100-percent payment for delivered logs is passed. This will conform to my original plan, which has become so warped and twisted that it is hardly recognizable.

However, to change the general principle of the plan of purchasing logs at concentration areas would destroy all hopes of salvage and the resultant protection of local forest industries and their dependent communities. Machinery is already in motion. Your bill, if passed, will give it the proper impetus, and literally thousands of independent operators will soon be at work.

Timber salvage is the best kind of fire-hazard reduction. As soon as logs are removed, the woods become accessible in case of fire and can be protected. In this way timber salvage becomes self-liquidating fire-hazard reduction.

I do not believe the 100-percent payment excessive because the logs are purchased on a strict grade basis, culls on which the operators have always lost money are left in the woods, and the concentration of raw material in large units permits lower cost and higher-quality manufacture. Massachusetts has for many years imported about 85 percent of its lumber consumption. Higher-quality manufacture which is bound to follow should recapture some of our markets. some of our markets.

I believe that the logs now in storage will sell for 100 percent of their cost plus a reasonable overhead. Even were such a price not quite obtainable, the additional expense is justified by the resultant fire-hazard reduction.

Your efforts in this problem will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

J. H. RICH, Assistant Professor of Forestry.

P. S.—Unless logs are salvaged, forest fires are very likely to destroy the water-holding capacity of our hillsides and add considerably to the problem of flood control.

The following expert advice has been sent to me; and as it it presents a phase of the picture, I am placing it in the RECORD at this point:

1. When the Forest Service was precipitated into the hurricanedisaster work in New England by order of the President, the State conservation agencies were called into consultation in Boston and conservation agencies were called into consultation in Boston and a definite plan of hazard elimination developed and agreed upon. State projects involving the use of available W. P. A. facilities were submitted and acted upon immediately. These resulted in 15,000 to 17,000 men being employed on hazard-elimination work, a totally inadequate number, but the maximum that could be utilized in areas accessible to the sources of supply of labor. All of the C. C. camps administered by the Forest Service, State agencies, and the Park Service were turned over to the coordinating agency and their efforts directed toward hazard elimination.

2. Realizing the necessity for proper supervision and direction, the Forest Service drew upon its resources of experienced personnel, established an office in Boston to assume direct responsibility for the operations, and employed field technicians through the W. P. A. to exercise technical direction over the hazard-elimination operations and to inventory the extent of the damage, the hazard, and the requirements to meet the catastrophe.

3. As a result of the action taken, an integrated program of hazard elimination has been developed in cooperation with the State agencies, and something over 20,000 men have expended their efforts in an attempt to reduce the hazard to normal. This program is the resulted allowing accounts to the contract of the contract gram has required planning, organization work on a tremendous scale, and constant supervision. It could have been accomplished in no other way than through the detail of experienced Forest Service personnel to the job. It can be carried on in no other way. The State agencies were totally unprepared to cope with a disaster of such proportions.

4. The hurricane damage in New England was not confined to ruined forests. There was a tremendous loss of property of all kinds and the States were overwhelmed in their attempt to repair the effects of wind and flood. Towns utilized all possible labor in clearing away debris, in repairing sewer and water systems. The burden of men and money fell heavily on towns and States.

5. The fire-hazard-reduction work being directed by the Forest Service covers some 600 towns in the stricken area. In nearly of these towns committees have been organized and have been occupied with aiding in the fire-hazard reduction, giving of their time and money freely.

6. In Mr. Tinker's memorandum to you dated December 22, he wrote as follows:

wrote as follows:

"The fire-hazard-reduction work has proceeded under severe limitations. Unfortunately, W. P. A. has not been able to furnish us anything like the required number of men. The estimated force required was 39,000, whereas at the peak in late November only 18,000 men were obtained. Fire-hazard conditions in New England, as they will exist next spring, cannot be exaggerated. To anyone who has been in the disaster area, the thought of the possibilities of a disaster even greater than the hurricane is appalling. The timber salvage work this winter will appreciably reduce the fire hazard but in spite of this, under the limitations that now exist in elimination work, the situation next spring will represent a very real menace to the public safety.

"If the above-enumerated measures are not taken and fires are "If the above-enumerated measures are not taken and fires are not adequately handled during the coming spring fire season, I predict there will be loss of life and property throughout the path of this hurricane equal and even beyond that done by the storm itself. I feel a tremendous responsibility in all these undertakings and feel that all influential and thinking people should be properly apprised of the exact situation and then prepare to prevent these things from happening."

The Forest Service estimates that there is a gross area affected by the hurricane of about 14,000,000 acres in the New England States needing protection, with about 150,000 acres of blown-down timber needing protection, with about 150,000 acres of blown-down timber where intensive fire hazard reduction work over a period of almost 2 years will be needed to reduce the hazard to normal. There are about 1,200 miles of roads to be opened and about 950 miles of telephone lines and five lookout towers to be constructed. To make possible quick action for fire suppression it will be necessary to organize, in conjunction with the States, fire-suppression and fire-fighting crews to be ready to act expeditiously. The necessary fire-fighting equipment must be purchased and located at strategic points throughout the area and the organized crews instructed in the use of this equipment. All of this organization is for protective purposes while the work of removing the blown-down timber is being carried on. Our minimum plan calls for about 7,500 temporary employees to carry on fire-hazard reduction. This force includes patrolmen, foremen, straw bosses, and about 5,800 laborers. This force is in addition to the C. C. C. camps and whatever W. P. A. labor can be secured for use in areas accessible to such labor.

Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful, as I know the other Members from New England are, to the Appropriations Committee for their fine hearings, and I feel very sure that if at that time they realized fully the extent of the fire hazard that we would have been given the $5,000,000. I feel sure that at the time they did not realize that our forests are not like the forests in other sections of the country, forests over which I have flown in past years. There, there are huge forest areas, and they can be protected more easily, because there is but one section to protect. The forests there are centralized. They already are equipped with fire towers, telegraph wires, fire lanes, and so forth. With us, our forests are scattered. In New England most of the farms were built by cutting down the timber and then the homes and other buildings were built and orchards planted. If there should be a fire in any one locality, very likely many people would be burned badly, in fact, burned to death; and when I tell you there are 531 families per square mile in the Massachusetts area you will realize the danger to life if such a catastrophe should occur.

I wonder how many of you have been in a house which caught fire when there was an invalid in the house and where there was no one strong enough to move that invalid. I had that experience. Mercifully, firemen arrived just in time to save her. Next to my own district there is a sanitarium in the midst of timberland. That timber is down. There are hospitals and sanitoria in my own district surrounded by timber. That timber also is down. Everyone knows that down timber and brush constitute a perfectly laid fire. A spark only would set fire to the New England tinder box and there is a tremendous fire hazard.

I must express here my appreciation to the Disaster Loan Corporation and to Senator Charles Henderson, of the R. F. C., who came to New England to open Disaster Loan offices. While that Corporation did not do all that I asked, it has been enormously helpful, and my own city has the largest Disaster Loan office in the State. It will interest my fellow colleagues from the South that the first man in charge of that office was Mr. Smith Blair, a fine gentleman from Virginia. He went with me and a secretary over a great deal of my devastated area. He worked on Sundays and at night, as did and as do representatives of the Farm Credit Administration and Debt Adjustment Administration. The Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration has done exceptionally fine work. Mr. Silcox and his aides toiled tirelessly. In my own house during the hurricane I lost a chimney and the slates came off the roof like cards off a deck blown by the wind, and the windows blew in. The house shook as in an earthquake. I know what it was, both in the house and outside, as I motored over the roads, with trees coming down right and left.

As I said before, one of the things that makes it so difficult for us is that the hurricane jumped from place to place. The damage is not in a centralized, localized spot. There have been floods and hurricanes in other sections of the United States, but never in our history has there been such a dangerous, far-reaching fire hazard. There is also a precedent for an outright grant; in fact, there are a number of them. You probably all know that millions of dollars have been given to the Dust Bowl for the rehabilitation of private property and the protection of it. Why not give New England the same protection? It faces a fire hazard almost beyond belief. To give you a little of the extent of the timber damage, let me read the statement from the Forestry Division of the United States Government, as follows:

I am pleased to give you the following figures, which are the closest estimates available:

Total volume of blown-down timber_____feet__ 2,650,000,000 ____do___ 1,640,000,000 e ground) __ $13,250,000 $8,000,000

$19,680,000 Value of salvageable material sawed into lumber____

Eighty percent of the above is softwoods, chiefly white pine. Twenty percent is hardwood (oak, birch, maple, etc.).

Number of people in peril in case of fire: Average in the sparsely settled country areas, 75 people to the square mile; all New England but Maine, 213 per square mile; Massachusetts, density of 533 per square mile.

There are two precedents to make direct grants on firehazard reduction work—the Civilian Conservation Corps Act and the W. P. A. Act-each of which have provided for preventive work.

As there are 25,000 or 30,000 timber owners in Massachusetts alone, and 70 percent are small owners, having farms of 70 to 100 acres, the greatest burden will fall upon those least able to bear that burden.

Of the $19,000,000 appropriated by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for hurricane work, the following two allocations were made to the Massachusetts Division of Forestry: $750,000 allocated for fire-hazard reduction, and so forth, to be used on State forests only; $123,000 allocated for repair work due to the emergency.

Besides these two allocations to the Masachusetts Division of Forestry, there was the regular appropriation of $152,856. used for administration costs, and so forth.

The remainder of the $19,000,000 was distributed through the other State departments. Remember, our roads, our bridges were damaged. Sanitation was in bad condition.

Again to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] I repeat that the State in appropriating $19,000,000 for flood and hurricane damage gave over $1,000,000 protection in the State forests. The gentleman from Virginia said yesterday on the floor that that was an infinitesimally small part of the $19,000,000. I trust that he will feel that $5,000,000 is an infinitesimally small part for our needs and will grant our request in that respect. If we do not have these five or six million dollars, we will have, according to the experts in the forestry association, and the experts in other governmental departments, tremendous damage by fire and tremendous loss of life, and I say to the representatives of the other sections of the country that a great loss of purchasing power will hurt their sections tremendously. This is not a matter local to New England. It is a great national calamity.

I earnestly hope, my colleagues from the other sections of the country, that you will aid New England in our hour of need. I must pay tribute to the courage of my own people in my own district and in my own State during that flood and hurricane. I was out on the dikes at night, the dikes which were partially built by the Army engineers, which served to protect the houses from the tremendous rush of water, but which did not prevent the flood, as they were not completed, and the pumps were not installed; and, remember, in the last 2 years my people in the Merrimack Valley have suffered two floods and two freshets besides the devastating hurricane of September.

These people were forced to move from their homes. Not a complaint did I hear. I went about through towns that had no light and no telephonic communications, towns that had no heat, towns that had no radio communication, in order to try to take to the different inhabitants the information as to what might be done by Government agencies. Never one word of complaint did I hear from those people.

I went to one little farmhouse on the top of a hill, and I found that the night before, during the hurricane, a farmer, the husband of a woman there, and her father had cut timber and dragged it aside for 3 miles in order to go for a doctor.

Women in other localities in my district for days cooked their meals over open fires as they did in the early days of New England. There was illness as a result of exposure and overwork in the rain and wind. Orchard growers have lost beautiful orchards which grew the finest apples. Those men will have no income for 10 years, because it requires 10 years for an apple tree to grow before bearing fruit. Farmers lost their cows, due to exposure, for days even after the hurricane. They lost their poultry, but uncomplainingly. Those people are desperate; they are desperate over removing the fire hazard; over moving the logs that must be put into ponds as cut. if they are to be put into sawmills, if they are to be salvaged. They do not have the means. They do not have the facilities to do this. All the time many of these people are faced with meeting payments on mortgages without that with which to meet their bills.

I earnestly hope that the Members will join in supporting this amendment.

I have photographs here which will show that the houses are in the timberland itself and that there is danger of loss of life and injury to all those residing in that area. The huge recreational center in New England will be affected. Hotels will be burned. Hospitals will be razed to the ground and many of the inmates will doubtless be burned. Our need is very great. I ask your support. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of debate on this particular feature of this deficiency appropriation bill. However, I do not want to allow the debate to close without informing the House of the very efficient manner in which the Federal Government, at the time of this disaster, placed all of its agencies at the disposal of the afflicted area. I believe my colleagues from New England, both Republican and Democrat, will agree that immediate response was given by the Federal Government. The Administrator of W. P. A. flew across the country from California to Massachusetts and held a meeting in Boston within a few days after the disaster at which were present the Governors of the various States affected, mayors, selectmen, and town officials. Every means that the Government could place at the disposal of those duly elected officials was marshalled almost overnight. We did receive a great deal of assistance in our cities and towns where huge trees were blown down, tearing gaping holes in the sidewalks and streets. Our utilities were paralyzed and streets and highways were rendered impassable. In record time all the agencies of the Federal Government were thrown into action and our State, city, and town officials all cooperated to a remarkable extent with the result that within a very short time the vital services were restored to the people, channels of transportation were cleared, and funds were made available to restore damaged property, both public and private. This restoration has in the main been completed in the populous centers. No account of this catastrophe would be complete without a tribute to the valuable and heroic work of the men on W. P. A. and the boys of the C. C. C. during this emergency.

But there remains this fire hazard, caused by the piling up of inflammable brush on the thousands of acres of wooded area of the New England States on both private property and public domain. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] yesterday exhibited some photographs, which I think were most imposing evidence of the situation which is typical in every corner of New England.

As the gentleman stated, unless this inflammable debris is removed at once from public and private property, there is a grave danger of a very serious fire hazard menacing the welfare of thousands of people throughout the New England States. It will endanger hospitals and public buildings, towns, and cities in an area which, as you all know, is very heavily populated. Because of these compelling reasons we ask you to restore the amount of this appropriation to $5,000,000, the amount recommended by the Budget. Mr. Silcox, of the Forestry Division, and his assistants who have been on the scene say that this amount is absolutely necessary to complete the work of clearing up this very serious fire hazard.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I represent a State that has suffered the greatest down-timber loss of any of the New England States. I believe that of all the New England States the greatest fire hazard exists in New Hampshire, both on private lands and in our National and State forests. For that reason I am especially interested and hopeful that this amendment will pass. I believe the full amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget, namely, $5,000,000, should be the amount approved.

It was stated yesterday on the floor of this House that the adoption of this amendment would establish a precedent. The precedent of Federal aid to a stricken area already has been established. It was established in 1906 when the Congress of the United States passed three acts, carrying a total appropriation of $2,500,000 for the relief of the people of San Francisco, Calif., who were the victims of the devastating earthquake and fire of that year.

It is difficult for the Members of this House to realize the seriousness of the situation that exists as the result of the damage done by the hurricane that swept over New England on September 21, last, the fourth worst disaster that has ever befallen the people of this country. The loss to our people in New England is tremendous, regardless of what amount of money this Government loans or allocates as an outright gift. This bill does not call for money to compensate for the loss of private individuals, but rather to prevent further loss by fire this coming summer.

I have talked with a representative of the Forestry Department, who has just returned from making a survey of this fire hazard, and he has advised me that the damage and the danger of further destruction is beyond comprehension.

The Forestry Bureau has asked for the transfer of 31 camps from the South up into New England, but as yet nothing has been done to comply with this recommendation. In the immediate future I will introduce a bill to move 40 additional camps into New England to eliminate this hazard, but even this will be only a small part of what is required.

I realize that the Committee on Appropriations is anxious to reduce the expenditures of the Government; so am I, but not at the risk of having further appalling damage done by fire this coming summer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Oliver] for 3 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I arise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], which provides for an increase in this appropriation from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

There has been much said here yesterday and today as to the necessity for this appropriation. I think that in some respects the direct issue that is before us has been somewhat misunderstood. This appropriation has been recommended and is supported by the entire New England delegation, because the funds are absolutely necessary if the fire hazard which has been occasioned by the New England hurricane is to be materially reduced. Even the increased amount of money will not adequately do the job. I wish to place the most emphasis possible upon the fact that it is the terrible menace of a potential forest conflagration such as this country has never experienced which we are trying to picture to you here today, and in that connection I wish to use the words of that very fine and estimable Chief of the Forest Service of this Government, Mr. Silcox. On page 43 of the hearings on this bill, he said:

The extent of the damage is hardly comprehensible. It is unbelievable unless you see the area personally.

And then, again, on page 47 of the reported hearings, Mr. Silcox said:

But I am stating to this committee that the situation up there is one that invites public disaster. Fires may easily start, and this is a heavily populated country. It will affect towns and hospitals and camping grounds, etc. And if a fire gets in there under a high wind, it will be as bad as was the hurricane itself and as bad as some of our western fires, as in Minnesota, for instance.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Silcox has made extensive trips over this afflicted area and that is his experienced estimate of the situation. Mr. Tinker, his assistant, who is directly in charge in the New England area in connection with this fire menace told this committee, as is quoted on page 49 of the hearings:

Mr. Cannon raised a very good question in connection with that tuberculosis sanitarium situation. They have around 300 or 400 acres. They can clean it up. And that will be all right. But that is within an area of inflammable material of about 10 miles wide and 20 miles long. I suppose there are four or five hundred owners in there. But a fire there might jump 2 miles. Those people are just in a terrible predicament. I would not want any of my family living in that area.

These brief notations, Mr. Chairman, from men who have been actually on the ground floor and who know what the condition is should be enough to convince the members of this committee that this increased appropriation is necessary to remove the possibility of the ravaging results of a disastrous forest conflagration.

There is another point in support of this increased appropriation that has not been touched upon to any great extent, however. That is the matter of protection for the Federal Government's equity in the White Mountain National Forest Park. Without doubt many of the members of this committee and of this House have visited this beautiful recreational area-this area which is heavily wooded and forestedthis area which is in the midst of this particularly devastated section of the country. In the White Mountain National Park taxpayers of this Nation have invested tremendous sums of money, and these millions of dollars we are protecting insofar as is possible at this time with an appropriation of $500,000 for the reduction of the fire hazard within the White Mountain area itself. But we insist that in order to protect adequately this tremendous investment of the citizens of this country in this park we must remove the menace of spreading forest fires which may be occasioned by the fallen timber and the slash which now exists as a result of this windstorm in the adjoining sections outside of the park area itself. Certainly the tremendous Federal investment in the White Mountains deserves your serious consideration and your favorable action here this afternoon in providing sufficient funds to clear the surrounding thousands of acres which now constitute a potential fire threat of the greatest magnitude to this Government property.

I hope that by your action in supporting this amendment for an increase of this appropriation to $5,000,000 you will demonstrate your willingness not only to remove the fire hazard from the areas affected in and of themselves, but that you will also in doing so protect the tremendous Federal Government investment in the White Mountain National Park. It seems to me that such action is good business and for the best interests of all concerned, namely, the entire citizenry of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I realize that I was given ample opportunity to discuss this subject yesterday, and I would not ask for even this brief period except to call the attention of the House to two features. First, I referred yesterday in my remarks to the possibility of a constitutional prohibition against matching dollar for dollar. I have been reliably informed by the officials of Massachusetts that this now is not a danger in the minds of the officials of the State. So far as I am concerned, therefore-and I think I am speaking for my colleagues, both from Massachusetts and other States-we approve the report of the Committee on Appropriations calling for matching dollar for dollar.

The other point that I wish to raise is that whatever sum Congress sees fit to appropriate for this work will largelypractically all of it-go into labor. It is not as though you were paying a dollar to anybody for profit. The amendment offered by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] involves nothing having to do with any payment of money to any individual. The money will be used for labor in that area. Certainly no better assurance can be given by the Federal Government to show its appreciation of the opportunity to use ample labor during these winter months than to help clean up this terrible fire hazard that is certainly hanging over all of New England.

As has been said, we have been generous to other sections of the country. We are now asking only that New England, and all the States of New England, have just a little, fair share of the Federal money that is distributed.

I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], and I hope it will be adopted by the House unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] for 3 minutes.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely for this amendment, because just before I came down here I went through the wooded sections in the vicinity of my own city. I could not walk more than 50 feet without having to climb over huge trees that once grew on West Rock, East and Pin Rocks. I know that many in this Chamber have been in New Haven, the city where Yale University is located, and that they can realize that the rocks and hills around that city must be strewn with trees.

As one who went through this hurricane at the shore and saw the devastation that hit us for the first time in a hundred years, it is impossible for me to picture to you the destruction and fire hazard there was and is in my own home city of New Haven, an industrial center of 170,000. The forests are literally strewn with trees. Unless these are taken out, unless this fire hazard is removed, it will cost us more than we can ever possibly hope to pay.

I may say in passing that I think our Governors will accept this without question. I certainly think this help is abso-

May I also say that when other cities, other States, and other districts were celebrating their tercentenaries, or even their sesquicentennials, they asked the Federal Government for contributions. The State of Connecticut celebrated her tercentenary in 1930. We asked for and received $10,000, but, as a matter of fact, not a cent of it was used; we used none of the money given by this Congress. We ran our own show. Now we need help. For one of the first times in the history of our State and of the other States of New England we are in the position where we must have assistance. This small sum that we ask be given to us in New England is vitally needed, and we who come from New England would not ask for it unless it were absolutely necessary. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia IMr. Woodrum] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is a rather unusual thing to see the committee that has been as generous as the Committee on Appropriations has been in this particular case with our brethren from New England, now being somewhat criticized by some of our friends and taken to task. Let us hesitate before we vote and before we go on record on this, because that is where we shall probably have to go-let us see just what we are doing, what we are spending.

There was a great disaster in the Mississippi Valley. The Mississippi Valley flood sufferers had W. P. A. labor, they had the Red Cross, and they had disaster loans. The sufferers of the tragedy from the New England hurricane have had all of that assistance plus C. C. C. assistance.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill is passed, it will be the first time the Congress has set the precedent of taking Federal money and expending it upon private land. This precedent the Committee on Appropriations was willing to violate. Not only that, but we have brought it in here when you gentlemen knew it was subject to a point of order. Personally, I do not feel very good about the matter. I feel the committee has been generous to a point of deserving criticism for its generosity.

Mr. Chairman, what does this amendment do, if agreed to by the committee and then adopted on a record vote in the House? What does it do? Instead of having $5,000,000 to clear up these private lands you will have $10,000,000 to do it, because this amendment calls for a matching of the The Bureau of the Budget estimated it would take $5,000,000 to do this and at a time when there was no evidence of the States doing anything except through the $1,000,000 which the State of Massachusetts has provided. The Bureau of the Budget estimated $5,000,000. The committee recommends $3,000,000, to be matched by State funds, making $6,000,000, or $1,000,000 more than requested by the Budget. This amendment would give you $10,000,000 to do the job and sets a precedent that never has been set in this country. No disaster in this country has had anything for property damage or destruction except a loan from the Government, yet we are sending the Forest Service on to private lands to clean them up because there is a fire hazard.

I hope the Committee will support us. We have been generous, just, and fair to this great section of our country. There have been no politics in this matter except what some of these gentlemen who have spoken tried to lug in by inference. In the committee there were no politics. I hope the Committee will back the Appropriations Committee in this matter and vote down the amendment, and permit the amount to stand which we have provided.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCormack) there were-ayes 68, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY AND PLANT QUARANTINE

Control of incipient and emergency outbreaks of insect pests and plant diseases: For carrying out the purposes and provisions of, and for expenditures authorized under, Public Resolution No. 91, Seventy-fifth Congress, entitled "Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs," approved April 6, 1937," approved May 9, 1938 (52 Stat. 344, 1126), fiscal year 1939, to remain available until December 31, 1939, $2,000,000. ber 31, 1939, $2,000,000.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hobes: On page 3, line 24, after the colon, strike out the word "for" and insert "for the eradication of white fringed beetles for."

Page 4, line 8, strike "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,300,000."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would add to the pests which are to be eradicated the white fringed beetle, and would provide the sum of $300,000 and add that to the sum of the appropriation for this eradication.

We are told by the experts in the Bureau of Entomology of the Department of Agriculture that the white fringed beetle is more dangerous to all plant life which it attacks than all the other six well-known pests. It is more dangerous, therefore, than the boll weevil and the pink bollworm are to cotton and, in fact, more dangerous than all the other six pests put together.

I am not informed accurately as to whether or not any part of this appropriation may be or is intended to be used for the eradication of these pests; therefore, I would ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee whether or not he has any information which he could give us at this time on the subject?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman, my information is that the fund can be used for the eradication of the white fringed beetle. I have no objection to the gentleman putting that in if he wishes to do so; but, of course, I shall object to increasing the amount because it is not necessary.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield? If the activities of this eradication work are to be materially extended, the committee has already cut the Budget estimate by $1,300,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is not to be extended. It was testified in the hearings that the funds to be appropriated would be used for the eradication of the white-fringed beetle, as well as other pests. That is part of the program, and the insertion of this language would not extend the program. They are going to use it for that purpose so far as our records show, anyway.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much money have they unexpended? Has the gentleman any information on that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They have $700,000 unexpended this year. We are giving them $2,000,000 more. Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On page 39 of the report it appears that $299.514 have been considered in the eradication of the beetle to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the bill covers the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. I hope it does.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the chairman's assurance, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that part of my amendment which seeks to increase the amount of the appropriation by

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs]?

There was no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 4, line 8, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,300,000."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, this matter is so important to us in the West and in the northwestern territory that I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the history of the amendment I am offering goes back first to a recommendation of the Bureau of Entomology for an appropriation in the sum of $6,170,000. After quite a thorough investigation the Bureau of the Budget recommended the sum of $3,300,000. There is a balance of $700,000 in the fund now within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Entomology to expend for this purpose, and this will make a total of $4,000,000 to be expended for the purpose, if my amendment is agreed to.

I wish to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that there is an acreage all told of 51,000,000 acres that will have to be treated. A large percentage of these 51,000,000 acres is Government owned. In doing this work we shall be assisting not only our farmers but the United States Government.

A few of my colleagues in the House wanted me to ask in this amendment for the full amount recommended by the Bureau of Entomology, which knows more about the needs of the situation than any Member of Congress. I have read the evidence offered before the subcommittee, and it is without dispute that it would require in the neighborhood of $6,000,000 to do this job well and successfully. I call your attention to the explicit language of Dr. Strong, here in Washington, who is at the head of this Bureau:

I am telling you what it will take to actually do the job and do it right. I do not know how we would start with $3,300,000 to do the job the way it ought to be done.

Mr. Chairman, the man who said that is a man who knows the situation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska. Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In the conference I had with the gentleman from Montana I was perfectly willing to agree that the gentleman's amendment should call for only $3,300,-000. The gentleman has stated that Representatives coming from other States which are affected by this grasshopper plague felt the gentleman should ask for $6,000,000 in his amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. To support the $6,000,000 estimate, and particularly to support the gentleman's amendment, as I have now agreed to do, I wish to read a telegram I have received from Mr. Howard Wahlgren, president of the Nebraska Crop Growers' Association. It reads as follows:

Believe Bureau of Budget's $3,300,000 recommendation for insect control wholly inadequate. Think six million minimum impera-tive. Midwest chinchbug invasion also indicated this year. HOWARD WAHLGREN

President, Nebraska Crop Growers' Association.

In other words, the $3,300,000 the gentleman is asking is the minimum that can possibly be used to do the job.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly; I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. I have only a short time. I will yield to the gentleman in a few minutes.

There are 24 States that are usually infested by grasshoppers. Eleven of these States are infested not only by the grasshoppers but by Mormon crickets. I saw something that was supposed to be a Mormon cricket exhibited out here. If that is a Mormon cricket, the fellow who got that sample got it right out of the egg. It did not have a chance to grow.

Think of the vast territory with which we have to deal. If you will read the report of the hearings, you will find it points out that over $6,000,000 of damage was done in three or four counties in eastern Montana when the grasshoppers from the Dakotas lifted themselves into the heavens and alighted in our fields in Montana. It is also shown in this record that every dollar expended means a saving of $79 to the stock growers, the wheat growers, and the grain growers of these 24 States. Are we going to economize by depriving these people of the very thing that might help to enable them to fight one of the greatest menaces we have in the West?

If we can raise a crop in the West, our relief roll will be decreased. If we do not raise a crop, we will have to come here and ask help from this committee, headed by our distinguished friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woon-RUM], one of the finest men in the House and one of the ablest and most influential, and he will help us. We can further call on the Republican side of the House, which includes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], although they are the watchdogs of the United States Treasury on that side, and we can also appeal for help to our friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] and also to the minority leader, our good friend, Joe Martin, and many other good and worthy Republicans. Those gentlemen over there will help out. However, we do not want to be coming here every year on our knees, asking Congress for help. We want a chance to fight the thing we have nothing to do with creating. God Almighty created these things for some purpose, although I do not know what.

Now, help us by helping yourselves, and, in the language of my distinguished new friend, the affable gentleman from the State of Florida, PAT CANNON, vote against the grasshoppers and against these crickets by voting for my amendment

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Wash-

Mr. HILL. Is not time an essential element in this problem?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; it is very important.

Mr. HILL. If we get the money now it will do more good than if we spent $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 later in the year. Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Minne-

Mr. KNUTSON. The Bureau of Entomology asked for $6,000,000?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Six million one hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. KNUTSON. The committee has reduced this sum to $2,000,000?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Right. Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman now offers an amendment to increase the sum by $1,300,000?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Correct; the amount the Budget recommended.

Mr. KNUTSON. And this with the $700,000 now available still leaves the amount 331/3 percent less than the sum the Bureau of Entomology stated is necessary?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. You cannot eradicate grasshoppers piecemeal. All the money that has been spent by the Government in this work in years gone by will be absolutely wasted unless we continue the work to a point where we have the grasshoppers whipped.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right; and not only that, but this is a national problem.

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely. Mr. O'CONNOR. When we are affected out there, you are likewise affected in the East.

Mr. KNUTSON. And it involves the food supply of the American people.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Montana if this is not a yearly occurrence.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Almost; yes.

Mr. THORKELSON. And it will require actually about $6,000,000 to take care of it properly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. THORKELSON. And it is a matter that is affecting the Nation's food supply.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. THORKELSON. And it is a pest that should be destroyed now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska. Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that this grasshopper infestation started in the drought-stricken area and began in a few States, but is now gradually covering one-half of the States of the Union?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. And unless we can check this invasion of grasshoppers and Mormon crickets and similar pests, every State in the Union will become involved.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. In fact, 2 years ago, just to show the devastation that was wrought in Nebraska alone, there was $11,500,000 worth of crops destroyed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes, and I would like to have the last 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is one of the most important, in my opinion, that has been offered on the floor of this House. We can all appreciate the destruction caused by fire; we can all appreciate the destruction caused by water, because those two forces are very spectacular, but the destruction caused by grasshoppers, if you please, in my State, has been greater than that caused by either of the two forces I have just mentioned.

For several years there has been waged in my State of New Mexico, as well as in many other agricultural and livestock States, an incessant and unrelenting battle against the grasshopper and other destructive pests. Our State and hundreds of individual citizens have cooperated with the Federal Government in this warfare against needless destruction, with the result that much progress has been made and thousands of farmers and stockmen have been given new courage and confidence in the hope that the battle will continue until the grasshopper scourge has become a thing of the past; that their crops and livestock feed will not be destroyed and their meager earnings and assets will not be wiped out in future years.

I doubt if anyone who has not seen an invasion of countless millions of grasshoppers under way can realize the extent of the destruction that is wrought. In my State of New Mexico last year and for several years previous these pests have laid waste to lands over an area of more than 5,000 square miles, have destroyed every vestige of living green growth, stripped crops and grass as cleanly from the earth as though a fire had swept through. As a result thousands of our farmers have been forced on the relief rolls; men and women who have battled against drought and all other forms of adversity but have not given up the fight until the grasshopper army destroyed virtually all they possessed.

The Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine has given valuable assistance in the past; it is desirous of continuing its campaign against these destructive pests; and I believe we should appropriate the modest amount necessary. The citizens are willing again to give their services voluntarily, but there must be sufficient funds provided for the proper Federal agency to do its share, because this is not purely a State proposition. The menace spread from State to State and throughout the Nation. The march of these destructive pests extends over hundreds of miles and as they travel they deposit their eggs in the earth, which, if they are not destroyed, mean that the scourge will be repeated year after year.

In my opinion, it is far better economy to increase this appropriation by a million dollars, and thus prevent the recurrence of this destruction, than to pare down and stint the appropriation and then spend hundreds of millions caring for the farmers whose crops have been destroyed, and to swell further the already too-large relief rolls of the Nation.

Is it not consistent with the policy of this Congress in its program for rehabilitation of the farmer to provide sufficient funds to insure him against destruction of his crops? The farmer, the very backbone of our national economic structure, should not be forced to work long hours for months, then be confronted overnight with the destruction of all that he has accomplished. Most certainly that is not conducive to the kind of morale that makes good American citizens and contributes to a return and maintenance of this country's economic welfare and prosperity.

I was hopeful the gentleman from Montana would offer his amendment as I had expected he would, and, in fact, as he had told me he intended to, providing for the full amount of $6,000,000. The Bureau of Entomology, if you please, is the technical bureau of this Government qualified to pass upon the particular subject we are considering here today. That Bureau recommended somewhat in excess of $6,000,000 in order to do this job properly. If you do such a job in part, you do not do it at all, in my opinion or in the opinion of those well qualified to pass upon this subject.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the recommendations of the Bureau of Entomology are based partly also upon recommendations which were made by officials of 24 States in which there is grasshopper infestation and in which they outlined the needs of their respective States? Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is correct. I have a telegram from our agricultural college and I have the following letter from the Governor of our State, the Honorable John E. Miles:

STATE OF NEW MEXICO. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Santa Fe, January 17, 1939.

Hon. J. J. DEMPSEY,

Hon. J. J. Dempsey,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY Dear Congressman: Recalling the experience that we had last year with the grasshopper situation in some of our counties, and feeling that we will have a similar experience this year, I am wondering if it would be possible to pass a bill in Congress appropriating a certain amount to be used for emergencies of this kind.

I am going to ask that the legislature here set aside a small sum to be used for this purpose, as our financial condition will not permit us to appropriate enough money to conduct the kind of a permit us to appropriate enough money to conduct the kind of a war that is necessary to destroy the grasshopper menace.

Anything you can do along this line will be appreciated by all concerned.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN E. MILES, Governor.

We have cooperated with the Federal Government in attempting to eliminate this pest, but I am afraid if the committee's recommendation carries here today it will mean that the farmers in certain of our Western States will be forced, unwillingly and by circumstances beyond their control on relief. Instead of coming here asking for $3,300,000 as we are today, and as the Director of the Budget recommended to this Congress, we are going to have to spend, maybe, $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 in taking care of people who could take care of themselves if the Federal Government would give them this assistance to which, I think, they are entitled.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman give the members of the Committee a list of the States that are threatened at the present time with grasshoppers, or are already infested, and where the officials of those States have already indicated that grasshopper control methods are necessary?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The list includes the States of Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not believe it is stating the situation too strongly to say that the grasshopper and other insect pests constitute a greater danger to the Republic than any enemy abroad against whom we are preparing to spend $1,600,000,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I quite agree with the gentleman and, frankly, this is a matter affecting the entire Nation, if you please. There is nothing about it that is partisan and there is nothing about it that involves politics. Every farmer in the list of States I have read to you is affected whether he be Democrat, Republican, Communist, Socialist, or what-not.

Mr. KNUTSON. And this involves the welfare of the American people.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Positively; and I trust the Committee will vote to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this amendment. In fact, I have sent to the desk an amendment increasing this appropriation from $2,000,000 to $3,300,000, the figures represented in the amendment of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I consider not alone the opinion of the Department of Entomology on this subject, but as one of those who have lived in a section of the country that has suffered devastation twice in the last 5 years by the grasshopper infestations, I think I can speak from the experience of myself and others there on the matter of the need of eradicating this pest. We need $6,000,000, beyond a doubt. This amendment calls for only $3,300,000, and that, with the amount on hand, would give us approximately $4,000,000 to combat the plague.

The grasshopper destruction in Wisconsin was something almost unknown until recent years. Twenty years ago I do not suppose there was a farmer in the State who ever had any serious experience with the plague of grasshoppers, but in 1935, following the drought of 1934, thousands of acres of alfalfa, clover, corn, grain, and grass in general were destroyed by the visitation of that year. It is easy to say that the loss to the farmers of the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota ran from twenty-five to thirty million dollars, and perhaps $40,000,000, just because of the plague in 1935. We had again had a visit from the pests in 1937, following the drought of 1936, and again the devastation was just as

We cannot say what may happen this year. It depends much upon the weather in April and May as to whether or not we will have another devastating experience, but if we do have it, because we are without this protection, we shall have more millions of losses to the farmers.

The farmers out in that northwest section are now very hard beset. Farm mortgage foreclosures have become so numerous that communities are being changed, transformed, by people leaving their farms following foreclosure proceedings, and going to cities to look for employment. Unless we can protect the farmers still on their farms from the losses which follow such calamities as grasshopper devastation, we shall have more foreclosures and a more important relief problem, and as has been mentioned, we will have more and more farmers moving into the cities for employment, or for work on the W. P. A., or to go upon direct relief.

It seems to me there are other places in which we can economize rather than by cutting down the funds needed for farmers of this Nation for the protection of the food supply of the Nation, for the protection of their crops, and for the protection of that income which will enable them to remain on the farm. I appeal to everyone here to vote for this increase in amount by voting for this amendment. Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. Would the Government not be helping itself to properly provide protection and for the extermination of these insects, inasmuch as it has the crops insured and would lose money if they are destroyed?

Mr. HULL. In many instances, yes.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HAWKS. And would not the farmers of our State rather have that type of protection than they would the benefits from the Triple A?

Mr. HULL. Most of them would. In fact, losses suffered by grasshopper invasions in Wisconsin in recent years exceed by far the amount received from the Triple A.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, coming from the State which probably had the first experience with Mormon crickets, my purpose in rising at this time is to ask unanimous consent that I may, in an extension of my remarks, include the reason these crickets got their name-that is, Mormon crickets.

The CHAIRMAN. Permission to include extraneous matter must be had in the House, not in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Very well; I shall ask that permission when we get into the House.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]. Coming from the State of Utah, I can speak from first-hand experience not only for myself but for the people of my State, dating clear back to 1848, of the destructive and devastating habits of crickets and grasshoppers. When we speak of grasshoppers or crickets or other insects as being capable of destroying millions of dollars in crops, people without experience usually smile. This is usually the reaction of Members of the House without this experience when they are confronted with proposed legislation appropriating large sums of money for the extermination and destruction of crickets, grasshoppers, and other insect pests. I am happy that many sections of the United States are free from this type of crop destruction, but I wish that every Member coming from such a fortunate section could come out to my State and witness just one invasion of Mormon crickets.

It might be of interest to the Members here today, Mr. Chairman, to have me relate to them the story of the first invasion of what are now called Mormon crickets in the State of Utah. The Mormon pioneers, after having been persecuted and driven from pillar to post, from one State to another, for many years, finally determined that their only hope, in order to be able to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience and according to the tenets and teachings of their own faith and religion, was to go to a land so desolate that no other people would want it. It was because of their devotion to and faith in their religion and God that they left their homes in the beautiful city of Nauvoo, Ill., on the banks of the Mississippi River, suffered the hardships and privations of crossing the plains and mountains of western America by ox team and hand cart. and established their homes in a land which had been condemned by the few who knew it as the Great American Desert. They were willing to suffer all of these privations. hardships, and make whatever sacrifices were necessary in order to establish their homes where they would be unmolested and able to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Little did they dream of another menace in the form of insects. They arrived in Salt Lake Valley on July 24, 1847. After preparing temporary homes. they immediately began to construct ditches and canals for the diversion of waters from the mountain streams flowing into the Great Salt Lake for the irrigation of crops which they began to plant. This was the first irrigation known to the North American Continent. Hundreds and hundreds of acres of winter wheat were put into cultivation. These early pioneers realized that with the meager provisions they brought with them, their lives depended upon planting and raising crops at the earliest possible time.

When the spring of 1848 came and their winter wheat began to sprout and grow, and other crops planted by them began turning what was a formidable desert into beautiful fields and gardens, they were all happy, contented, and industriously applied themselves to the irrigation and cultivation of their first crop. Their happiness and contentment. however, were soon dispelled and in their place came fear and horror of famine and starvation. They were thousands of miles from nowhere; their only communication with the outside world was by means of ox team. This fear and horror came in the month of May when myriads of destructive crickets rolled in black legions down the mountain sides. and attacked the fields of growing grain. The tender crops fell an easy prey to their fierce voracity. The ground over which they had passed looked as if scorched by fire. Thoroughly alarmed, the community-men, women, and childrenmarshaled themselves to fight the ravenous foe. Some went through the fields, killing the crickets, but crushing much of the tender grain. Some dug ditches around the farms, turned water into the trenches, and drove and drowned therein the black devourers. Others beat them back with clubs and brooms, or burned them in fires. Still the crickets prevailed. Despite all that could be done by the settlers, their hope of a harvest was fast vanishing, a harvest upon which life itself seemed to depend.

They were rescued, as they believed, by a miracle—a greater miracle than is said to have saved Rome, when the cackling of geese roused the slumbering city in time to beat back the invading Gauls. In the midst of the work of destruction, when it seemed as if nothing could stay it, great flocks of gulls appeared, filling the air with their white wings and plaintive cries. They settled down upon the half-ruined fields. At first it looked as if they had come but to help the crickets destroy. But their real purpose was soon apparent. They came to prey upon the destroyers. All day long they gorged themselves, disgorged, and feasted again, the white gulls upon the black crickets, like hosts of heaven and hell contending, until the pests were vanquished and the people were saved. The birds then returned to their habitat, the Lake islands, leaving the grateful settlers to shed tears of joy over their timely deliverance. A season of scarcity followed, but no fatal famine; and before the worst came, the glad people celebrated, with a public feast, their first harvest

The gull is still to be seen in the vicinity of the Great Salt Lake. The wanton killing of these birds was made punishable by law. Rome had her sacred geese; Utah would have her sacred gulls, forever to be held in honor as the heavensent messengers that saved the pioneers.

These great old pioneers, being grateful for their deliverance, regardless of the source, and knowing that these sea gulls had saved them probably from famine and starvation.

became forever grateful and indebted to them.

Years later, after the pioneering stage in Utah had passed, a monument was erected to the sea gulls by the Mormon people, which monument can be seen now by all visitors to Utah who take time to go to the temple grounds in Salt Lake City. It is my information that this is the only monument in existence built out of respect, honor, and gratitude to a bird or birds.

From this story comes the name of Mormon cricket, which is referred to in this legislation.

I have related it quite in detail, in an effort to impress my colleagues here today with the tremendous, devastating, and destructive force of these insect pests, and hope that whenever you read the name "Mormon cricket" in legislation such as this that in case you are tempted to smile, you reflect on this story of early pioneer life in Utah, and I am sure that, when you do, you cannot help but join the representatives of the Middle West and the West in their plea for relief from such devastation and destruction.

It will probably be pointed out by the gentleman from Virginia in charge of this legislation that the Bureau of Entomology failed to spend $700,000 which was appropriated last year. I am informed, and I think the record substantiates this information, that the reason for not spending it is that it came too late. Instead of this, therefore, being an argument against an increased appropriation, it should be an argument in support of it. It certainly indicates that this Bureau of the Government is spending whatever money comes to them wisely and when it can be used most efficiently. The record is replete with testimony justifying the additional amount called for by the amendment of the gentleman from Montana, which would raise the appropriation to the amount approved by the Bureau of the Budget. If an insufficient amount is appropriated, it will be too late, a month or so hence, to do much good. It is simply a matter now of spending a sufficient amount to preserve 50 or 60 times that amount in crop values.

I urgently request, Mr. Chairman, support of this amendment. Thank you.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Case of South Dakota to the pending amendment: On page 4, line 8, strike out "$3,300,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,417,000."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to restore the amount asked by the Bureau of Entomology. The $5,417,000 is the amount, plus $700,000 carryover, that would make the amount requested by the Bureau, I am offering this amendment at the suggestion of many Members, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hope], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], and others who have felt we should ask for what the Bureau, which is in charge of this work, thinks is necessary to handle this situation.

I realize that the bill provides $2,000,000 and that there is a carry-over of $700,000 which makes a total of $2,700,000 available which is the total amount appropriated last year. But I call attention to the fact that last year there also was a carry-over so that there was actually obligated and spent $2,823,000. Of that amount, $299,514 was spent for handling the fight against the white fringed beetle, with which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs] was concerned. So that $300,000 last year was spent on the white fringed beetle. That was a big increase from $56,000 for beetles in the previous year. If the beetle is increasing at that rate, then the whole appropriation should be correspondingly increased.

It might appear from the discussion on the floor today that the West is primarily interested in this fight. But the testimony of Dr. Strong in the hearings indicated that there are 24 States in which grasshopper infestations will be serious this year. There are 11 States in which Mormon cricket infestations will be serious. This concerns all of us. The hoppers move.

Another point which should be brought out is the large contribution made by the farmers themselves and the local people in handling this matter. Dr. Strong testified before the committee that $1,320,853 was provided locally, plus the farmers' labor of handling and distributing the bait, a total estimated to be equivalent to what was spent by the Federal Government.

The reason we need more this year than we needed last year is that the job was not completely done last time. Unless the Federal bureau cleans up the idle and open land the hoppers breed there and fly onto the farmers' fields that have been cleaned up. As has been pointed out, if we can get this money into the hands of the bureau so that at the beginning of the season they can make a comprehensive plan really to clean up on the grasshoppers, then we hope that next year we will not have to come and ask for grasshopper appropriations. If this could be set up now, then we could get our money's worth for what we have spent.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am glad to yield to my new colleague from South Dakota. Mr. MUNDT. May I suggest another reason why the Government has greater responsibility this year?

Mr. CASE of South Dakotta. I shall be glad to have the gentleman offer his suggestion.

Mr. MUNDT. I have from the Crop Insurance Corporation the figures covering crop insurance on wheat, by which they are obligated, in case there is a loss in this territory, which seems inevitable unless adequate grasshopper control takes place. They are obligated at the present time, according to estimates received this morning, as follows: In Wyoming, 139,000 bushels; South Dakota, 3,732,000; in Montana, 6,709,000 bushels; North Dakota, 4,659,000 bushels; in Colorado, 1,077,000 bushels; North Dakota, 4,659,000 bushels; Kansas, 8,148,000 bushels; Iowa, 876,000 bushels; or a total of 32,263,000 bushels of liabilities that the Crop Insurance Corporation must pay if the grasshoppers eat up these crops. It seems to me it is not only good insurance but good economy to favor this amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. That brings out a point that has not been brought out fully, which is, that in this way the Government can underwrite its own insurance. It is self-protection. It is definitely better to spend this money to prevent crop destruction than to spend it for relief of suffering that comes from loss of crops.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not true that the grasshopper campaign has been largely ineffective in past years because this appropriation has been inadequate and also because it has come too late to do any good?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Case of South Dakota) there were—ayes 65, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'Connor) there were—ayes 74, noes 96.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Johnson of West Virginia.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 77, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION

Administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act, Department of Labor—Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for all authorized and necessary expenses of the Wage and Hour Division in performing the duties imposed upon it by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, contract stenographic reporting services, travel expenses, including not to exceed $2,500 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Wage and Hour Division when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, printing and binding, law books, books of reference, periodicals, manuscripts and special reports, newspapers and press clippings, supplies, office equipment, advertising, postage, telephone and telegraph service, reimbursement to State, Federal, and local agencies and their employees for services rendered, fiscal year 1939, $850,000: Provided, That the Secretary of Labor may allot or transfer, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, funds from this appropriation to any bureau or office of the Department of Labor to enable such agency to perform services for the Wage and Hour Division.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso beginning in line 3, page 5, and including the rest of the section on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill that imposes additional duties upon the Bureau of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

CHILDREN'S BUREAU

Salaries and expenses, child-labor provisions, Fair Labor Standards Act, Children's Bureau: For an additional amount for all authorized and necessary expenses of the Children's Bureau in performing the duties imposed upon it by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; printing and binding; supplies; equipment, newspapers, books of reference, periodicals, and press clippings; and reimbursement to State and local agencies and their employees for services rendered, as authorized by continuity of such art feed by continuity. local agencies and their employees for services rendered, as authorized by section 11 of said act, fiscal year 1939, $79,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for expenses of attendance of cooperating officials and consultants at conferences concerned with the work of the Children's Bureau under the Fair Labor Standards Act when called by the Children's Bureau with the written approval of the Secretary of Labor, and shall be available also in an amount not to exceed $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Children's Bureau under said act when incurred on the written authority of Bureau under said act when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

PROCUREMENT DIVISION, PUBLIC BUILDINGS BRANCH

Bureau of the Census Building, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.: For the acquisition of the necessary land and the construction of a building for the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce under the provisions of the Public Buildings Act approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, including the extension of steam and water mains, removal or diversion of such sewers and utilities as may be necessary, and for administrative expenses in connection therewith, $3,500,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph just read on the ground it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. To which paragraph does the gentleman refer?

Mr. TABER. I refer to the paragraph just read, entitled "Treasury Department-Procurement Division, Public Buildings Branch."

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the paragraph recites that it depends for authority upon an act approved May 25, 1926, which authorized the construction of public buildings within the District of Columbia.

The funds that have been spent out of the appropriations within the District of Columbia and the limit of cost already fixed thereunder, total $106,643,416, while the authorization provided in that act for buildings within the District of Columbia is $50,000,000. The authorization has already been exceeded by $56,643,416.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] desire to be heard?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not. I think the authority cited in the paragraph to which the point of order is directed is ample authority for the legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] say about the increase over the authorization in the original law, referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not know one way or the other, whether the gentleman's statement is accurate or inaccurate. The general statute authorizes the acquisition of land and the erection of buildings in the District of Columbia for governmental purposes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have before me the statute in question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman in reference to that portion which applies to the

Mr. TABER. On page 633 it is provided-

That such amount as is necessary, not to exceed $50,000,000 of the total amount authorized to be expended under the provisions of this act, shall be available for projects in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is the gentleman quoting verbatim from the act?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does not the citation to which the gentleman calls attention refer to developments in the so-called Triangle? This is not in the Triangle.

Mr. TABER. No. It is the entire authorization.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The general statute itself, as cited in the act, reading it hurriedly, does contain a limitation, but that limitation would seem to apply to certain specifically authorized buildings. In other words, the limitation does not apply to the general authorization for the acquisition of land and the erection of public buildings in the District of Columbia for governmental purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman whether or not there is in that general law a limitation of cost and does this amount exceed that limit as specified in the act?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As I said, reading the matter hurriedly, the limit of cost does not appear to fit this particular case.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is reading from the statute which shows a limitation. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] says there is no such limitation in the general law. What is he reading

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am reading from the general law.

Mr. MICHENER. Which print? Is it the Code or is it the statute?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This is the statute.

Mr. MICHENER. I think the gentleman understands the purpose of my question. The statute controls. If there is a difference between the statute and the Code, the statute controls. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] states he is reading from the statute.

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. MICHENER. And the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is reading from the Code. If there is a difference, then the statute controls over the Code.

The CHAIRMAN. There is this further question about which the Chair would like information. Assuming that the statute provides for a limit of $50,000,000, has this been exceeded or not?

Mr. TABER. I have the items covering buildings that have been built in the District of Columbia, which total the figure I gave. I may have left out some items, but I have all the items here.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did the gentleman get his fig-

Mr. TABER. From the Procurement Division.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman that information in documentary form?

Mr. TABER. I have it just as it came over the telephone this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] desire to be heard further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Only to reiterate that in the general law the sum of $50,000,000 appears to be earmarked for certain buildings. In addition to that, it would appear that general authority is given for the acquisition of land and the erection of public buildings for the Government in the District of Columbia if and when Congress appropriates the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please read that portion of the statute which earmarks the $50,000,000 for construction within the District?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I shall read from the Code of the Laws of the United States of America, section 341, title XL, under the heading "Acquisition of sites for and construction of public buildings," appearing on page 1793:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide suitable accommodations in the District of Columbia for the executive departments, and independent establishments of the Government not under any executive department, and for courthouses, post offices, immigration stations, customhouses, marine hospitals—

And so forth. When it gets down to the money designation, it states:

Provided further, That aside from land that may be acquired for a site for a building for the Supreme Court of the United States, and for enlarging the site of the Government Printing Office, or erecting a storage warehouse or warehouses, the sum of $50,000,000, hereinafter authorized for projects in the District of Columbia, shall be used exclusively for the purpose of acquiring, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, south of Pennsylvania Avenue and west of Maryland Avenue—

And so forth. In other words, does not the limitation apply to the projects "hereinafter authorized"?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been following the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, but would like to see what the gentleman from New York has to say with respect to whether or not the limitation of $50,000,000 applies to those buildings that are not included in this census location.

Mr. TABER. It does not apply to buildings such as the Supreme Court Building, the Government Printing Office, and the warehouses, and they are the only ones to which the $50,000,000 limitation does not apply. The words "not exceeding" are further along in the particular statute from which the gentleman from Virginia has been reading, as I recall. I do not have the book in front of me at the moment, but that is the way I recall it. The gentleman was reading another part of the statute. There are three or four pages of the statute in the book I had.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman believe section 345 of title 40 of the Code places any limitation on section 341, which is the general authorization section of the statute?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it could not unless it specifically repealed that limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The particular question in the mind of the Chair is that the gentleman from Virginia cites a general law that sustains his point, yet the gentleman from New York cites another provision, and the Chair is not fully convinced at the present time that such provision imposes a special limitation. The language in section 345 to which the Chair has reference states:

Provided, That such amount as is necessary, not to exceed $50,-000,000, of the total amount authorized to be expended under the provisions of this chapter—shall be available for projects in the District of Columbia.

That is the particular language cited by the gentleman from New York. It is subsequent to the language cited by the gentleman from Virginia. Does the latter language put a limitation on the first authorization? If it does, the point of order is well taken, provided that amount has been exceeded, and the Chair does not know whether or not it has been exceeded.

What has the gentleman from Virginia to say on this point? Does the gentleman have any information in that regard?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in order that we may consider the matter a little more deliberately, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will then be pending, and we shall all have an opportunity to look into the matter. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Doxey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader had expressed to me the intention of asking unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next, so, on his behalf, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia, acting at the request of the majority leader, asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if it is the purpose to continue with this bill when the House convenes on Monday?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman that is the purpose, as far as I know.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has anyone on the majority side announced what the program will be for the first part of next week?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There has been some discussion of that. However, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is here now, and I shall refer the gentleman's inquiry to him.

Mr. RAYBURN. There will not be anything the first 3 days of the week except speeches, as far as we know now. I am certain that is true. There will probably be no legislation taken up next week, with the exception of the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Dirksen asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Record.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including therein an address delivered by our colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patrick].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record my remarks made in Committee this afternoon and include therein various governmental information regarding hurricane and flood damage in Massachusetts and all New England.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. Shanley, Mr. Healey, and Mr. O'Connor asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the Record.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein an article written by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton], which appeared in Collier's magazine under date of January 1, entitled "After Roosevelt, What?"

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how long is the article?

Mr. HALLECK. It is not very long. It will take up a couple of pages in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It will take more than that.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 23, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS—VIEWS OF MINORITY

As in legislative session,

Under authority of the order of the Senate of the 20th instant, Mr. Adams, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, reported it on January 21, 1939, with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 4) thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] that at the end of the executive session he hopes to have the Senate resume legislative session for the purpose of the presentation of petitions, the introduction of bills and resolutions, and to have a message read from the President, otherwise the Chair would submit the message of the President at this time. If Senators desire to go into legislative session to introduce resolutions and bills, and so forth, the Chair, of course, will entertain such a motion.

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. McNARY. I would object to going into legislative session. I think we should clean up the Executive Calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me make a statement. On last Friday unanimous consent was given the Committee on Appropriations to make a report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. I do not know whether or not the majority report has been printed, but I desire to file minority views; and, inasmuch as the majority report is now in the Printing Office, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the minority views may be printed at once.

Mr. McNARY. I think that consent was given by the Senate on Friday, although, of course, it may be renewed today.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the minority, to have printed the views of the minority.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be assumed that the consent given the committee to make a report would carry with it the right to file minority views as well as the majority report.

Mr. KING. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that be so, that is all I desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the general rules, the committee report is one thing and the minority views another.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the desire to have these documents printed together, I think that there might be an exception made, and if necessary, that the Senator from Tennessee might be permitted to file the minority views.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection, as in legislative session, to the Senator from Tennessee filing the views of the minority?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to object, of course, but I desire to ask if the hearings have been printed

Mr. McKELLAR. They have been. Mr. BORAH. And are they available? Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; they are available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(Mr. McKellar, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the views of the minority of that committee to accompany the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, which were ordered to be printed as pt. 2 of Rept. No. 4.)

NOMINATION OF HARRY L. HOPKINS TO BE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins to be Secretary of Commerce? [Putting the question.]

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise not for the purpose of delivering a speech or making any unnecessary remarks, but because I am sure there are some Senators who desire to address the Senate on the subject of the pending nomination; and, therefore, I did not want the Vice President to proceed too rapidly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the duty of the Chair to put the question that is pending before the Senate if no Senator seems to care to address the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume any of the time of the Senate with reference to the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins. However, I do wish to insert in the RECORD a statement made before the committee by Mr. William Averell Harriman, chairman of the Business Advisory Council of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Harriman appeared before the committee asking the privilege of making a statement endorsing Mr. Hopkins for the office of Secretary of Commerce and recommending the confirmation by the Senate of his appointment. He did not act officially in behalf of the council, but stated that because of his position as chairman of the council he desired to make the statement which I ask to insert in the RECORD. I ask also to have his statement followed by a list of the membership of the Business Advisory Council. These gentlemen belong to both political parties. The character of the membership will be some indication to the Senate of the kind of man Mr. Harriman is and should be of interest in connection with the statement he made in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement of Mr. Harriman is as follows:

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM AVERELL HARRIMAN, CHAIRMAN OF THE BUSI-NESS ADVISORY COUNCIL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, NEW YORK CITY

The CHAIRMAN. Give us your name. Mr. HARRIMAN. William Averell Harriman.

Mr. HARRIMAN. William Averell Harriman.
The Chairman. Your address?
Mr. Harriman. 59 Wall Street.
The Chairman. Your occupation?
Mr. Harriman. I am a partner of Brown Bros., Harriman & Co., private bankers, and chairman of the board of the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

The CHAIRMAN. You wish to make a statement? Proceed.

Mr. Harriman. In addition to those activities I am at the present time chairman of the Business Advisory Council for the Depart-ment of Commerce, and as such I am very much interested in this appointment.

I have asked you for the privilege of appearing before you gentlemen to endorse Mr. Hopkins for this position, and to express my faith in him in this position, and my belief in his ability, and my expectation that he will fill the position with competence and

I have known Mr. Hopkins since the spring of 1933. I came to the conclusion that he was well equipped to handle this position prior to my discussing the policies that he intends to pursue in that position.

I noticed in the newspapers that there were rumors about the possibility of his appointment. I gave the matter very serious consideration, and came to the decision that I have stated prior to discussing them with him.

It has been my privilege to spend hours with him since his appointment, and it is my conviction that he has a real grasp of the problems. He has appeared before you very modestly and said that he does not know much about these problems, but from my dis-cussion I have had with him I believe he does understand the

His experience in dealing with the unemployment situation has brought him in contact with a great many businesses, and he has been here studying in his own way the things that have caused unemployment. I find that he has a grasp of them. And when he makes up him mind what he wants to do it is my belief that he will move in directions that are sound and in the interest of the stimulation of business.

The Chairman. Let us get what you mean by that. What do you mean by that. What do you mean by the directions that are sound? Let us get some idea of your meaning.

Mr. Harriman. Mr. Hopkins' views or my views?

The Chairman. No; you said that you believed that he would move in directions that are sound. You have some ground for that statement. I should like to know what you think are sound directions. directions.

Mr. HARRIMAN. I will be glad to generalize on that question. think one of the difficulties of the present situation has been the lack of understanding of objectives between business and government. In connection with that the council is on record to the President a year ago indicating the directions in which the Council felt that the administration and business could move for the advantage of the country. The council has been advising the Secretary of Commerce since the spring of 1933. It has expressed its independent point of view on many occasions to the Secretary and to the President. The President has released some of those reports, and they are a matter of record. Now, those generally indicate that there are some fronts in which a closer understanding of objective and method between government and business would be helpful for the economy, and I believe Mr. Hopkins has a grasp of those problems. What he is going to do I do not know, because in my talks with him I suppose most of the time he was asking me

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read the list of the membership of the Business Advisory Council, which I send to the desk. It will consume but a minute.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina. Because of the confusion in the Chamber, I was unable to hear all that was said. I am sure the Senator is not suggesting, merely because Mr. Harriman appeared as a personal witness before the committee, that that carries with it the implication that the entire advisory council is joining Mr. Harriman in recommending the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan states that he did not hear all that I said. If he had been able to hear it, he would have heard me say that Mr. Harriman did not say he was speaking in behalf of the council as a result of any action taken by them. He said that he was speaking because, as chairman of the Business Advisory Council, he was interested in this question. I had the list of the membership read because the membership which has just been read elected Mr. Harriman as its chairman.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This the membership created by Mr. Roper while he was Secretary?

Mr. BYRNES. Originally the council was created by the Secretary. According to my information, members have been added by the council. I may say to the Senator from Michigan also that I happen to know that on the day Mr. Harriman appeared three members of the council came to Washington voluntarily for the purpose of testifying. I know that one of them, Gen. Robert G. Elbert, of the council, asked about making a statement. Mr. Donald Comer also desired to make a statement. They were advised by friends that the committee did not think it necessary to go into any exhaustive hearing along that line.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is this the same group which threatened two or three times during the past year or two to resign because of its dissatisfaction with the general trend of affairs?

Mr. BYRNES. I never heard of the group doing that. If they were a group who wanted to resign because of general dissatisfaction, I cannot understand why they did not resign. If they expressed that view and thereafter did not resign, I think they must have concluded that they had been misinformed by the Senator from Michigan or some other person and changed their minds after they had learned the facts and desired to continue in office.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Or else they lost their nerve; one or

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator from Michigan wants to say that some of the gentlemen whose names have been read lost their nerve, he may say it. I think they have just as much courage as has the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he will state for the Record how this committee of whom he speaks is really made up, by whom appointed, and from what sources it comes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I understand that the Business Advisory Council was originally formed at the suggestion of the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Roper. Thereafter its members were appointed on the suggestion of this group of businessmen, who have themselves selected members to serve representing the various industries of the country.

Mr. LEWIS. What is it they do? What office are they assumed to perform?

Mr. BYRNES. They come to Washington once a month and present to the Department of Commerce and to the President their views about the business of the country, and express their aims and hopes with reference to the relationship between business and Government.

Mr. LEWIS. May I assume that if they had had objection to Mr. Hopkins they could have expressed it to the President; that it was within their power so to do?

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, Mr. President. On the contrary, there can be no question that the members of this council feel that the appointment is in the interest of good relations between business and Government, and will be productive of good.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly upon the pending question. I had not intended to discuss the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins until the debate of last week, but I think it is desirable that during the course of the discussion someone make the statement which I intend to make.

I intend to vote for the confirmation of Harry Hopkins' nomination without making any apologies for the fact that I intend to vote in that way, without making any apologies for anything Harry Hopkins has ever done. I think Harry Hopkins is an honest, capable administrator. I think he has done a marvelous job as Administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

It has been interesting, in going through the RECORD, to see that one by one speeches have been made in opposition to Mr. Hopkins which started out with the statement that the speaker appreciated the fact that no votes would be changed by the speech which was about to be made. I do not know just why those speeches were made if those who were speaking realized that they were not going to get any results from their speeches. I am inclined to believe that most of the speeches which have been made with reference to Mr. Hopkins, in opposition to him, have not been directed at Mr. Hopkins, but have been directed at the President of the United States and are part of the effort which is being carried on, and has been carried on for these last 2 years, to attempt to break down the confidence which the American people have in the President of the United States and the confidence which they have in the Government of the United States.

I wish to say to those who are so free in their criticism, who are so free in their efforts to destroy this confidence, that they are doing precisely the same thing in this country that was successfully done in some of the countries of Europe, and which resulted in breaking down the democracies in various parts of the world. With world conditions as they are, with conditions in this country as they are, this is no time to let personal peeve or partisan politics destroy the confidence of the American people in their Government.

It has been rather amusing to me to see some of the Republican Members of this body rise and attempt to drape themselves around with a mantle of purity and, in discussing the Works Progress Administration, complain because of some politics. One thing can be said—and the Republican Members of this body should appreciate that factthat while the Works Progress Administration was carrying on the biggest job which has ever been handled in this country, spending more money than ever has been spent by any man in this country, it has not been possible to point a finger of suspicion at Mr. Hopkins' administration so far as honesty is concerned.

If it were not tragic it would be amusing to think of members of the Republican Party, some of whom were here during the days of Mr. Harding, Mr. Daugherty, and Mr. Fall, one of whom sat in the Cabinet during that period of time with those gentlemen, during the greatest saturnalia of corruption this Nation has ever seen, having the temerity to come and attempt to maintain that there is some purity in the position they take. I cannot believe that 6 short years of being out of office has made the Republican Party pure. It has made many of the members of that party very hungry, because they have not been on the pay roll; but it has not been able to purge from the minds of the American people the memory of the corruption which was rife during the 1920's.

As I have said, Harry Hopkins was placed in charge of the biggest and most difficult problem any man has ever had under his control in this Nation. We have here a report from the so-called Sheppard committee, and I have read it all. The remarkable thing is that, with all of the Members of this body in constant contact with Mr. Hopkins and all of them desirous of having this or that to do with the efforts of the Works Progress Administration, there was so little politics in relief as was disclosed by the Sheppard committee report.

I might say that when I speak in behalf of Harry Hopkins I speak in behalf of a man with whom I had probably the most disagreeable fight I have ever had in my life. I was amused the other day at the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt] assuming, as he did, that those of us who happened to support the administration were able to get projects or appointments. He calls us administration "yes" men; he can call me that if he cares to, but he cannot impute to me a motive and imply that I am an administration supporter merely in order to get some projects for my State or secure some appointment.

There are different ideas about these things. It happens to be my idea that when I go out to the people of my State and pledge myself in a campaign to a program of support of the President of the United States, it is a solemn pledge, and I do not think I have any right to come here and break the word which I gave to the people of the State. I think it is an honorable thing to carry out my word, and I am rather surprised that those who do not agree with that point of view feel free to attack those of us who do entertain that opinion and attempt to impugn our honesty and our motives.

As I have stated, I was amused at what the Senator from West Virginia said in his remarks last week, because, so far as I am concerned, I have never been able to get any appointments from the Works Progress Administration. I think that fully 90 percent of the administrative staff of the Works Progress Administration in my State belongs to the Republican Party, and I am constantly receiving resolutions from Democratic clubs protesting against that situation. That is the kind of politics we have in the Works Progress Administration in my State; and that is the State about which I know.

The Senator from West Virginia states that those of us who support the administration can get projects through which should not be undertaken. During my 4 years here I have had put through two projects which were contrary to the rules of the Works Progress Administration. They were for two country schools, which I visited and inspected. The schools which were being used and occupied were fire traps, and the lives of several hundred pupils were endangered every day. That is the only time that Harry Hopkins veered to the slightest extent from the rules and regulations which were laid down.

A number of years ago a great lawyer in this country said that we should not forget that every son of man travels an unbeaten path, a road beset with dangers and temptations which no other traveler knew, and that his footsteps should only be judged in the light of the strength he had, the burden he had carried, and every motive, open and secret, that impelled him here and there.

To a greater extent than any other man engaged in our Government Harry Hopkins traveled an unbeaten path. The money which was appropriated for the Works Progress Administration was appropriated by the Congress, and there is not a Member of this body, though there were objections here and there to some parts of the appropriations, who did not approve some sort of an appropriation for work relief in this country.

The burden Mr. Hopkins carried was made heavier by the fact that this body itself insisted on having the right of confirmation of State directors of the Works Progress Administration. The Members of this body, by and large, during the last 5 years have done everything they could to try to have something to do with the administration of the Works Progress Administration in their own States.

In the light of everything that has happened, considering the employment of millions upon millions of people and the expenditures of billions of dollars, I think it remarkable that even this bitter partisan opposition has not been able to point to one thing which was dishonest or corrupt. I think that not only should the nomination of Harry Hopkins be confirmed, but I think there is due to him and due to his administration some measure of apology from those who are now making use of this opportunity in an attempt to smear the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins to be Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, because of the fact that I served as a member of the Sheppard committee, and am also a member of the Commerce Committee, which considered the pending nomination, I feel it appropriate that I should express myself at least briefly concerning the pending nomination.

It seems to me that an effort was made in committee, and has been made here upon the floor, to give importance to the fact that there was not more in the way of political offenses found by the committee than is catalogued in the committee report. I think it should be noted in this connection that the Sheppard committee was appointed in June; that it held its first meeting, if my recollection is correct, on the 17th of June; that no member of the committee had previous experience in work of this character; that its staff was as inexperienced as the committee membership itself; that the investigators were hurriedly gathered together without great knowledge on the part of the committee as to their particular qualifications for this character of work; that the committee was limited by the terms of the resolution to investigations in those States in which a senatorial election was held, and that the committee acted only upon specific charges filed before it for which there seemed to be some measure of substantiation either in the letters or in the affidavits submitted. In the face of these facts I think it is most astonishing that the committee found what the record discloses, and that it is not significant and not important what the committee did not find.

I wish to emphasize in the next place, Mr. President, that the Sheppard committee was not seeking evil in the W. P. A. I think the Senate will be ready to accept my assurance that at least the majority members of the committee would have been most pleased if they had found nothing which they felt under obligation to report to the Senate with respect to W. P. A. and its activities. I think that majority would have been glad if the facts before them justified the committee in exonerating, not only Mr. Hopkins but the entire organization, of political activity of any sort or character.

I desire to emphasize next, Mr. President, that the committee investigators were not head hunters. I am warranted in the statement—and the chairman of the Sheppard committee can correct me if I am in error—that every investigator sent out was informed and cautioned that he must proceed in his task without prejudice, without bias; that he was expected to search only for the truth and to report the truth as he saw the truth to the committee.

Mr. President, these were the general circumstances, and that is the spirit in which the Sheppard committee undertook its investigations.

The discussion before the Senate has ranged somewhat widely. Reference has been made to various States. But because there has been an effort, so it seems to me, to convey the impression that the offenses found by the Sheppard committee were the acts of local politicians, that the conduct to be censured was that of subordinate officers of the W. P. A. only, and in particular because I think there has been more of a disposition to challenge the findings of the committee with respect to the activities in the State of Kentucky than elsewhere, I want in what I shall say to limit myself largely to the State of Kentucky.

I can refer to but three or four matters, and to those only most generally. First, I direct the attention of the Senate to the Stokes' charges, so-called. The Stokes' charges appeared in two editions of a group of newspapers throughout the country. The first was of June 6 and the second was of June 13. The principal importance, so it seems to me, of the Stokes' charges is not in the detailed specifications found in them, but is rather in the fact that a respectable newspaper investigator and reporter, after personal investigation upon the ground, believed conditions existed which justified him in publishing throughout the country the charges which were carried in the press of the Nation.

The publication of these charges brought knowledge to the W. P. A. of intolerable conditions in the State of Kentucky, or at least it brought knowledge to them that responsible persons believed these conditions to exist in that State.

What did Mr. Hopkins do with respect to the Stokes' charges? Within 2 weeks after their publication he had taken notice of them; he had sent investigators into the State of Kentucky; these investigators had undertaken that investigation and completed their study of conditions; they had made their reports to Mr. Hopkins; Mr. Hopkins had studied those reports and he had prepared that lengthy broadside which appeared in the press on June 30. Mr. Hopkins moved with celerity; he moved promptly; he did as thorough a job of whitewashing as has ever come to my No one was punished as the result of those charges of Mr. Stokes. No one was disciplined as the result of those charges and the findings of the investigators with respect to them. No one was discharged. On the contrary, the full implication of the announcement of Mr. Hopkins was that the W. P. A. could go full speed ahead in their political activities, not alone in that State of Kentucky but throughout the Nation. The committee of the Senate, after its own investigation, with Mr. Hopkins conclusions before it, sustained these charges in their majority and in their substance.

The Stokes' charges were not the first knowledge of political activity brought to the attention of the W. P. A. As early as March 3 the State administrator of Kentucky had notice that requests for lists of certified workers were coming into headquarters from political organizations in that State. On March 3 he wrote a letter saying that these requests were not to be responded to by his subordinates, but were to be submitted to him in the head office of the W. P. A. in the State.

Finally there came a particular request from the headquarters of one of the candidates for the United States Senate in Kentucky. What did the State administrator do with respect to that request? He met it, and through his subordinates he authorized a canvass that was to be carried on in the first relief district of the State. That canvass was thorough and systematic. It was conducted by means of lists which were prepared in W. P. A. offices, by W. P. A. employees, during W. P. A. working hours, and on paper furnished by the political headquarters of one of the

The lists went from the district supervisor in that particular district down through 9 area timekeepers into the hands of 340 project timekeepers and the canvass was made. The canvass was of something like 18,000 certified W. P. A. workers in 32 counties of the State of Kentucky. The canvass covered more than one-quarter of all the certified W. P. A. workers in the State of Kentucky. It not only covered those workers but it made inquiries as to their families. When the canvass was completed there was in W. P. A. headquarters detailed information concerning over 17,000 W. P. A. workers in that district and information concerning their families.

The blanks asking for various items of information were brought into headquarters, and there the information upon them was transferred to typewritten sheets. Then those typewritten sheets in 32 counties of this first district in the State of Kentucky were turned over to the local political organizations of this candidate in the entire 32 counties of the district.

It was suggested that this canvass was conducted so that information might be carried to W. P. A. workers as to their voting rights, how they might register, and information of similar nature. However, the fact remains that the information was turned over to the headquarters of only one political candidate, and then the original lists were destroyed and no other political candidate had opportunity to see the records. The information included, when completed, a detailed canvass with respect to some 35,000 or 40,000 voters in that district and it was made available to the organization of a single senatorial candidate. W. P. A. was in politics in this district. The activity was not of local politicians, not of subordinate officials, but of the highest administrative officials of W. P. A. in the district.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHITE. I have only a limited time, and I hope the Senator will not press a question.

Let us take the second district in the State of Kentucky. In that district a canvass, somewhat similar to the canvass carried on in the district to which I have just alluded, was ordered by the district area engineer, and the information sought was similar to that sought in the other district of Kentucky. In this particular area, among other requests for information on the forms, there was a space for "remarks." That item was not used in the first district to which I have alluded. What was to be inserted under the heading "re-

Under "remarks" was to be stated whether or not, in the opinion of the person checking, the person checked, the relief worker, was favorable to the W. P. A. program and to one of the candidates for the United States Senate in that State. Such was the information called for by the blanks circulated in the second district in the State of Kentucky. When the data were received they were analyzed, and then the original data were destroyed and were not made generally available.

In the third district in Kentucky, mimeographed forms were used, as elsewhere. For what purpose were the mimeographed forms used? The forms were used to elicit information of a definite political character. The information was all gathered and made available for political purposes, and to political ends.

Mr. President, I do not accept the theory that because a nomination is to a Cabinet office it must be accepted as a matter of course. The Constitution does not so suggest. The office concerns not the President alone, but our commercial and industrial life. The same obligation rests upon the Senate as in the case of other nominations. I do not propose to approve the further surrender to the Executive of the constitutional rights of this body and the abandonment of its solemn obligations with respect to appointments.

The record of W. P. A. political activities, and of Mr. Hopkins' part therein, confronts the Senate. Some urge that the admitted offenses were committed by his subordinates, and that he should not be held accountable. Others have pleaded in the debate in a sort of confession in avoidance, that the fault is not his, because in all that he did, in all that he permitted, he but yielded to the demands of higher authority. These are but the excuses of sophistry and subtlety. Mr. Hopkins' name is before the Senate. We must pass upon him, and we are not privileged to consider others at this time; others who may also be responsible.

Mr. President, has there been pernicious political activity by Mr. Hopkins and the W. P. A.? I think the record demonstrates it beyond peradventure. The admissions of Mr. Hopkins and the record before us furnish an affirmative answer, and no other answer can be found.

Have those who have been guilty of these offenses been punished in any respect? They have not. With the record known to Mr. Hopkins, his failure to discipline and remove the offenders, those who have breached their trust to the distressed of America, is as great an offense as the political activities of which there is so general disapprobation.

The vote we are about to cast is of approval or of disapproval. It has never been made clear to me, Mr. President, how I can condemn a deed and exalt the doer thereof. I cannot condemn the political activities of Mr. Hopkins, and the activities for which he must stand chargeable, and vote to reward him with higher political honors.

At almost the first meeting of the Sheppard committee the chairman, with the authority of the committee, announced the objectives of the Senate resolution to be maintenance of the integrity of the elective processes; preservation of democracy at its most vital point, the ballot box, and free exercise of the voting franchise; and, to that end, the prevention of an improper use of money, or of any coercion or intimidation by any person, group, or agency outside or inside the Government. Did the committee statement accurately reflect the objective of the Senate during the last session of Congress? Does that sentiment find sanction in the conscience of the Senate today? By our votes today we may serve the purpose announced, or we may prove our disloyalty to it.

Mr. President, we boast of our right of free speech and our free press; we take pride in our right of assembly; we glory in our freedom of conscience and of worship, but these are no more secure than is the freedom of the ballot. The freedom of the ballot is in direct jeopardy if those, hungry and without shelter, who, in poverty and distress, face a forbidding future, must accept political servitude as the price of public relief in their misfortunes.

Mr. President, I feel constrained to vote against the confirmation of the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything about the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination. However, my recollection was refreshed by listening to the speech of my friend the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. I was just a little astonished that the Senator from Maine should be so outraged at the puny charges which have been laid at the door of Mr. Hopkins. I was surprised that he could work himself into such a frenzy about "pernicious political activity" and about the free exercise of the franchise and the coercion of voters on W. P. A. and refer to servitude as the price of their misfortune. That surprised me because, Mr. President, in 1936 I was on the Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, which was similar to the committee of which the Senator from Maine was a member during the last campaign. The committee of which I was a member, as one of its duties in that campaign, found it necessary to investigate some of the things that were going on in Maine. The Senator who has just spoken, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], was a candidate for reelection in 1936 in Maine.

There is a statute in that State which provides that a pauper may not vote, and the attorney general of the great State of Maine, from which the eminent Senator who has just spoken comes, had construed that statute to mean that a man on W. P. A. was a pauper and could not vote in Maine; the Republican organization in Maine was using that statute and that construction of the statute by the attorney general of the State of Maine to prevent poor, unfortunate people on W. P. A. in the State of Maine from casting their votes, thus pauperizing all those who were on W. P. A. because they wanted to vote. They were going to apply the screws of that statute to the poor, unfortunate people who were on W. P. A. in Maine, and the Senator from Maine never had a word to say about it.

The committee listened for a voice coming from the woods in Maine that we would recognize as the soft and dulcet tones of the Senator from Maine protesting that his State should say that a pauper should not vote; but we listened in vain for such a voice. The Senator from Maine never said a word. Quite to the contrary, he was ready to accept the votes that would come to him in 1936 by applying the pauper statute of Maine and saying to the paupers in Maine, as well as those on W. P. A., "You cannot vote."

Here is what the report filed by the election committee in 1936 said:

Of major importance in this connection was the revelation that election officials were threatening persons on the relief rolls that they would not be permitted to vote in the election because, under an interpretation of the law in Maine, they would be regarded as paupers and disfranchised. After examining the law on the subject Mr. Walter Myers, counsel for the committee, prepared a memorandum reviewing the pauper laws in Maine, and expressing doubt as to whether anyone receiving relief, even though it should come from the State treasurer of Maine, would be disqualified as a voter. This information was sent to State officials by the committee, and they later clarified the situation by a new interpretation of the law.

But until the Campaign Expenditures Committee came along and investigated that matter and called it to the attention of the country they were applying in Maine the pauper statute to W. P. A. workers; they were not going to let them vote; and the Senator from Maine had nothing to say about that. "Pernicious political activity." What more pernicious political activity can Senators think of than for a State to attempt to enforce such a dastardly law as that; a law that would disfranchise poor people simply because they did not have a job and the Government was going to give them an opportunity to work? "Political activity." The Senator from Maine is outraged because of what was done in Kentucky; but he never said a word about Maine in 1936.

I think I heard the Senator say that he was surprised not at what the committee of which he was a member this year found but at the things that it did not find; that he was surprised not at the things they found but at the things that they did not have time to go into. One of the things that would have been interesting, I think, to the Senate if the committee had gone into it would have been the hook-up in Maine between the Townsend clubs and the Republican Party. That movement did not start merely in 1938; it started also in 1936, because the report of the Campaign Expenditures Committee in 1936 pointed out:

In addition to questionable bookkeeping practices, the investigators found that some money had been received from persons interested politically in the Townsend movement. One individual stated that the Republican State committee had reimbursed him in excess of $250 for funds he had used to defray expenses of a group sent to the Townsend convention in Cleveland, and that this money was used to defray said expenses to Cleveland, and also to organize Townsend clubs. Canceled checks were found by investigators showing that the amount of reimbursement probably exceeded $500.

This year, of course, as everybody knows, the Townsend clubs backed the Republican candidates for Congress in the State of Maine. Oh, of course, that was not "playing politics with misery"; there was no "pernicious political activity" there; there was no "pernicious political activity" in paying the expenses of a Townsendite to the Townsend convention at Cleveland; oh, no; that would not be "pernicious political activity"; that would not be "playing politics with misery." That is just politics the way they play it up in Maine.

Mr. President, as I said a while ago, in 1933 all these Townsend clubs were supporting the Republican congressional ticket in Maine, and the Republican candidates were all for the Townsend plan. The Senator from Maine might have looked into that, but he did not find time to do it.

Now, of course, we are going to have the Passamaquoddy project before us, and the Senator from Maine is for Passamaquoddy. I hope that Passamaquoddy fails, for we ought not to have two big spending programs going on in Maine—Passamaquoddy by the Democrats and the Townsend plan by the Republicans.

Mr. President, I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the testimony of the Senator from Maine ought not to be weighed too heavily in the balance against Mr. Hopkins. In looking back over the record of 1936, I cannot feel very much outraged at what happened in Kentucky when I remember what happened in Maine. I bring this matter to the attention of the Senate in order that Senators may have a proper perspective in which to view the alarm that has been sounded by the junior Senator from Maine.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that what we have witnessed here in the last few days, from the other side of the Chamber in opposition to Mr. Hopkins, is just what the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] said a while ago. We find a bunch of professional mourners, mourning for the W. P. A. I was in China a few years ago, and I remember seeing a procession moving down the streets of Canton. It was a funeral procession. In front were some boys who were scattering papers; then along came some other men carrying some sort of thing with some tinkling bells and tinkling glass upon it; then behind them came a man dressed in a white robe, with anguish written on his face such I have never seen; the anguish and sorrow of the dear Master pictured upon the cross was nothing compared to the anguish and sorrow depicted on the countenance of this man. He was a professional mourner for the Chinese who came along behind the coffin. That is what we have witnessed across the Chamber today—professional mourners for the W. P. A. workers. They are very much concerned lest we destroy their right to the franchise; oh, they are very much concerned about that; but in 1936 and in 1934 they were concerned about destroying the character of people who were given jobs on W. P. A. It was then said: "People must not have jobs on W. P. A.; that would destroy their character." Now they want to protect their franchise.

Mr. President, I shall vote for Mr. Hopkins for the same reasons assigned by the Senator from Washington, because I think he is one of the finest administrators who have been produced by this administration or any other administration within a generation. I shall cast my vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins not because Mr. Hopkins has not made mistakes, but, if you please, sir, because he has made so few mistakes. What Senator here has said that Mr. Hopkins deliberately put politics into the W. P. A.? Senators speaking against confirming the nomination of Mr.

Hopkins have only pointed to the fact that, notwithstanding Mr. Hopkins was against politics in W. P. A., politics crept into W. P. A. In the 3,000 counties of the United States he administered this law. He had millions of workers under him, and he spent billions of dollars. Is it at all strange that somebody might break in and play a little politics in such a vast organization as that? The only thing that stands out in my mind is that there was so little of it.

Mr. Hopkins lays no claim to being 100-percent perfect. What Senator claims to be 100 percent perfect? Mr. Hopkins does not claim that he did not make any mistakes. He made some mistakes. Anybody administering such a program would have made mistakes.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins, not because I am a part of the present administration, not because I am known as an administration Senator, but because I believe in the splendid record that has been made by Mr. Hopkins, and his fine integrity and ability.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, for the first time, I think, in my senatorial career I shall, with the permission of the Senate, decline to vote on this nominee.

I believe, in the first place, that nothing Mr. Hopkins did or said was done or said without the sanction of the appointing power. I do not care to vote for Mr. Hopkins, because I do not want the impression to prevail anywhere that I approve anything that Mr. Hopkins has done or that Mr. Hopkins has said; nor do I approve the system under which he has acted. I voted against the lump-sum appropriation of $4,800,000,000, to begin with, because I thought any Senator who supposed it was not to be used for political purposes was simple. It was to be used largely for those purposes, and was used largely for those purposes. On the other hand, I subscribe to the view that the President of the United States should have the widest possible latitude in selecting his advisers; and if he wants men of the Hopkins type to advise him, I think he ought to be allowed to select them, because in no event could Mr. Hopkins give the President any worse advice than persons who surround him who are not subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Moreover, I do not think Mr. Hopkins is being "kicked upstairs." I do not think he can do one whit of the wrong as Secretary of Commerce that he is alleged to have done as Director of the W. P. A., because of all the departments of the Government, that of Commerce is the most innocuous.

But, as I have said, I do not care to have anybody think that if I were to vote for Mr. Hopkins—and should I vote, I would vote for him—I approve anything he has done or said. I do not want to have to go into that explanation to thousands of people who may wonder that I should vote for a man of Mr. Hopkins' character. I never would have appointed him. I do not approve, as I have said, of anything he has done, or, as I recall, anything that he has said; but I think he has done it all, and said most of it, in the confident belief that it would be sanctioned, if it had not been directed, by the appointing power.

So, with the assent of the Senate, I shall refrain from voting at all.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the frantic efforts that a few have made to tarnish the name, asperse the motives, and sully the reputation of Harry Hopkins have been as fruitses as the performance of the mountains, which, after long and excruciating labor, with the aid of a great earthquake, finally brought forth a mean, miserable, microscopic mouse. [Laughter.]

But the mountains did at last bring forth something. The enemies of Harry Hopkins have brought forth nothing. The failure of the attack is not surprising, because—

Against the head which innocence secures, Insidious malice aims her darts in vain, Turn'd backwards by the powerful breath of Heaven.

A more honorable, efficient, faithful public servant than Harry Hopkins has never been subjected to senatorial investigation, dissection, or disposition. During one of the most critical periods in American history he has had charge of a program of rehabilitation so vast and so far reaching in both its immediate and remote consequences that its mere contemplation staggers the mind and bewilders the imagination. He has successfully borne the heavy responsibility of directing the activities of an army of underprivileged human beings more numerous than the combined hosts that followed Xerxes and Caesar and Napoleon and Alexander the Great.

In comparison with the fabulous sums of public money which Harry Hopkins has, with stainless hands and heart as "chaste as the icicle that hangs on Dian's temple," spent to mitigate the misery of the unemployed, all the wealth that Croesus ever accumulated, and all the gold that Midas ever gained, shrink to the insignificant intrinsic value of the two mites which the poor widow threw into the treasury of the Lord.

Since George Washington was President, no other governmental official has, in the brief period of less than 4 years, ever rendered greater service to the people than Harry Hopkins has given them since he became the Administrator of Works Progress in 1935.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. BRIDGES. I merely want to ask the Senator if he meant to pass by President Roosevelt when he said Mr. Hopkins had rendered more service than any other man since George Washington was President.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I meant to include even the Senator from New Hampshire, and that is as far as it is possible for human exaggeration to go. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, compared with the accomplishments of the Works Progress Administration under Harry Hopkins, the labors of Hercules become as trivial as a schoolboy's chores in the twilight of a winter day.

As a result of plans which were formulated in Harry Hopkins' busy brain and executed in accordance with his commands, the Works Progress Administration has, among countless other things, supplied employment to more than 6,000,000 of the needy of the Nation.

In addition to rescuing these millions from the curse of enforced idleness and the slough of despond, it has given billions of dollars worth of service and permanent improvements to the people. It has constructed enough modern highways to reach twice around the world; it has improved a hundred and fifty-nine thousand miles of roads and streets-enough to girdle the globe six times and more; it has constructed a hundred and thirty airplane landing fields and improved a hundred and thirty-six more; it has laid 4,000 miles of water lines and 6,000 miles of storm and sanitary sewers; it has planted more than a billion trees to prevent soil erosion and floods and to provide building material for generations yet unborn; it has built, modernized, or improved 20,000 schoolhouses and more than 30,000 other public buildings; it has bound 20,000-000 library books; made 95,000,000 pieces of clothing for the poor; and supplied more than a hundred and twenty-nine million lunches to the needy school children of the Nation.

The Works Progress Administration, under the direction of Harry Hopkins, has enriched every State; it has benefited every county; it has improved every city; it has blessed millions who, through no fault of their own, were poverty-stricken and distressed.

Regardless of slanders that may be written about Mr. Hopkins with poisoned pens, and false charges that may be made against him by venomous tongues—in spite of all the abuse that may be heaped upon him by those who burn their incense upon the altar of hate and worship at the shrine of revenge—millions of deserving Americans will, to the end of their days, say to this great man: "We were jobless and you employed us; we were homeless and you sheltered us; we were naked and you clothed us; we were hungry and you fed us. But for your service we should have been sent to the poorhouse to live in desolation and die in despair."

But at least one critic inquires: "How do we know that Mr. Hopkins is qualified to discharge the duties of the Secretary of Commerce?" In view of Mr. Hopkins' resplendent record of achievements, the response to this inquiry is as self-evident as the answer to the question: "Can a woman talk, or a bird fly, or a fish swim?"

Anyone who can provide useful employment for more than 6,000,000 working men and women for whom the captains of private industry find it impossible to supply jobs can, in a satisfactory manner, perform the duties of any office under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

There is scarcely a community in the land in which some perfectly constructed road or street or schoolhouse or library or other public facility does not testify to the fact that Harry Hopkins is one of the most capable executives this country has ever known.

But two criticisms have been voiced in the Senate concerning Mr. Hopkins or the Works Progress Administration under his control, which must be answered. The first of these was pronounced by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. Reed]. After quoting from the report of the Sheppard committee concerning the solicitation of Works Progress Administration employees in a certain State to contribute to a campaign fund, about which Mr. Hopkins knew absolutely nothing, the Senator from Kansas said:

Mr. President, I have been in public life a long time * * *. But, in all my experience and in all my reading of the history of this country, never have I found an instance or instances where political practices were so sordid, where all considerations of fairness and decency were so disregarded as in the cases reported by this committee.

I do not charge Mr. Hopkins with ordering these things; I do not even charge that he was cognizant of all these things. I do charge, however, that these things have produced a condition that represents the lowest level of political management this Nation has ever known.

My brief acquaintance with the junior Senator from Kansas impels me to believe that he would not intentionally distort a truth or misrepresent a fact. Therefore I am forced to the conclusion that the Senator was a stranger to Washington during the time that Harry Daugherty, Jess Smith, and Gaston B. Means so administered the affairs of the Attorney General's office that Daugherty was indicted and tried again and again for his alleged high crimes and misdemeanors. And in spite of the failure of the jury to convict him, those who were here during the Daugherty regime are almost unanimously of the opinion that he should have been found guilty.

Apparently the Senator is not familiar with the fact that Albert B. Fall—Mr. Harding's Secretary of the Interior—for a bribe of a hundred thousand dollars helped to defraud the Government of its naval oil reserves, and for his crime was sent to the penitentiary.

Somebody has torn from the Senator's history the sordid chapter which records the fact that Thomas W. Miller, Alien Property Custodian under both Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge, was convicted of a high crime which he committed in office and was sent to the penitentiary.

The Senator's history must have failed to reveal the fact that a Republican Congressman from Kentucky, whose name was on Mr. Harding's ticket, was, while in office, convicted of a felony and sent to the penitentiary.

The Senator has forgotten that within the last 15 years the Republican Governor of Illinois was required by the supreme court of his State to account for a million dollars of misappropriated funds.

The Senator has forgotten that the Republican Governor of Indiana, who was elected on Mr. Harding's ticket, was convicted of a felony and sent to the penitentiary, and that Charles R. Forbes, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau under both Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge, was sent to the penitentiary for frauds perpetrated against the Government and the veterans of the World War.

In the light of this record of unprecedented criminal conduct on the part of Republican Cabinet officers, Republican Governors, and other high Republican officials, and in view of the fact that no one has been able to show that Harry Hopkins has ever committed a single offense or condoned a single violation of the law, let us hope that the junior Senator from Kansas will change his mind and vote for the confirmation of the nominee.

The only other serious criticism of Mr. Hopkins, which to my knowledge has emanated from a responsible source, is that of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges], who, when Democratic personages or policies are under consideration, is like the hero of the following story:

"At the beginning of the World War the owner of a store said in an advertisement, 'I hate Germany; I hate Austria; I hate Turkey. I am a hundred percent patriotic.'

"This merchant's competitor on the opposite side of the street, not to be outdone by his rival in the matter of patriotism, promptly issued an advertisement, in which he said, 'I hate not only Germany and Austria and Turkey; I hate everybody. I am 1,000 percent patriotic.'" [Laughter.]

So is my friend from New Hampshire—if it be patriotic to dislike Democrats in their official capacities.

The Senator from New Hampshire says:

Looking into Mr. Hopkins' background, according to the testimony before the committee, he fails to remember whether or not he was a Socialist, enrolled as a member of the Socialist Party.

A lapse of memory about an important matter like this is, of course, deplorable. But even if we admit that this grave charge is true, the friends of Mr. Hopkins will still find comfort in the fact that the nominee's memory is at least as good as that of the junior Senator from Kansas and much better than that of Herbert Hoover, who was once the Secretary of Commerce.

According to the record, in 1928 Mr. Hoover could not remember who had performed his marriage ceremony, how many political parties he had joined in a decade, or the name of the country of which he had been a resident for a period of 14 years. Indeed, his recollection and knowledge of his political affiliations were so utterly hopeless that in the State of Michigan in 1920 he became a candidate for the Presidential nomination as both a Republican and a Democrat at the same time.

In view of all which the Senator from New Hampshire, who would probably not admit that any prominent Republican could be guilty of any offense of omission or commission, or suffer from any infirmity touching his politics, should generously forgive Mr. Hopkins for having forgotten the exact nature of his registration on two occasions and join the majority in voting for the confirmation of the nominee.

Mr. President, the attacks that have been made upon Mr. Hopkins are about what every page of history—ancient, medieval, and modern—teaches us a good man of great accomplishment should expect.

Socrates, of whom Plato said: "He was the wisest, the justest, and the best of all the men whom I have ever known," was, for endeavoring to improve the morals and multiply the virtues of the materialistic Athenians, compelled to drink enough hemlock to put himself to sleep till the Judgment Day.

Columbus, as a reward for discovering the Western Hemisphere and giving to Spain a new world that was greater than the old, was bound with chains, cast into a dungeon, and permitted to die in want.

Abraham Lincoln, to whom the Nation will forever owe a debt of gratitude for his heroic service in abolishing slavery and preserving the Union, was when at the pinnacle of his usefulness and success murdered in cold blood.

Jesus of Nazareth brought redemption to all the world and salvation to all mankind. In return for His service and His sacrifice He was scourged by scoundrels; a crown of thorns was pressed down upon His brow; He was crucified between thieves and died in such horrible agony that the mere thought of His awful anguish will curdle the blood of the righteous till the end of time.

Therefore, in spite of the humiliation of being a target for unjustifiable abuse, Harry Hopkins should find comfort in the fact that his enemies in slandering him and persecuting him are placing him in company with the greatest immortals the world has ever known.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator mean to imply to this body, in bringing up Christopher Columbus and Abraham Lincoln and Christ, that he would put Harry Hopkins in the same category; in the same class?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, no one but the Senator from New Hampshire would ask that question. The Senator knows that no one who venerates everything that is holy would, in the matter of merit, be guilty of the unpardonable sacrilege of comparing any human being with the sinless Saviour. I referred to His crucifixion simply as an outstanding illustration of the world's ingratitude to a benefactor.

So far as Columbus and Lincoln are concerned, I do neither of them an injustice, nor do I pay the nominee an extravagant compliment when I assert that he has earned a place in the hall of fame with the great Italian discoverer and the great American emancipator.

Columbus gave his all to the world. Lincoln sublimely served the cause of freedom. Harry Hopkins has served the cause of humanity with a zeal comparable to that with which Paul of Tarsus preached the gospel to the gentiles, Father Damien nursed the lepers, and St. Francis of Assisi devoted his life to the service of the poor.

How appropriate it would be for the Senator from New Hampshire and a few other critics of the nominee to emulate a certain classical example and, in the presence of Harry Hopkins, remain as speechless and silent as Dante when he—

O'ershadowed by the wings of awe, Stood with Beatrice beneath the flaming lion's breast, And saw the seventh crystal And the stair of gold.

Senators, let us honor ourselves and our country today by confirming Harry Hopkins' nomination as Secretary of Commerce by an overwhelming majority. This is the kind of confirmation he deserves. Because as a result of his unparalleled achievements in behalf of the unemployed, if he should, at this hour, be unexpectedly and unfortunately summoned to that mysterious country from which no traveler returns, the last resting place of his ashes would become a pilgrim's shrine, and millions of the grateful poor, whom he has blessed, would raise to his memory a marble shaft as high as Washington's Monument and on it they would lovingly inscribe these words:

Nor wreek, nor change, nor winter's blight, Nor Time's remorseless doom, Shall dim one ray of glory's light That glids his sacred tomb.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest for the past few moments to what has been said by my very good friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lewis in the chair). The Chair asks the indulgence of the Senator from North Carolina so that the Chair may make a request of those occupying the galleries.

The Chair will say to those who now occupy the Senate galleries that it is necessary that they preserve quiet, because when they indulge in conversation their voices come down into the Senate Chamber, and Members of the Senate find it impossible to hear their fellow Members who are addressing the body.

The Chair also respectfully requests that Senators maintain as much quiet as they consistently can.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Presiding Officer.

As I was about to say, I listened with a great deal of interest for the past few moments—that is to say, since I reentered the Senate Chamber—to all that was said by my personal friend and colleague the Senator from West Virginia, whom I admire, and I want to state unhesitatingly that I am in thorough accord with all that I heard him say here; and knowing him as I do know him, and as I have pleasantly known him during the years that I have been in the United States Senate, I am perfectly willing, in addition, to state unhesitatingly that I am in accord with all that he said prior to my entering this Chamber. [Laughter.] That shows how much confidence I have in Matthew Neely.

The Senator from West Virginia was talking about Harry Hopkins, who has been nominated by our beloved President to be a member of his Cabinet, as Secretary of Commerce. I have this to say, Mr. President, that I think the President of the United States has a perfect right to surround himself by advisers in whom he has confidence, to surround himself by men whom he sees fit to select.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must respectfully say to Senators that they should address the Chair before taking part in debate in the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President-

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment. Mr. President, it is my understanding that I shall have only 30 minutes at this time in which to address the Senate. Am I correct in that understanding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then I shall have to ask my good friend the Senator from New Hampshire to bear with me for just a moment, and I shall be glad to yield to him at the expiration of my address. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I recognize that I shall be wasting the time of the Senate by addressing myself to the subject of the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination, for we all know that his nomination is going to be confirmed. We all know that there will be in the Senate only about 23 votes cast against him. So why should I presume to impose upon the time of the Senate or those honoring us with their presence here today, and who fill the galleries, by talking to the subject of the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination, when we know that his nomination is going to be confirmed?

Before proceeding to that which is closest to my heart, I wish to take this opportunity to state to the Members of this body that it will be my very great pleasure to cast a vote for

Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. President, I wish now to bring to the attention of this honorable body a subject that should be of more interest to it at this time than the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins. The subject which I am about to approach is one that should appeal to every legislator in the Congress of the United States, because it has to do with the ten to twelve million people who today are out of employment in the United States of America.

Mr. President, only a few days ago it was my privilege and opportunity to address this honorable body in relation to the influx of refugees, in regard to the influx of aliens from all parts of the world who are coming here daily for the purpose of and who are usurping jobs, positions, that rightfully belong to the millions of people in America who are out of jobs, jobs that rightfully belong to the God-fearing men and women who today are and who tonight will be walking the streets of America in search of honest employment. I am happy to have made the delightful observation during the present session that there are more Members of this body now interested in that subject than there were to be found interested in it at the last session of the Seventyfifth Congress.

Mr. President, in my last address to this body, in reference to this important subject, I brought to the attention of the Members of the Senate a clipping from one of the New York newspapers describing examinations which were being taken by 500 lawyers, doctors, dentists, and nurses; refugees, aliens from across the seas, who wanted to practice their respective professions in the United States. The Members of this body who did me the honor to listen were appalled when they learned from that article that some of the doctors from Germany, Italy, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Hungary, who sought to practice their profession here, found that they could not pass the examination required by the board of control of the city of New York, and those Senators who listened to my address were appalled to learn that some of those aliens who have come here to practice their profession had the audacity, the gall, to say that they would not abide by any ruling of the board of control of the State of New York, that they would not abide by the requirements relative to examination, and if they were not permitted to practice by comity, they would take the question to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator who has spoken many times upon the question of immigration and aliens. How can the Senator blame people who live in other countries for their desire to come to the United States when we have in the United States two cities of the beauty and with the climate of the little gem city of the mountains, Asheville, N. C., and the city of Seattle out in my State of Washington? I should like to have the Senator from North Carolina explain to me how it is that he always finds it so difficult to appreciate why people want to come to this country, because he knows as well as does everyone else, that these two places in this country, Asheville, N. C., and Seattle, Wash., act as magnets which attract to the United States the people of other countries.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I take this opportunity, this exceptional opportunity, to thank my distinguished friend from the great State of Washington for his contribution at this time. I appreciate what my friend has said about the little gem city of the mountains, Asheville, N. C., my home city, the most beautiful city on the face of the earth, and one of the most beautiful spots in North Carolina. The Senator is a representative of that State which has provided for the inspiration of the world the city of Seattle, the gateway to the great Northwest, the gem city of the western frontier. In order that he may be provided with information as to the amount of respect that the people of North Carolina have for his Commonwealth, in order that he may know that the people of his city of Seattle have provided inspiration for the people of North Carolina, I shall now take time to read an editorial from one of the daily newspapers of North Carolina, published at Wilmington, N. C., by my distinguished friend, the Honorable R. B. Page, in which he calls the attention of the people of North Carolina to the city of Seattle.

> [From the Wilmington Star of January 13, 1939] SEATTLE AS A PORT

An excerpt from a report by the War Department, dealing with the port of Seattle is of interest here in that it shows what Seattle has done in its climb to supremacy in the Pacific trade: "Facilities for handling traffic include 166 piers and wharves, 16 of which are operated as oil bunkering and 2 as coal bunkering facilities. Excellent dry and cold-storage warehouses are available and space is provided for the storage of bulk freight in the open. The port has drydock facilities which can accommodate vessels up to 927 feet in length and marine railways with lifting capacities up to 700 tons. Twenty-nine plants have facilities for repairing either engines or hulls of vessels. There are six grain elevators at the port, four of which are operated as public elevators. Towboats, lighters, derrick barges, tank barges, and car floats provide sufficient floating equipment for transporting freight within the port area, and equipment is available for use in wrecking and salvage work. ment is available for use in wrecking and salvage work.

ment is available for use in wrecking and salvage work.

"The port of Seattle district, which is coextensive with King County, is a separate municipal corporation which was established in 1911 and is under the jurisdiction of the Port of Seattle Commission. This commission has been active in promoting the interests of port, and many of the facilities for handling traffic are owned and operated by it, including eight public terminals in the outer harbor and one in the inner harbor, the public grain elevator at the Hanford Street terminal, and dry and cold-storage facilities at Spokane Street terminal, Bell Street terminal, and at pier No. 40, Smith Cove. The facilities owned and operated by the port commission are among the most modern and best-equipped terminals at the port and handle a great deal of traffic.

"During the period of 1927-36 the water-borne commerce of Seattle averaged 7,860,679 short tons annually. Imports, with an average movement of 370,855 tons, consisted chiefly of logs coal and coke, paper and manufactures, and cement and gypsum, while exports averaged 527,911 tons and consisted principally of grain and flour, lumber and lumber products, canned and dried fruits and vegetables, and logs and poles. Coastwise receipts moved in an average volume of 3,865,202 tons, the principal commodities in this trade being petroleum and petroleum products, logs and poles, sand and gravel, and fish and marine products. Coastwise shipments average 1,425,776 tons and were mainly shipments of lumber, logs and piles, grain, flour and feed, petroleum and its products, fish and marine products, and fruit and vegetables. Intraport and local traffic averaged 1,670,935 tons per year. During the calendar year 1937 the total water-borne commerce at Seattle amounted to 7,642,900 short tons.

Mr. President, I attribute much of the development of the great city of Seattle to my colleagues in the United States Senate; to the fact that once upon a time, not so many years ago, the able Senator who at this moment presides over the Senate resided in the State of Washington, and the people of the great Commonwealth of Washington exercised the splendid judgment of sending him to the Capital of their country as their Representative in the Halls of Congress. At the same time I shall not let pass the opportunity to congratulate the people of the State of Illinois for sending him from the great Commonwealth to the Senate of the United States. I refer, my colleagues, to your friend, to my friend, and the friend of the American people, the Honorable James Hamilton Lewis, beloved by all who live within the confines of the greatest nation upon the face of the earth.

I attribute the phenomenal growth of Seattle likewise to the continued fine representation which the State of Washington has sent to the Halls of the American Congress. I speak particularly of my colleagues, Lewis B. Schwellen-BACH and HOMER T. BONE.

I believe I have evidenced my appreciation of the action of the Senator from Washington in calling attention to my beloved home, the little gem city of the mountains, one of the most beautiful cities of North Carolina, a city located within the confines of the greatest political subdivision in all the world, the State of North Carolina.

Mr. President, I wish to speak further today in regard to the all-important subject of restricting immigration and mandatory deportation of alien criminals and alien undesirables.

As will be recalled, a moment ago I spoke about the 500 professional men and women, doctors, lawyers, dentists, and nurses, who have come in from the four corners of the earth, aliens usurping the business of the millions of boys and girls, men and women, who today are walking the streets in search of honest employment. However, I have something else to bring to the attention of the Senate today, something in which Senators will be interested, something which I clipped from a newspaper several days ago. It pertains to the smuggling business in America.

I was dumbfounded when, on January 19, I observed the following in the columns of the Washington Herald, with a New York headline:

ARREST BARES SMUGGLING OF ALIEN HOSTS INTO UNITED STATES

ARREST BARES SMUGGLING OF ALIEN HOSTS INTO UNITED STATES

New York, January 18 (C. T. P. S.).—An international alien smuggling ring, geared to bring more than 10,000 aliens a year into the United States via the Canadian border and widely patronized by Jewish refugees, was disclosed today through the arraignment of its Canadian director in Brooklyn Federal court.

Arrested at Rouses Point, N. Y., Friday night and held incommunicado since then at Ellis Island, Spyros Cyrcos, 38, of Montreal, boasted to Assistant United States Attorney James G. Scileppi that he had conducted at least 25,000 aliens across the border within the last 2 years.

border within the last 2 years.

If that statement be true—and I have no doubt that it is—it reveals a shameful state of affairs in the United States of America. It is shameful that we should permit thousands upon thousands of aliens annually to enter the United States illegally, and to remain here in violation of our law, particularly in view of the fact that we have millions upon millions of boys and girls, men and women, in this country, for whom we have been endeavoring to find employment for the past 5 years. As yet, we have been unsuccessful in having industry absorb those millions upon millions of boys and girls, men and women.

I am happy indeed to learn that our legislators in Washington are now more deeply interested than ever before in this momentous question. In reference to retaining the barriers in the form of regulations, in order that those who desire to come to America may not become public charges, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that a number of years ago a ruling was made to the effect that no alien should be provided a visa and be permitted to come to this country unless our consular agents were convinced that he would not become a public charge, unless the consular agents were convinced that if the alien were permitted to come to American shores he would not at a later date of necessity be supported by the American taxpayers.

In that connection I wish to say that those regulations were carried out to the satisfaction of those who sought admission to our gates until 2 years ago when the refugees of the world attempted to crash our gates. I mentioned some instances a moment ago when refugees who are members of professions from across the seas said they would not abide by the rules and regulations of the New York licensing board, but that they would take the cases up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I now bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that we are at this hour faced with the situation of aliens in various countries of the world exerting pressure on our State Department to instruct American consuls that they should be more liberal in reviewing the applications of the thousands upon thousands of aliens who would bring about the admission of themselves into this country for the purpose of competing with American labor.

Mr. President, when last fall, in November and December, I was in central, eastern, and continental Europe I made it a point to visit our Embassies, Legations, and consulates; I made it a point to talk to the American representatives; I made it a point to go into those quarters of our consulates and Embassies where aliens who were making applications for visas and admission to the United States necessarily had to go. I was permitted an opportunity of making observation of the character of the people who were demanding entrance to the United States. I learned on that trip last fall that the State Department of the United States had attempted to put a different interpretation than that which had formerly been put upon the law. As a result thereof, in order to deal with the situation as I should like to do in behalf of the from ten to twelve million God-fearing, unfortunate men and women in this country who are out of employment, I directed a communication to the State Department and requested them to provide me with the information which I sought in reference to certain instructions which had been issued to our consular agents abroad. As the result, at this hour I call the attention of the Senate to what I am about to read, because I wanted from them an

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Washington, January 19, 1939.

My Dear Senator Reynolds: I have received your letter of January 16, 1939, requesting a copy of the instruction dated January 5, 1937, sent to all diplomatic and consular officers discussing the public charge excluding provision of section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

While the Department does not distribute its instructions to the general public, I am glad to comply with your request and take pleasure in sending to you herewith a copy of the instruction under reference.

Sincerely yours,

G. S. MESSERSMITH, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. President, please listen to this "visa instruction," dated January 5, 1937. That is when the rush began on the part of the aliens of the world to enter the United States of America.

VISA INSTRUCTION

Consular administration of the public charge and other provisions of the immigration laws.

It is addressed:

To American diplomatic and consular officers:

Sirs: There have been an increasing number of complaints re-ceived by the Department and some recent public criticism that the visa work of the consuls is not being carried on in a fair and impartial manner.

Who is making the complaints? The complaints are being made by the hundreds of thousands of aliens who are practically demanding admission to the United States of America. Ten years prior to the date of the instructions we never had any complaint from aliens about the way we administered our laws and in carrying out the immigration regulations of the United States of America, but these complaints come only when the rush begins to enter the United States so that more Americans may be thrown out of work.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to my friend from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Has the Senator from North Carolina any figures available indicating the number of aliens who have entered the United States illegally in recent years?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I can only answer that by providing the Senator with an estimate of my personal opinion as to the number of aliens who are in the United States today illegally and who have remained here illegally over a term of years. In providing that answer I wish to say that, in my opinion, there are today in the United States of America between 5,000,000 and 7,000,000 aliens who entered here illegally or who have remained within the confines of the United States illegally. No Member of this body, no man in the United States, can properly prove that I am wrong, because I cannot prove that I am right.
[Laughter.] To explain that remark, so that I may not be misunderstood, I say now I cannot prove that those who disagree with my assertion that there are from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 aliens in the United States today illegally and who maintain that there are only two, three, or four million aliens illegally in the United States are wrong, and they cannot prove that I am wrong. Why? Because, I am ashamed to state, ours is the only nation in the world not possessed or provided with an alien registration act. Until the Congress shall pass a bill which I have introduced calling for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens, we will never know how many aliens there are in America.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President— Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield now to my distinguished colleague from the Lone Star State of Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the discussion of the Senator from North Carolina. Let me ask him if there are so many aliens here—and I do not dispute it-why do not the authorities deport them? If they are here illegally, why do not the Government agencies which are charged with the duty of sending them back to wherever they came from take action?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is what I have been trying to find out for the past 5 years. Mr. President, upon the floor of the Senate I have fought for days and days and hours and hours when an effort was made to pass a bill which, in my opinion, would let down the floodgates of immigration. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], who at the moment presides so ably and in such a distinguished manner over the Senate, will recall that at the last session we discussed upon the floor of the Senate more than 2.300 cases known as hardship cases. and I could not understand, for the life of me, why the aliens in those cases were not deported and why even now they are being held here from day to day and week to week and month to month and year to year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair regrets that he has to tell the able Senator from North Carolina that his time has about expired, as he has only a half minute

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then, Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent to be permitted to finish the reading of the document I had started to read, if there is no objec-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A unanimous-consent request can be made by the Senator and the Senate can act upon it. The Senator from North Carolina tenders a request that he have unanimous consent to conclude the reading of the document to which he refers. Is there objection? Chair hears none.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Chair and the Senate for their courtesy.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to read without comment, for I know how vitally interested my colleagues are in this subject; I know that they all, on this side as well as on the other side, are interested in providing work for Americans and in keeping out of this country those who would usurp American jobs. So, in view of the courtesy extended to me and the fine consideration I find here always, I shall read without comment.

Sies: There have been an increasing number of complaints received by the Department and some recent public criticism that the visa work of the consuls is not being carried on in a fair and impartial manner, particularly that the public-charge provisions are not being properly administered and that the consuls are acting under the mistaken idea that they are responsible for keeping the issuance of visas to a minimum.

The immigration policy as expressed by Congress in the Immigration Act of 1924 permits the issuance of immigration visas, within the limits of the quotas, to aliens reasonably able to meet the the limits of the quotas, to aliens reasonably able to meet the requirements of the law.

The officers' responsibility is to reach a correct decision in each case, based upon a fair evaluation of the evidence, viewed with practical common sense, in order that the decisions reached shall not be subject to just criticism. As administrative officers, the consuls are charged with the duty of developing the essential facts, favorable as well as unfavorable to the alien, and of applying to the facts the correct standard of the law. To do their work properly, they should maintain at all times an impartial, detached. perly, they should maintain at all times an impartial, detached, judicial attitude.

The applicant should be courteously received and given helpful The applicant should be courteously received and given helpful advice and proper assistance in presenting the facts in his case. Care should be taken to avoid cause for the complaint which has been made in specific cases that persons applying for visas have been discourteously received by members of the consular staff; that they have not been permitted to present their documents or discuss their cases; that after complying with certain requirements they have been met with demands for additional documents of which they could have been advised in the first instance; and that they have been put to needless inconvenience and expense in obtaining unnecessary documentary evidence. Consular letters have failed to refer to and discuss important evidence, giving the impression that such evidence has been ignored in reaching the decision, and that the decision has not been taken upon the basis of all the evidence presented. all the evidence presented.

all the evidence presented.

It is important for a consular officer to understand that the public-charge provisions of the law exclude persons "likely" to become a public charge; that is, persons in whose cases facts exist making it "probable" that they will become public charges. The law does not exclude persons who may "possibly" become public charges. Section 23 of the act of 1924, in placing the burden of proof upon an alien to show that he is not subject to exclusion, only requires him to bring forward evidence from which it may reasonably be concluded that he is not "likely" to become a public charge. He is not required to show a guaranty of support to obviate a "possibility" that he may become a public charge. An understanding of this distinction is of the greatest importance to the correct administration of the public-charge clause. Unless each case is decided upon the basis of the "probabilities," improper administration results, and applicants reasonably able to qualify under the law are unjustly refused visas to which they are entitled. Such action affords ground for just criticism of the officers and the Department. and the Department.

Visa refusals of persons whose assurance of support is furnished by distant relatives in the United States have caused considerable adverse comment because consular officers have considered that the adverse comment because consular officers have considered that the expression of willingness by a person to support a less near relative is insufficient to establish that he is not likely to become a public charge unless a case is made out by a showing of past material contribution to his support or the existence of very unusual circumstances. Letters have contained statements to the effect that visas have been refused because the relationship between the persons is not sufficiently close to imply the existence of a legal or moral obligation on the part of the affiant toward the applicant. The mere fact that a person promising support is not closely related to the applicant, or that he is not under a legal or moral obligation toward him is not sufficient to warrant the rejection of the evidence of support as inadequate. The relative, in furnishing the evidence of support as inadequate. The relative, in furnishing the evidence, has in effect said that in spite of the absence of any direct obligation on his part to support his less near relative, he nevertheless desires voluntarily to undertake such an obligation, and if he offers reasonable explanation of his desire to do so and is financially able, the evidence is to be accepted.

The conditions in certain parts of the world have led relatives in the United States to feel keenly the difficult lot of their kin abroad and have inspired them with anxiety for the well-being of their relatives and with a desire to provide for them. A statement by a financially responsible person in the United States that he is impelled by this motive to assist a relative, even though he may not previously have seen him or have had occasion previously to contribute to his support, in the absence of adequate reason for doubting its sincerity, may well be sufficient to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that it is not "likely" that the alien will become a public charge. To reject such evidence as insufficient upon a hypothesis as, for instance, that disagreement might arise between the alien and his relative, or that the relative while inclined to assist the applicant for an initial period may not continue the support, would be to base the decision upon the "possibilities" in the case rather than upon the "probabilities" and would constitute a failure to give the evidence due weight.

The consul should look behind the formal evidence to seek the essential facts. He may, to the extent deemed necessary, properly ask to have the facts established by appropriate evidence, a statement of plans made for the alien, and the reasons for assuming the alien's support.

alien's support.

You are requested to bring this instruction to the immediate attention of all the officers at your office engaged in visa work and to direct them to follow the principles set forth herein to insure that the immigration laws shall be fairly and reasonably administered at your office in a manner to avoid just cause for complaint. At the same time the Department desires to impress upon the principal officers that they are primarily responsible for the proper performance of the visa work at their respective offices and that they should recognize its importance and closely supervise it. Very truly yours,

For the Acting Secretary of State.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I regret that I find it necessary to consume any of the time of the Senate. I know that it is presumptuous on my part, as a new Member, to participate in this debate; but some of the charges which have been made have been so broad and general in character and scope as to apply either directly or indirectly to the great State which I have the honor in part to represent in this body.

Mr. President, I desire to say to you that the W. P. A., so far as its being a political issue is concerned, never entered our senatorial campaign. I wish to say for my State that only 11 complaints were lodged with the Sheppard committee pertaining to the activities of W. P. A.; but, upon investigation, every one of the charges was dismissed. In one congressional district, however, in the State of New York, the issue was raised, and all of the charges that have been aired in this debate, common to the general political charges made against W. P. A. all over the Nation, were brought to the attention of the public, and finally to the attention of a Federal grand jury. These charges were presented to the official instrumentality of government created at the very beginning of the Republic to delve into matters of this character and to aid in the preservation of law and order. Charges against the N. Y. A., the Adult Education Agency, the sewing project, all were investigated and dismissed by the Federal grand jury.

Some Members of the Senate may desire to know something about the character of the grand jury and the character of the proceedings. Let me say to you, Mr. President, that the charges were made by an opposition candidate for Member of Congress. The grand jury was organized, and selected as its chairman an outstanding Republican leader in our section of the State. Every member of the grand jury save one, I am informed, was identified with the Republican Party. presiding judge himself over a long period of years antedating my entry into politics, over a quarter of a centry ago, was an outstanding leader of the Republican Party.

Every opportunity was given to every witness, and a thorough and searching examination was made by the jury of all the communications, instructions, orders and letters germane to the subject of the investigation. The grand jury made this presentment, which I shall read to you only in part.

Quoting the grand jury's presentment, I read:

We wish to report that the investigation conducted by us has been full, complete, and exhaustive.

Now, the only Democrat who participated in the investigation was the United States district attorney; and the grand jury make this comment with regard to his conduct:

The United States district attorney, at the very beginning of the proceeding, offered to subpena and produce any witnesses that we thought might be material, and thereafter, by subpena, did produce every such witness and many others.

And the grand jury goes on in its presentment as follows:

It has been charged that the W. P. A. workers were forced to contribute to the Democratic Party; that W. P. A. superintendents had distributed pledge cards among the workers; that certain W. P. A. employees were "singled out for special attention after they had refused to contribute"; that certain employees "who, after pledging only $1 or $2, were directed to report at Democratic headquarters." * * * headquarters.

Witnesses were produced by J. Francis Harter, who testified in regard to alleged irregularities involving the adult-education program, a W. P. A.-sponsored project.

After a thorough investigation * * * of the charges affecting the adult education program, we have determined-

Said the grand jury-that they are unworthy of attention.

Certain other witnesses testified in regard to irregularities in connection with the sewing project, so-called.

After investigation by the grand jury, it was determined that the charges affecting the sewing project were not substantiated.

Then the grand jury goes on as follows:

It has been testified to, in the course of our deliberations, that on the 5th day of May 1938, Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the Works Progress Administration, addressed a communication to all project workers, foremen, supervisors, and the administrative staff of the W. P. A. Among other things, he wrote:

And I quote from the letter:

Moreover, no W. P. A. worker is required-

Said Hopkins-to contribute to any political party or any campaign fund, in order to hold his job

And Harry Hopkins said further in that communication, which, I understand, was directed to every W. P. A. administrator in this country:

No supervisor or administrative person may attempt to influence the vote of any worker or solicit contributions to campaign funds from the people who work under him. Anyone who uses his position with the W. P. A. in any way to influence the votes of others by threat or intimidation will be dismissed. No one will lose his W. P. A. job because of his vote * * *

And everybody knows that Harry Hopkins said that-or his failure to contribute to any campaign fund. This has always been an absolute rule of the W. P. A.

That is the end of the quotation from the letter addressed to W. P. A. directors by Harry L. Hopkins, and in part contained in this presentment of the Federal grand jury.

The grand jury then goes on to state:

The letter was placed in the pay envelope of all the men and workers on W. P. A. It was a letter even stupid people could understand. It was a letter superintendents, skilled workers, and laborers could understand. It was a letter written to protect the skilled workers and laborers.

Those letters, I understand, were sent out broadcast throughout the United States, wherever a W. P. A. project was in course of construction.

Then this grand jury, Senators, made up, with but one exception, of affiliates of the Republican Party, investigating thoroughly, completely, and exhaustively the activities of Harry L. Hopkins and the political charges made by a Republican candidate, summed up their presentment with this

Mr. President, I shall vote to confirm the nomination of Harry Hopkins because, by and large, in a new field, pioneering a new endeavor, he did a fine job. I am not impressed with the charges which have been presented here this afternoon, and I wish to sum them up by saying they were political.

I shall vote for the confirmation of Harry Hopkins' nomination because this body had an opportunity by its own action to write its own rule, and it failed at the time to do so, and contents itself at this time with finding fault with a man who adhered to every rule we laid down for his conduct, and even went further than that, and, in my judgment, enforced a nonpartisan rule to which few can take exception.

I think Harry Hopkins did a fine job; and the vote he will receive this afternoon will, in my judgment, evidence the high regard in which he is held by this body and by the country.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, during the course of my remarks last Thursday, and in response to questions of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I stated that I differed with the findings of the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenses on one point. I have been making a consistent study of this problem for 4 years. I have great respect for the committee, and I am satisfied that when it continues this investigation, it will find the facts as they have presented themselves to me.

I believe that Mr. Hopkins has had full opportunity to acquaint himself with the administrative problems of work relief in Pennsylvania, and that he knows full well what they are. I do not believe he could justifiably claim to be ignorant of them. I say now, as I said last Thursday, that I should not care to indict his intelligence in that way.

I have had considerable correspondence with Mr. Hopkins, which shows that for a long period of time I have been calling his attention to voter coercion and the mismanagement of public funds in Pennsylvania. I have consistently sought cooperation from him in trying to remedy these conditions. Just as consistently, he refused to give me the help I had a right to expect.

For the information of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and others who may be interested, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the following correspondence: My letter to Mr. Hopkins of March 19, 1936; my statement to the Senate Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on April 2, 1936; my letter to Mr. Hopkins of September 30, 1936; my letter to Senator Augustine Lonergan of September 30, 1936; my letter to Mr. Hopkins of December 29, 1936; letter of Mr. Hopkins to me of January 18, 1937; my letter to Mr. Hopkins of January 19, 1937; my letter to Mr. Hopkins of May 26, 1937; my letter to Mr. Hopkins of July 2, 1937; and letter of Mr. Hopkins to me of July 14, 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 19, 1936.

Mr. Harry Hopkins,
Administrator, the Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Hopkins: I have read your statement carried by the Associated Press in which you say: "No employee of the Works Progress Administration, either administrative or engaged on a project, is required to make any contribution to any political party. No Works Progress Administration employee's job will be in jeopardy because of the failure of said employee to make such contribution. No employee of the Works Progress Administration shall at any time solicit contributions for any political party, and evidence of such solicitation will be cause for immediate discharge. The guestion of whether or not to contribute to any political party.

evidence of such solicitation will be cause for immediate discharge. The question of whether or not to contribute to any political party is a matter entirely for the voluntary decision of said employee. No person shall be employed or discharged by the Works Progress Administration on the ground of his support or nonsupport of any candidate of any political organization."

I believe this to be a step in the right direction. However, it is only one of a number of decisive actions which, in my judgment, should be taken if relief is to be kept out of politics in the future. Unfortunately, conditions have been allowed to develop to such an extent and the difficulty of control of the national organization of the W. P. A. from Washington is so great that no mere statement of policy such as you have made, sincere and thoroughgoing as it doubtless is, can solve this problem.

My approach to this question has been governed very largely by

My approach to this question has been governed very largely by the definite statements made by those in authority that they desired relief kept out of politics. On April 28, 1935, President Roosevelt said: "The most effective means of preventing such evils in this work-relief program will be the eternal vigilance of the American people themselves. I call upon my fellow citizens everywhere to cooperate with me in making this most efficient and the cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen.

It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynics who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient. If you will help, this can be done. I therefore hope you will watch the work in every corner of this Nation. Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better or where improper practices prevail. Neither you nor I want criticism in a purely fault-finding or partisan spirit, but I am jealous of the right of every citizen to call to the attention of his or her Government examples of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the benefit of the American people." This statement, coupled with your own as quoted above, indicates a desire for honest, efficient administration which is to be admired.

However, statements of this sort are not sufficient to insure the deciral country.

However, statements of this sort are not sufficient to insure the desired results. Evidence of waste, partisan use of W. P. A. funds, and needless red tape is found on every hand. Without solicitation of any kind, letters have come to me from all over the country revealing a state of affairs which in many instances is positively vicious. I can cite example after example of wicked practice, such as is found in the case of a Republican W. P. A. supervisor with a wife and seven children dependent upon him, replaced by a Demonstruct with but two persons dependent upon him, for no reasons. crat with but two persons dependent upon him, for no reason other than partisan issues. These are not isolated cases. Situations of this kind prevail all over the country. You have doubtless read the account given by Mr. Johnson, formerly State supervisor of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, in the last issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Certainly conditions as reported by Mr. Johnson in the State of Pennsylvania cannot be corrected simply by dictating an office memo.

I have asked for a full and complete investigation of the Works Progress Administration for the following reasons:

1. Taxpayers are justified in asking a businesslike statement in detail of the various uses for which the billions of dollars already appropriated are being spent.

2. No such detailed statement showing the names, number, or salaries of employees has been made available to the newspapers or public generally, although this is public business and should be treated as such.

3. Evidence already in hand points indisputably to the fact that relief money, in many instances, is being spent for partisan and political appointments contrary to the purpose for which work-relief appropriations were made. Without an investigation no person can estimate the extent of this evil. Those who administer son can estimate the extent of this evil. Those who administer these funds have repeatedly declared that they desire to keep relief out of politics. They should welcome this investigation, for it will help them to accomplish the efficient administration of their task. Taxpayers have the right to know how their money is being spent, and the only way this can be determined is through an investigation.

4. Attempts on the part of the work-relief administrative authorities to investigate their own organization problems have not solved them and could not solve them. The extension of work-relief administrative authority is so vast, so much money and so many people are involved, that taxpayers are warranted in asking for a senatorial investigation, as in the case of all other matters pertaining to the public welfare. Charges of abuses will multiply until an impartial investigation is made. This would be particularly unfortunate during a national-election year.

pertaining to the public wenter. Charges of abuses will multiply until an impartial investigation is made. This would be particularly unfortunate during a national-election year.

5. There is no necessity to give undue publicity to the ordinary routine of work-relief administration. The names and salaries of workers in the lower brackets need not be made public. However, all information whatsoever pertaining to the administration of work-relief funds should be made available to a Senate investigating committee. Publicity should be given only through the ordinary channels in regular committee hearings.

6. The work-relief budget for the coming year, asking for an additional $1,500,000,000, has just been placed before Congress. Taxpayers are justified in knowing how previous appropriations have been spent before authority is delegated to make new expenditures without congressional counsel or appropriate legislation. I favor work-relief appropriations. I have voted for them consistently. I favor additional appropriations. However, I believe the people of this country are justified in asking how much money has been spent in the past, how it has been spent, and how it may be spent in the future to the greatest advantage of the Nation. Information, acceptable to all concerned, can be obtained only through an impartial investigation under present circumstances. circumstance

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Depart-

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which my resolution was referred and of which I am a member, reported favorably on the resolution today. This committee, if authorized to make such an investigation, would be expected to report its findings to the Senate as soon as possible, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation. In view of your statement to the press, which points in the right direction, would it not be helpful to set up nonpartisan citizens' committees in every State, county, city, and governmental unit where W. P. A. workers are employed who would have power to pass on work-relief administrative appointments in order to assure that they are nonpartisan in character? Such committees could also serve as a clearing house for troubles and complaints assure that they are nonpartisan in character? Such committees could also serve as a clearing house for troubles and complaints which cannot secure satisfactory settlement through the ordinary channels of W. P. A. administrative authority. I believe that a plan such as this, coupled with other suggestions which I have in mind, would do much to make practical your expressed desire to keep relief out of politics.

Sincerely,

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JAMES J. DAVIS TO THE SENATE COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE, APRIL 2, 1936

When I first asked for an investigation of the Works Progress Administration I had but one thought in mind. I desired to get the names and salaries of W. P. A. workers in the upper brackets, whose income was $100 a month or above. These would be primarily those who were doing administrative work. In order to get this information which I had asked for and which had not been obtained, I suggested an appropriation of $5,000.

I realized, of course, that other Senate investigations were costing all the way from $50,000 to $100,000. But when I asked for $5,000 I had only in mind the expense which might attach to securing the list of names for which I had asked.

Since this first suggestion was made so many new developments have come to my attention that I now see that this investigation will cost far more than that. In the first place, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has asked that an investigation of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration be vestigation of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration be added to the investigation of the Works Progress Administration. This was not my request, but I agreed to it.

This was not my request, but I agreed to it.

When word went out over the country that there was prospect of an investigation letters came to me from all over the country telling of conditions in the W. P. A. which, if thoroughly examined, would mean an investigation of the Works Progress Administration in every State in the Union. Such an investigation, if once begun, would have to be completed. It would cost all the way from $100,000 to $250,000. At least $50,000 would be necessary with which to begin. I wish to say emphatically that I desire to have no part in an investigation which is abortive. If a thoroughgoing investigation is to be made, I want to be sure that it is actually what it purports to be. The purpose of such an investigation should not be either to smear anyone or to whitewash anyone, but actually to discover conditions as they are so that information may be made available for the proper regulation of work-relief activities in the future.

We were plunged into work-relief activities in a hurry. The work-relief activities in the future.

We were plunged into work-relief activities in a hurry. The administrative set-up was formed to meet an emergency. We now see that what was said to be an emergency represents a condition which promises to be with us for some time. Work relief is now with us on more or less permanent basis. In view of these facts, we cannot afford to treat abuses as though they will disappear of their own accord in the near future. We do not know how long work relief will be necessary. We do know that at the present time more money is being spent in this way than in any other governmental agency. With the expenditure of so much money there comes an inevitable responsibility to safeguard the administration comes an inevitable responsibility to safeguard the administration of these funds no matter in whose hands they are entrusted.

If work relief lasts for years to come we cannot begin too soon

If work relief lasts for years to come we cannot begin too soon to examine ways and means to discover how the taxpayers who foot this bill can get the most for their money. Obviously, we have come to the time when work relief can no longer be continued on an emergency or experimental basis.

The Audit Committee will have to determine whether a thoroughgoing investigation is desired or something less searching. In the beginning I asked for $5,000 in order that the names and salaries of administrative officers in the upper brackets, above $100 a month, might be secured and an investigation begun in the State of Pennsylvania as was suggested by Senator Lewis, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

I am prepared to proceed with a thoroughgoing investigation if it is authorized by the Senate, but again I wish to make clear my belief that such an investigation will cost upward of $100,000 and I do not wish to begin an investigation and then later on be compelled to abandon it for lack of necessary funds. If a full and complete investigation of the W. P. A. and F. E. R. A. is to be made, I wish to be sure that it is conducted on a scale commensurate with its importance to American taxpayers. If only $5,000 is to be appropriated, I should like to have distinctly understood that this amount will be used only for the limited purpose for which it was asked.

Mr. HARRY HOPKINS, Administrator, Works Progress Administration

My Dear Mr. Hopkins: Pennsylvania is afiame today with rumors and gossip regarding the waste and partisanship of relief administration. Regardless of the outcome of the election, such talk is exceedingly harmful to the thousands of defenseless men, women, and children who are dependent on Government aid. They have and children who are dependent on Government aid. They have been needlessly humiliated. They have been brought to the attention of the public in the worst possible way because of the secrecy in which the administration of funds for their aid has been maintained leading to charges of politics in relief. It is now currently charged that no man on a relief or work-relief roll dare vote against the present administration. It is charged that the W. P. A. has developed into the most gigantic political machine this country has ever known. It is charged that only 63 cents out of every work-relief dollar gets to the man on the work-relief job. The public does not know the truth of these matters, because by your refusal to cooperate with those who asked repeatedly for an impartial investigation of the W. P. A. you acted as though you were the work-relief czar and in effect said, "The public be damned."

Today I am writing Senator Augustine Lonergan, chairman of the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenses, urging that the com-mittee obtain from you a full list of the names, addresses, and salaries of all administrative officers, political appointees, and foremen on the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania.

on the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania.

I addressed a series of requests to you asking for information as to the administrative personnel of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. I made clear that I did not wish the names of those subsisting on relief in the lower brackets. To date I have not received the information requested, although a fractional part of one list came to my office. I was informed that the clerical labor involved in the compilation of the information for which I select occasioned the delay. pilation of the information for which I asked occasioned the delay.

Would it be possible for you to imagine yourself on a work-relief roll?

Put yourself just for a moment in the place of a helpless victim of this depression. Once perhaps you were making $5,000 a year and all seemed well and secure with you. Then came financial losses, unemployment, and dire distress for yourself and your family.

The only way to get bread under such circumstances for yourself and dependents would be the prospect of a work-relief job, which would pay you as a white-collar worker $93.50 a month. But under the ruling so long in effect under which millions of American citzens came upon home-relief rolls, you could apply for that job only after you had declared yourself destitute—in effect, a pauper—for this was for years the ruling of the Works Progress Administration. Administration.

pauper—for this was for years the ruling of the Works Progress Administration.

First, you would go on home relief rolls, and finally, in many instances, synthetic work would be arranged for you on a work relief roll. For months you would read in the newspapers that every person on relief is expected to vote for the New Deal. You would gradually be led to believe this to be the unwritten law of the administration. You would come to know that when you signed up on relief you had signed away your electoral rights in the eyes of the public, no matter how earnestly you might assure yourself silently to the contrary. In the eyes of your fellows you would be one of the many millions who had sold his vote to the New Deal for starvation wages.

Then you would see the red-white-and-blue signs stuck up on your job to let the public know that the Works Progress Administration is advertising itself. Your W. P. A. associates would furnish you with information as to how you might expect a promotion if you were willing to change your political registration. As the campaign came on you would be asked to wear campaign buttons, badges, and insignia put out by the Democratic National Committee. If you refused to wear this insignia or to subscribe to "We the People," someone might question your right to eat at public expense.

All the time you would be hating the relentless machine which gradually sought to undermine your character, deny your individuality and demand that you become another "tree man" for gradually sought to undermine your character, deny your individuality, and demand that you become another "yes man" for the New Deal. This, Mr. Hopkins, is what the Works Progress Administration under your leadership means for thousands of men and women in this country.

By your refusal to cooperate with those who wanted to take the stigma off of the Works Progress Administration you helped to build the public mind against the man on relief.

build the public mind against the man on relief.

Again I wish to request that you cooperate with those who are trying to take politics out of relief. I hope that you will give to the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenses the full list of names, addresses, and salaries of administrative officials, political appointees, and foremen in the State of Pennsylvania, so that the public may be informed, as it has a right to be, concerning the conduct of governmental business. Is it too much to ask that this information be made ready within 15 days, so that voters may have sufficient time to become acquainted with the facts?

If the charges made against the W. P. A. are false, it should bring you satisfaction to prove them so, for the reelection of the President now seems partially contingent on this issue. If the charges made are true, the repression of this information will work a lasting damage to the American people, for which they will have a right to hold you fully accountable under the law.

I hope that the public may have the facts within 15 days.

Sincerely.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1936.

Hon. Augustine Lonergan,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Lonergan: I wish to thank you for the opportunity you gave me to appear before the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenses in executive session. Your evident desire to uphold our electoral laws and secure fair play for all heartens me. I wish you and the committee every success in your work to maintain just and fair electoral conditions.

fair electoral conditions.

Perhaps you will understand how very much I dislike continually to be raising the question of relief in its political aspects. Conditions have forced these matters to my attention for many months and I have made every effort to have this issue taken out of the realm of gossip and rumor into the impartial light of a legally constituted committee. During the last session of Congress I asked repeatedly that a full and complete investigation of the W. P. A. should be made and the question of politics in relief be settled by a Senate committee so that it would not be kicked around as a political football in the campaign, as is now the case. My recent appearance before your committee was the first time that I have been permitted to present this problem to any committee having authority to act upon it. I now hope that that constructive action will be taken immediately, as the public is entitled to all the facts

Those who administer the W. P. A. have consistently stated that there is no politics in relief. Mr. Hopkins time and again made this statement and to my knowledge has never retracted it. He was content to issue orders forbidding such action to be posted on W. P. A. bulletin boards and to prevent the public from learning the results of investigations of the W. P. A. made by his own subordinates. I wrote to Mr. Hopkins a number of letters, beginning in February, asking for a list of the names, addresses, and salaries of all political appointees, administrative heads, and foremen of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. His assistants replied to my letters but it was many weeks before I received a very small portion of the list for which I had asked. To date my request is still unanswered. The clerical labor involved in preparing the list was advanced as a reason for delay.

reason for delay.

In the face of the tremendous amount of rumor which is going reason for delay.

In the face of the tremendous amount of rumor which is going the rounds regarding the political aspects of the W. P. A., it must appear obvious that the administration has now more to gain from a respectful hearing of the evidence in these matters than by a continuation of a policy of repression.

I voted for the various relief and work-relief measures and I expect to be asked to vote on kindred measures in the next session of Congress, irrespective of the outcome of the November election. Relief and work relief will be continued. Right-thinking men will insist that it be carried on in a nonpartisan way and that those who receive this aid will not be compelled to stultify themselves by abandoning their individual electoral rights.

I have been censured for voting for relief measures and giving aid to programs out of which has been developed a gigantic political machine now being used to throttle the electorate and to oppose all who differ with it. Today I realize that nothing will so surely deprive needy people of the relief to which they are justly entitled as the waste and partisanship which now attends its administration. I have hoped to stand for the rights of the victims of this depression during this administration, and in the next should there be a change. In event of a Republican victory at the polls this year, I wish to be free to continue to uphold the rights of the needy unemployed.

In the last analysis the only justification of voting appropriations for relief is the distress of defenseless men, women, and children. No one should starve in the midst of plenty. Those who seek to make political capital and create fat jobs for themselves out of human misery deserve to have the full light of publictly directed upon them. They cannot stand before the reproach of public opinion. I would not wish to believe that the President would be willing at this time to attempt to shield these for the sake of political advantage.

I suggest that you ask Mr. Hopkins to provide your committee with the names, addresses, and salaries of all administrative employees on the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania; all foremen, and all political appointees, particularly in western Pennsylvania and Allegheny County, so that this information may be made public. I am not asking for publicity to be given to the names and addresses of unfortunate men and women who in their distress have been driven upon relief rolls and who are now subsisting at an income level which Americans generally have been taught to regard as starvation wages. tion wages

Knowing that you are consistent within yourself and have a long and honorable record of public service and that you desire good government to prevail, I am making this request of you and your committee. I have tried to obtain this information from Mr. Hopkins, but without success. As a result, the issue has been thrown into the heat of a political campaign. I believe that Mr. Hopkins will recognize the right of your committee to subpena data from his office, if necessary, and that he will give you the cooperation he has refused me. In event that Mr. Hopkins withholds this information from the public, I suggest that you ask the President for it.

holds this information from the public, I suggest that you ask the President for it.

I need not inform you that the request which I have made to Mr. Hopkins is entirely in keeping with the traditional rights of taxpayers who call for reports on public business and the obligations which bind those who hold public office. The administrative work of the W. P. A. is public business and its personnel should be held just as strictly accountable to taxpayers as regularly elected officials. If this is not true, we must then conclude that the W. P. A. represents a usurpation of public authority entirely inconsistent with the American plan of government. What mayor of any American city could refuse to publish the names, addresses, and salarles of those on the public pay roll?

Rumor has it that there are more bosses, foremen, administrative officials on the W. P. A. in Allegheny County than are required to service any one of the largest industrial firms in the State of Pennsylvania. If this be true, taxpayers have a right to know the facts.

the facts.

I need not repeat what I said before your committee as to my lifelong position regarding political coercion. I can conceive of nothing more despicable than for any powerful organization, be it industry or government, to attempt to destroy the individual political rights of those on its pay rolls. During a long experience in Pennsylvania I have from time to time heard charges of voter coercion. I dare say that there is a measure of truth in these statements, although as a millworker I had no personal knowledge of such conditions. No one has ever attempted to deprive me of my electoral right. Observation of steel workers and coal miners leads me to believe that they are so independent in action that attempts to force their vote would bring just the opposite action on their part. There were charges of voter coercion in 1932. A survey of industrial centers, South Pittsburgh, Farrell, and other districts populated with workers will show that these people voted as they pleased at that time. I believe they will vote as they think best

I enclose copies of two letters I have received, reserving the names of those who signed them for your committee, lest their public use bring undeserved trouble to those who have volunteered this startling information. The letters will give your committee but a slight idea of the charges which are now current regarding politics in work relief in the State of Pennsylvania.

Again, I wish to express my appreciation of the courtesy extended to me by your committee. It is my firm belief that if all who have had to do with the conduct of this great public responsibility had fulfilled this trust with an eye single to the welfare of the people as with you, there would not now be incessant demand for an investigation of these charges.

Most cordially yours,

DECEMBER 29, 1936.

Mr. Harry Hopkins, Administrator, Works Progress Administration,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Hopkins: Now that the campaign is over I am continuing my request initiated almost a year ago that the names, addresses, salaries, and positions of the entire administrative personnel of the W. P. A. throughout the country be made available to all authorized representatives of public opinion and taxpayers. As United States Senator from Pennsylvania I ask especially for this information regarding this State.

This request was made early last spring, but your office did not This request was made early last spring, but your office did not make the data available. I continued time and again to make this request long before the campaign got under way. Not heeding it, you made it a campaign issue, but publicly stated that my sole interest in the matter was political. The campaign is over, but I am still asking for this information, and, representing the constituents of my State, I shall continue to ask for it until the ordinary routine of justice and fair play in the handling of public money in your office is achieved. office is achieved.

I have made it thoroughly clear that I am not asking for the names and addresses of every one on relief, but only those of the administrative personnel. This information should be made public administrative personnel. This information should be made public just as in the case of your salary and mine and others on governmental pay rolls. We now witness the circumstance of the publication of the administrative personnel salaries of private business concerns through the Federal Trade Commission, Bureau of Internal Revenue, Social Security Commission, etc., while the same sort of information is denied the authorized representatives of the public by your office. I know this to be true in Pennsylvania.

If you choose to ignore this request as you have done in the past, I shall have no other recourse than to introduce a resolution in the Senate again asking for this data. I should much prefer to have the information directly from you. Your cooperation in this respect would show that you desire to rid this issue of politics.

Sincerely yours.

Sincerely yours.

Work Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., January 18, 1937.

Washington, D. C., January 18, 1937.

Senator James J. Davis,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Davis: This will acknowledge your letter of December 29 in which you request that the names, addresses, salaries, and positions of the entire administrative personnel of the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania be made available to all authorized representatives of public opinion and taxpayers.

As I indicated previously on several occasions, I have felt that the public might have and should have a very real interest in the methods of operation of this Administration, the amount spent for administrative expenses of various kinds, including the salary grades and the total amount of salaries in each grade. I can also see a legitimate interest in the public's knowing the salaries of the major officers who are responsible for the formulation and execution of the policies of the administration. I cannot, however, see how it could have a legitimate interest in the individual salaries and addresses of the many hundreds of employees performing minor and addresses of the many hundreds of employees performing minor clerical functions.

This principle seems to me to have been well recognized by Congress, when in 1925 it passed an act directing the Director of the Census to continue to compile the Federal Register and restricting Census to continue to compile the Federal Register and restricting this register to persons occupying supervisory and administrative positions in the executive and judicial departments of the Government. Under this act it has been the practice to publish only the names, addresses, and salaries of those officials who are responsible for formulation of policies of the various bureaus or who supervise major portions of the work. This position has, I believe, been concurred in for many years by the heads of the various executive departments who have, according to my understanding, refused to give out information of the type which you request.

I am perfectly willing to make available to the public the names and salaries of the major officers of this administration in Pennsylvania or any other State. I am not willing to make public names, salaries, or addresses of the clerical employees since I firmly believe, as stated above, that the public can have no legitimate interest in this information and its publication would only subject these employees, who are receiving only small compensa-tion, to the gossip of neighbors and the pressure of commercial and political salesmen.

Sincerely yours, HARRY L. HOPKINS.

Administrator. JANUARY 19, 1937.

Hon. HARRY HOPKINS,

Works Progress Administrator, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR MR. HOPKINS: Your letter of January 18 in response to my letter to you of December 29 is at hand.

my letter to you of December 29 is at hand.

Your reply in which you say, "I cannot, however, see how it could have a legitimate interest in the individual salaries and addresses of the many hundreds of employees performing minor clerical functions" led me to examine the file of letters I have written you during the last year. In each of these letters, if you will trouble yourself to examine them, you will find that I have at no time asked for a list of W. P. A. "performing minor clerical functions."

I have insistantly asked for a list of which is the property of the

I have insistently asked for the names, addresses, positions, and salaries of all administrative officials, which includes investigators, foremen, project supervisors, managers, and assistants, etc. These people may not be paid salaries of more than $93.50 a month, but they exert political influence, and that, Mr. Hopkins, is what we are talking about.

are talking about.

I am not asking you for a list of actors, architects, draftsmen, artists, sculptors, teachers of art, librarians, musicians, teachers of music, playground workers, writers, editors, bookkeepers, accountants, auditors, statistical editors, enumerators, stenographers, typists, blacksmiths, bricklayers, stonemasons, carpenters, cement finishers, electricians, painters, plasterers, etc.

Let me again state that I wish the names, addresses, salaries, and positions of W. P. A. and F. E. R. A. and other relief organizations you have had in charge during the last 4 years, all administrative personnel which includes Administrators, State administrators, project supervisors, foremen, managers, inspectors, investigators, and their assistants. These people possess political power, and it is the use made of their political authority which is now called in question. question.

You say that you are "perfectly willing to make available to the public the names and salaries of the major officers of this administration in Pennsylvania or any other State." In keeping with the policy which you say you have adopted, I wish to ask you to make public the names and salaries of all administrative officials, for all of them have to do with the formulation of the political policy of your administration.

I am asking you, and let me repeat it, for the names, addresses, salaries, and positions of all the administrative personnel of the W. P. A. and F. E. R. A., and other relief organizations which you have had in charge during the last 4 years, to include the names of administrators, assistant administrators, State supervisors, project administrators, assistant administrators, State supervisors, project supervisors, investigators, foremen, managers, and the assistants of all these, together with all others whom the taxpayers will wish questioned when they are called to give an account of the money spent during the last 4 years at your direction.

Formerly you have protested that the clerical work necessary to compile these lists would prove a tax upon your staff. In order to avoid any too great burden upon you, permit me to suggest that lists be compiled first in the State of Pennsylvania and that reputable newspapers he allowed through their representatives to have table newspapers be allowed through their representatives to have access to the files so that they may compile the lists which otherwise might prove too difficult a task for you and your associates. After the State of Pennsylvania has thus been covered, the findings may suggest the possibility of the worth of further proceedings in may suggest the possibility of the worth of further proceedings in other States. My mail would indicate this, but I am willing to wait, pending what is found out in Pennsylvania.

You say, "I am perfectly willing to make available to the public the names and salaries of the major officers of this administration in Pennsylvania or any other State." I believe, Mr. Hopkins, this is a step in the right direction, but it is only a step. In keeping with this policy I wish to ask that you follow it through in a thoroughgoing way. I ask you to give authority for representative news agencies of the taxpayers to ascertain immediately the names and salaries of all administrative personnel as above indicated, for all of them have had to do with the formulation of the political policy of your administration, and it is the politics of your administration, Mr. Hopkins, about which we are concerned, and not any reference such as you have made to compilations of official lists in the Federal Register back in 1935. Register back in 1935.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS, United States Senate.

MAY 26, 1937.

Mr. HARRY HOPKINS,

Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Hopkins: This will acknowledge your letter of May 24 relative to my request for data concerning the names, salaries, and positions of administrative personnel of W. P. A. The list of the names, addresses, and salaries of the State administrator, deput administrator, State director of finance and statistics, State director of women's and professional projects, State director of operations, and district directors of W. P. A. districts in Pennsylvania is only a small part of the data that should be made available upon request to representatives of the public.

In view of the tremendous importance of our Federal relief program I wish to review in some detail the correspondence which gram I wish to review in some detail the correspondence which you and I have had on this subject.

On March 19, 1936, I wrote you as follows: "I have read your statement carried by the Associated Press in which you say: 'No employee of the Works Progress Administration, either administrative or engaged on a project, is required to make any contribution to any political party. No Works Progress Administration employee's job will be in jeopardy because of the failure of said trative or engaged on a project, is required to make any contribution to any political party. No Works Progress Administration employee's job will be in jeopardy because of the failure of said employee to make such contribution. No employee of the Works Progress Administration shall at any time solicit contributions for any political party, and evidence of such solicitation will be cause for immediate discharge. The question of whether or not to contribute to any political party is a matter entirely for the voluntary decision of said employee. No person shall be employed or discharged by the Works Progress Administration on the ground of his support or nonsupport of any candidate of any political organization.'

"I believe this to be a step in the right direction. However, it is only one of a number of decisive actions which, in my judgment, should be taken if relief is to be kept out of politics in the future. Unfortunately, conditions have been allowed to develop to such an extent and the difficulty of control of the national organization of the W. P. A. from Washington is so great that no mere statement of policy such as you have made, sincere and thoroughgoing as it doubtless is, can solve this problem.

"My approach to this question has been governed very largely by the definite statements made by those in authority that they desired relief kept out of politics. On April 28, 1935, President Roosevelt said: "The most effective means of preventing such evils in this work-relief program will be the eternal vigilance of the American people themselves. I call upon my fellow citizens everywhere to cooperate with me in making this the most efficient and the cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen. It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynics who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient. If you will help, this can be done. I, therefore, hope you will watch the work in every corner of this Nation. Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better which is to be admired."

However, statements of this sort are not sufficient to insure the desired results. Evidence of waste, partisan use of W. P. A. funds, and needless red tape is found on every hand. Without solicitation of any kind, letters have come to me from all over the country revealing a state of affairs which, in many instances, is positively vicious. I can cite example after example of wicked practice, such as is found in the case of a Republican W. P. A. supervisor, with a wife and seven children dependent upon him, replaced by a Democrat, with but two persons dependent upon him, for no reason other than partisan issues. These are not isolated cases. Situations of this kind prevail all over the country. You have doubtless read the account given by Mr. Johnson, formerly State supervisor of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, in the last issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Certainly conditions as reported by Mr. Johnson in the State of Pennsylvania cannot be corrected simply by dictating an office memo.

You will observe, therefore, Mr. Hopkins, that as early as March

You will observe, therefore, Mr. Hopkins, that as early as March 1936 I had expressed a deep interest in the work-relief administration problem. However, in the heat of the campaign, September 30, you stated in the newspapers, "Senator Davis thinks of nothing except in terms of politics and never did in his life * * The only time he shows any interest in the unemployed is near election." The facts do not bear out this statement. I wish to assure you that my continued interest in the property of the results.

* * * The only time he shows any interest in the unemployed is near election." The facts do not bear out this statement. I wish to assure you that my continued interest in this problem is not political, and I would question the advisability of impugning the motives of men in public life who differ with you.

On May 7, 1937, work-relief problems had developed to such a state that Hugh S. Johnson in his column said: "Harry Hopkins is reported to have said that a cut of $500,000,000 in relief appropriations will fire 400,000 relief workers. That figures out $1,200 per worker on relief. * * * This would indicate that relief living is at least as fat as that of one-third of our employed population. * * * The error in this is that the whole $1,200 does not go to the relief worker. Only about $720, as an average, goes to him. Accurate figures are not available, but it is generous to say that only about 58 percent of the billions spent on relief trickles down to those on relief. * * * Mr. Hopkins says the total overhead is only 4.7 percent and adds that 10 percent is considered good administration in business management. It all depends on what you call overhead. Mr. Hopkins' boys roll their own as far as accounting is concerned. It would be interesting to see an independent audit of the seven billions or so dollars that they have broadcast. * * * It is one of the most grotesquely fantastical and tragic pieces of administration in the history of the human race."

This was the statement of General Johnson a great friend of human race.

This was the statement of General Johnson, a great friend of the President, who speaks out of the realistic experience he had with the W. P. A. while in charge of it in New York City. Would you say that his statement was made for political purposes?

I note in the table of statistics you have sent me May 24, 1937, that of the total expenditures of W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania cumulative through March 31, 1937, you state that only 2.9 percent has been spent for administration. But, according to General Johnson, the average cost of administration has been 4.7 percent. How do you explain this discrepancy? Does it cost less to administer work relief in Pennsylvania than elsewhere? Will you kindly give me this information together with your explain the state of the s you kindly give me this information together with your explanation?

On January 19, 1937, I wrote you as follows:

"In reply to my request that the public be informed as to the names, addresses, positions, and salaries of the administrative personnel of the W. P. A., you say: I cannot see how it could have a legitimate interest in the individual salaries and addresses of the many hundreds of employees performing minor clerical functions, which, permit me to say, Mr. Hopkins, is quite beside the point. Your remark has led me to examine the file of letters I have written you during the last year. In each of these letters, if you will trouble yourself to examine them, it will be evident that at no time have I asked for a list of W. P. A. workers 'performing minor clerical functions.' Inasmuch as you have signed your name to the above statement, the public should now learn that you are dodging facts. This should interest the taxpayers, as they are now taking under consideration the possibility of the organization now taking under consideration the possibility of the organization of a new department of the President's Cabinet to be known as the Department of Social Welfare, in connection with which your name is sometimes mentioned.

"I have insistently asked for the names, addresses, positions, and salaries of all administrative officials, which includes administrators, assistant administrators. State supervisors, project supervisors, investigators, foremen, managers, and the assistants of all of these. Perhaps I have failed to list them all, but this will do well enough for a beginning. These people may not be paid salaries of more than $93.50 a month but they exert political influence, and that, Mr. Hopkins, is what we are talking about.

"I am not asking you for a list of actors, architects, draftsmen, artists, sculptors, teachers of art, librarians, musicians, teachers of music, playground workers, editors, bookkeepers, accountants, auditors, statistical editors, enumerators, stenographers, typists, blacksmiths, bricklayers, stonemasons, carpenters, cement finishers, elec-'I have insistently asked for the names, address

"I am asking you, and let me repeat it, for the names, addresses, salaries, and positions of all the administrative personnel of the W. P. A. and F. E. R. A. and other relief organizations which you have had in charge during the last 4 years, to include the names of administrators, assistant administrators, foremen, managers, and the assistants of all these, together with all others whom the tax-payer will wish questioned when they are called to give an account of the money spent during the last 4 years at your direction."

This request still stands unanswered, and I maintain that this is information to which the taxpayers are entitled and that it should be made available, upon request, to representatives of the public.

Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS.

Mr. HARRY HOPKINS,
Administrator, Works Progress Administration,

Washington, D. C. Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Hopkins: I understand that at your request the Senate provision that the names, addresses, salaries, and positions of all administrative personnel in the W. P. A., F. E. R. A., and all relief organizations which you have headed up, receiving more than $1,000 a year heretofore or at the present time was taken from the appropriation bill when it went to conference. I understand that you stated that if this provision were omitted you would see to it that I received this data for the State of Pennsylvania. I request that you make this data available as soon as possible. I should like to have it within the next 30 days if you can provide it within that time. you can provide it within that time.

Most cordially yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS.

Hon. James J. Davis,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

My Dran Semator Davis: In accordance with your request of July 2, 1937, I am enclosing herewith a list showing the names, positions, salaries, and location of all administrative employees of the Works Progress Administration and the National Youth Administration in Pennsylvania receiving $1,000 a year or more.

There are no employees of the Federal Emergency Relief Ad ministration now in Pennsylvania

ministration now in Pennsylvania.

These lists were made up from pay rolls for the period June 16 through June 30.

Sincerely,

HARRY L. HOPKINS, Administrator.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this correspondence shows that I spent nearly 18 months in correspondence with Mr. Hopkins before he would consent to release to me the names, number, addresses, and salaries of the administrative employees of W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. Finally, after the election of 1936 had passed, and after 18 months of futile requests, I received a partial although imperfect response to my petition for this information. Much of this correspondance was carried in the Congressional Record and in the press. I was alone in asking for the information. Certainly Mr. Hopkins knew that I wanted the information. He knew why I wanted it because I had consistently charged that there was politics in W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, and yet he would not cooperate with me to stop it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, who has been nominated by the President to be Secretary of Commerce, comes from my State of New York. I will not intrude myself for too long a time into this discussion, when we should be coming to a vote, because those who have spoken for Mr. Hopkins have already stated his achievements and paid tribute to his high character.

Of course, as a matter of traditional policy in the Senate, the issue as to the confirmation of one nominated for a position in the Cabinet is much narrower than in the case of the ordinary nomination sent to the Senate. The Senate has always recognized that the President, as the Chief Executive of the country, is entitled to have in his own family those in whom he has confidence and whose advice he desires during his administration. Unless there has been something asserted and established affecting the moral character of the individual appointed, the Senate has readily confirmed, and rarely in all its history has there been a mere partisan issue raised in the case of a nomination of this character.

As I recall, there has been only one case since the Civil War in which the Senate has rejected a Cabinet nomination, and that was the case of Mr. Warren, during the Coolidge administration. It was established beyond question that Mr. Warren had been a lobbyist for the so-called Sugar Trust. The Senate felt that his appointment to the high office of Attorney General did not deserve confirmation.

I am not relying in my vote, however, merely upon that sound policy which has always been observed by the Senate. I am voting for the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins because I know that in so doing I represent the sentiment of my State, and also because of the high character of Mr. Hopkins, and because of his unusual success in one of the most difficult tasks that has ever devolved upon any individual.

During the debate no one has referred to the rise of Mr. Hopkins to his present place. He has held many positions of honor and of great responsibility. He has discharged the duties of all of them with extraordinary success, and always, of course, with unquestioned integrity.

In 1912, after his graduation from college, Mr. Hopkins became connected with the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, which is the largest nonsectarian private charity organization in the whole United States. In the course of that employment he conducted an investigation of slum conditions, and his report, though made way back in 1912, is still one which will enlighten many of us on the great problem of slum clearance in this country. Although he was quite a young man at the time, he was highly complimented for his work in that regard.

Mr. Hopkins' work attracted the attention of the then mayor of New York, Maj. John Purroy Mitchel, one of our eminent mayors, now deceased, and he persuaded Mr. Hopkins to become the executive secretary of the New York City Board of Public Welfare. I am somewhat more familiar with that work because, as a member of the State Senate in the State of New York at that time, I had occasion to be in touch with his work in that particular department. That duty he discharged with great distinction and with marked

Mr. Hopkins applied for leave to go to the front during the World War, but he was rejected because of the condition of his eyesight. He insisted upon making some contribution, however, and was placed in charge of the work of the Gulf division of the American Red Cross. He did his work there so well, Mr. President, that he attracted the attention of those interested in that particular enterprise and was later made the head of the entire southern division.

I need not tell the Senate the kind of work which is involved in the Red Cross, particularly during wartime. Mr. Hopkins handled large sums of money, and performed all the other services required, with great distinction and absolute integrity.

After the war, Mr. Hopkins was appointed a director of the New York Tuberculosis Association, and in that field of endeavor he also worked with great success, being responsible for building up that organization into a great force for research in preventive medicine.

In 1931, when New York State was confronted with the problem of feeding the unemployed and taking care of and sheltering the destitute, Mr. Hopkins was selected as working director of the temporary emergency relief administration of the State. In 1932 Mr. Hopkins became chairman of the temporary emergency relief administration by appointment of then Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt.

During all this time, in his service in the State of New York, when under his direction there was distributed $140,-000,000 to alleviate the needs of the poor and the destitute and unemployed, there was never the breath of suspicion of misappropriation of any funds. On the contrary, the business people of New York, as well as those who were interested in this problem from the social standpoint, all praised him very highly.

If I may remind the Senate, during the last part of the Hoover administration, several Senators were exceedingly apprehensive of what was going on in the country. We saw countless people out in different sections of the country who lacked shelter, food, and clothing. The first major relief bill to take over and to expand upon the efforts of the R. F. C. was introduced by myself, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the late Senator from Colorado, Mr. Costigan, whose recent death profoundly shocked us all. The Senator who is now gracing the chair will remember the occasion very well, because he participated in that movement also. Hearings were conducted, and the most tragic situations were disclosed. The city of Chicago, in particular, was so badly hit that neither the State nor the municipality could cope with it, and yet the Federal Government refused to move in the way of doing anything to alleviate the situation. The Senator from Illinois came before our committee and stated the plight of his particular State.

In 1933 the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], Senator Costigan, and myself constituted ourselves a committee to improvise legislation for the setting up of some independent Federal machinery for bringing relief to the States. We sent for Mr. Hopkins. Not one of us had ever met him before. We had only heard about his successful work in the State of New York. He sat down and aided us in the drafting of the legislation which Congress later enacted, and thereafter the President asked Mr. Hopkins to head that particular activity called the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. Later he headed the C. W. A. and W. P. A. programs.

Without going over the entire record—because it has been so well done by others who preceded me—I will say that Mr. Hopkins undertook this tremendous task, and until the end of the last session I had heard no criticism of his work. Year after year, when the appropriations came up for consideration, Senators on the other side, as well as Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber, rose and spoke approvingly of Mr. Hopkins, and there was no suggestion that political influence was in any way involved in the administration of his office.

I think I have a right to say that from the very beginning, by my votes as well as my public utterances, I have been insisting upon freeing relief administration from any kind of political influence. I knew Mr. Hopkins would not utilize relief for political purposes, but no head of an undertaking of that kind, involving the expenditure of $9,000,000,000, can be expected to go to every corner of the United States and watch every little subordinate to see whether he is attempting to persuade somebody employed under W. P. A. to vote one way or the other.

I voted for the proposed Hatch amendment. I voted against requiring the submission to the Senate of the names of the directors in each State, because, frankly, I feared that this would bring political considerations to bear.

If I may say so, Mr. President, I have consistently followed that course in my own State. I had nothing to do with the appointment of the administrators in my State. I did not know who they were to be until after their appointment. All have rendered admirable service. Colonel Somervell has been directing W. P. A. in New York City—the most difficult relief task in the country—to the complete satisfaction of all and entirely free from any suggestion of politics. I know that W. P. A. employment has there been based solely upon the need of the individual, and that has been true throughout my State.

Indeed, no suggestion was made by the Sheppard committee that there was any politics involved in the administration of W. P. A. in the State of New York. The number of heads of families employed at one time on W. P. A. work by reason of the unemployment situation has reached 300,000. In all this time, several million men being employed on W. P. A. off and on, only one complaint has been made which came to the Sheppard committee, was investigated by the Sheppard committee, was found to be absolutely unfounded, and was dismissed.

Mr. President, I went through a rather strenuous campaign. I had a very alert and able opponent against me. All but four newspapers in the State were against me. I do not complain about that. They felt that my opponent should be elected. But what I mean to say is that my opposition was very alert. So was my colleague's opposition. As a matter of fact his opponent was a gentleman of distinction in New York who had been one of the administrators of relief in the city of New York. And I may say, Senators, that during the entire campaign, and it was a vigorous campaign covering over 2 months, not a suggestion came from our opposition that the W. P. A. was used in the slightest way to influence a single vote. At the time we had about 250,000 men employed under W. P. A.

If I had been the administrator I would not have made the political speeches which Mr. Hopkins made. I would have refrained absolutely from any kind of political activity even as an individual. He frankly admits that if he had to do it over again he would not make such addresses. I do not suppose all of us would want to have search made into all our indiscretions.

Let us look at the accomplishments of Mr. Hopkins as the head of the W. P. A. The administrative expenses, about which we hear so much, are down to 2.3 percent. On the total outlay of administrative expenses, the percentage is only 3 percent, whereas Congress, in the legislation it enacted, authorized him to expend as high as 5 percent of the fund for administrative expenses.

What has the W. P. A. accomplished? It has built 12,000 new public buildings, and repaired, improved, or enlarged 36,000. It has constructed 46,000 miles of highways, roads, and streets and 157,000 miles of highways were improved or repaired. The W. P. A. built airports, laid sewers, developed vast park and play areas, and carried on conservation, public health education, and cultural projects. It has many more accomplishments to its credit. I shall not delay the Senate by reading them all. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record as a part of my remarks the record, which I have before me, of actual accomplishments of W. P. A. throughout the country, so far as complete data are available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the business people of my State are in favor of this nomination. There has been some suggestion from the other side that business has no confidence in Mr. Hopkins, because he has never had any business experience. As a matter of fact, he has been the administrator of a governmental activity which has had the largest pay roll of any separate entity in the United States. The business people of my State, speaking through Mr. Harriman, have declared emphatically that they have confidence in Mr. Hopkins, and expect that he will make a very efficient Secretary of Commerce. Indeed he has a great opportunity.

Mr. President, in our drive for recovery, we must bring about cooperation among industry, labor, and the Government. I think Mr. Hopkins understands the problems of industry. He understands the problems of the worker. He has had long experience as a Government official, and knows to what extent the Government ought to guide both business and labor in our cooperative activities. For that reason I welcome his appointment as Secretary of Commerce, and I hope that upon confirmation, he will devote himself unsparingly to fostering that cooperation upon which our national well-being so vitally depends.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I approach this argument in a little different fashion from that in which my predecessors, in speaking upon it, have approached it.

We have before us two records—the record of the Sheppard committee, and the record before the Commerce committee—when considering the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins.

It does no good, Mr. President, for men from the recesses of their brains to tell us of the record of Mr. Hopkins in other respects, or for Senators from other States, where there was no question about what transpired, to go into their archives and tell us that there was nothing at all disgraceful, nothing at all reprehensible, in those States.

Before coming to an argument in reference to the particular matters which involve Mr. Hopkins—I do not say they involve his integrity or his honesty, but they involve him politically, in dealing politically with those who had no option, and those who had no power to resist—I desire to settle one question, once and for all, in this body.

It has been argued here by many that the selection of members of the Cabinet is a personal matter of the President, and that we ought not to interfere with any selection that he may make. Upon us devolves the responsibility of approving that selection, and upon us rests the obligation of doing our duty in reference to any particular nomination which may be sent in by the President upon that score.

This is not the first time the same question has been before the Senate. In 1925 an epochal contest was here, a contest involving the appointment of an Attorney General. Upon that contest the lines were very nearly equal; and many Senators argued then, just as it is argued now, that the matter was one for the President to determine, and that when he had determined it, it was not for us to have aught to say, or in any degree to interfere.

I dissent from that view. I dissented from it 13 years ago, when the nomination of Charles Beecher Warren was before this body for confirmation. I dissent from it now, and I will dissent from it every time a man is named to a Cabinet office by the President of the United States.

At that time it was argued elaborately by various persons that we ought not to touch the question; that, having been named by the President, he was sacrosanct; and that we ought not, even though the obligation is constitutionally placed upon us, to touch the question at all. At that time an argument was made by a very distinguished brother of ours, in whom I have the utmost confidence. This is what he said:

Mr. President, can it be argued that we ought to close our eyes, seal our lips, fold our hands, and let this nomination go through without a protest, simply because the nomination is made by the President and that we ought to acquiesce; that it is part of his official family? There is no such thing in law as a President's official family. There is no such thing in law as a Cabinet officer. The Attorney General has under his control enforcement officers in every locality under our flag. It is his duty, as a sort of general controlling an army of prosecutors and marshals and investigators and detectives all over the land, to enforce every Federal law that is on the statute books. His power, his influence for the upholding of law, for the stability of our institutions, goes into every State, into every hamlet, into every Federal counts, and even before every Federal commissioner; so that the importance of the office cannot be exaggerated.

We set at rest then by our vote the question whether or not we should act upon a nominee of the President for a Cabinet office. We set it at rest then in a singular fashion, by a vote which was a tie, and in which it was endeavored to bring the then Vice President into the Chamber so that the tie might be unraveled. He could not then be found. However, the situation was such that we settled the question then forever, so far as this argument is concerned. Let me read the vote quickly. I read the names of those who voted "nay" upon that nomination. I am reading, of course, only those who are now here:

Senators Ashurst, Borah, Frazier, George, Harrison, Johnson, King, McKellar, Neely, Norris, Pittman, Sheppard, Shipstead, Walsh, and Wheeler.

All of them voted that the nomination should not be confirmed, and it was not confirmed.

There is another thing in respect to which I dissent from my fellows, and that is concerning the position Mr. Hopkins occupies and concerning the idea that he should be free from any interference by the Senate of the United States in pursuance of its duty. Mr. Hopkins says that he was one of a "team" and that as a member of that "team" he did unhesitatingly and unquestioning everything that might be ordered of him. I dissent from that view, and most emphatically so, for I cannot imagine the kind of individual that will say that he is a member of a "team" and if he is asked to do something at variance with his judgment and his conscience he will do it notwithstanding his conscience and his judgment. In effect this makes the nominee both conscienceless and without judgment. I have a higher idea of the duty of the individual Senators than that.

I know men who have refused Cabinet appointments because they would not stand in that relation to the appointing power. But Mr. Hopkins says he as a member of that "team" and under any circumstances would be loyal to what the President requested of him. I cannot believe that he means this because he cannot mean that he would do any. thing, no matter what, in his loyalty.

The other day I read an editorial in the Baltimore Sun of January 20 upon that very question. I wish to read to the Senate the editorial. I read it so that it may, if possible, have its influence upon the 3 or 4, 5 or 6, 7 or 8, 9 or 10, 11 or 12 Senators who are going to vote against the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination. I am not reading it in the expectation that it is going to prevent the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins' nomination because I am sufficient of a realist to understand that I am standing here upon my feet exerting myself in a cause which is already defeated, but I do not care a continental damn whether or not that is so, for I know my cause to be right, and, knowing it to be right, I will fight for it here if mine shall be the only adverse vote upon this floor. The editorial in the Baltimore Sun of January 20 reads:

FOR THE RECORD

In his speech discussing the qualifications of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins In his speech discussing the qualifications of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins for the Cabinet post for which Mr. Roosevelt has nominated him, Senator Baner, of North Carolina, made a point which deserves more than passing notice. The Senator had been criticizing Mr. Hopkins' notorious participation, as W. P. A. Administrator, in the various partisan undertakings of the President. He then made this comment:

"Mr. Hopkins stated that his course had largely been dictated by a sense of loyalty to the President and that he considered himself a member of the team, having a part to play. No one can complain of his loyalty, but one having the distribution of large sums of public money for the relief of dependent people ought to have considered the impropriety of attempting to influence people touching a question of national policy far removed from the domain of relief."

That is what I speak of—the impropriety of the actions of Mr. Hopkins. Senators who are defending this gentleman who was nominated for the office of Secretary of Commerce may talk until doomsday, and may say that he did this, that, and the other thing in their States, and that he has been found by the people of the United States to be a very good Administrator, and so on; but no living soul, I maintain, can say with absolute accuracy that there was no impropriety in the actions of Mr. Hopkins in dealing with the W. P. A. He does not say so; but Senators who are advocating the confirmation of his nomination say so for him. He does not say so. He says that if he were to travel the road again he would not do the things that he did. He says that if he had it to do over again he would "fire" the men, for instance, in Pennsylvania who were guilty of the wrongs there. He says these things. Senators who are advocating the confirmation of his nomination say, on the contrary, he has done none of them. He admits them, and he says, in so many, many words, that if he had the road again to travel, if again it were put up to him whether he would permit the things that were done, he would not tolerate them, nor make the political speeches he made. He would see that they were stopped.

I read further from the editorial in the Baltimore Sun:

Loyalty, as everyone knows, is one of the major human virtues. Loyalty, as everyone knows, is one of the major human virtues. But there are loyalties and loyalties. A man appointed to be judge clearly owes no loyalty to the Governor or President who appointed him. He owes loyalty only to the law which he is sworn to interpret and enforce. A private secretary, at the other extreme, owes a special kind of loyalty to his employer—a greater loyalty, perhaps, than a Cabinet member owes to his chief.

Mr. Howking, concention of his obligation to Mr. Rooswelt would

Mr. Hopkins' conception of his obligation to Mr. Roosevelt would have been praiseworthy had he been a mere private secretary. It might have been admissible had he been a Cabinet officer. But his position as relief administrator transcended these. He was entrusted with the spending of billions of dollars in public funds, taken from the people of the country as a whole.

Senators on the other side seem to think the public funds that were used by this man were taken from their particular class and their particular party. Not so: the funds were taken from all the people of this land, and should be administered in behalf of all the people of the land.

He dealt, in a very unusual relationship, with millions of unfortunates. His attitude, his policy, stood between them and destitution.

Who could argue that, under such circumstances, Mr. Hopkins was merely a member of Mr. Roosevelt's "team"? Who could argue that if Mr. Roosevelt hinted at it, it was Mr. Hopkins' right and his that if Mr. Roosevelt hinted at it, it was Mr. Hopkins' right and his duty to use his special power to influence public opinion with relation to a moot question, such as that of packing the Supreme Court? Who could argue that loyalty demanded that he inject himself into primary elections in order to influence the outcome? To ask these questions is to answer them. When Mr. Hopkins announced that he regarded himself, when W. P. A. Administrator, as a member of the President's team, he announced at the same time that he had no fit conception of the job which was entrusted to him. For that job is one in which the loyalty demanded is not to an individual, even if that individual be the President of the United States. The loyalty demanded of an administrator of public United States. The loyalty demanded of an administrator of public relief is loyalty to an abstract principle, call it even-handed justice, call it impartiality, call it humanity, or what you will.

That expresses better than I could my idea of the loyalty owed by Mr. Hopkins to his appointing power, and I will not admit that a single bit of other loyalty rested upon his shoulders than is described in that editorial.

Now, let us consider the evidence for a moment. As we go through the evidence we find permeating Kentucky and Pennsylvania one thing, namely, the use of the power of the Administrator of the W. P. A. He denies it, it is true; but in the next breath he admits that he did wrong, and he would not do it again if he had it to do over. Just follow, sir, for a moment this testimony:

Senator Johnson of California. Those things which they have held to be reprehensible in the W. P. A., you do not controvert or contradict?

Mr. Hopkins. Well, insofar as we are now discussing the individual cases that the Sheppard committee investigated, I am not raising any questions about the accuracy of those reports.

The Members of the Senate know what the reports are. The reports show conclusively that he was mixing, either himself or through his subordinates, in Pennsylvania and in Kentucky, and he was influencing thus the people who came under him. I read further from the testimony:

Senator Johnson of California (referring to Pennsylvania). Anybody could have had that information.

Mr. Hopkins. Not necessarily, Senator. I have known wrongdoing to have gone on for a year before anybody found out about it. Senator Johnson of California. Absolutely. But you do not want to say that that is the excuse for these things in Pennsylvania, do you? Mr. Hopkins. No, Senator; not at all.

Senator Johnson of California. I thought you were. Mr. Hopkins. No, Senator; I am not. I certainly do not like so many of the things that have gone on in Pennsylvania.

Yet Senators stand here and split hairs as to what Hopkins did. The whole testimony reeks with just that sort of denial, and it is only that sort of denial that arises in relation to what occurred.

I quote another excerpt from the testimony:

Page 83:

Mr. HOPKINS. I stopped it hundreds of times. Senator Johnson of California. But you did not stop it in Pennsylvania or Kentucky?

Mr. Hopkins. Well, Senator, despite the people I fired throughout the country, I did not stop it. It had happened before I found it out, and then I took the action that I thought was necessary. I do not know whether anybody could stop all these things from happening in the first instance. Because, after all, American politics has a long history and tradition, and most of you know the way the local political organization works in America, and it does way the local political organization works in America, and it does not consider some of the things necessarily bad, that you or I might consider bad—such as selling tickets. I mean to say that that has been done in many places.

Senator Johnson of California. Do not lay the emphasis so much on tickets, though.

Mr. Hopkins. Or getting money or making contributions or telling somebody that, "You have to give 2 percent of your salary."

Senator Johnson of California. Or bitting a lot of truthern for Senator Johnson of California. Or hitting a lot of truckmen for $100 apiece?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is right. I think it is reprehensible, and there is not one redeeming feature in it.

And there was not. Talk as you will about New York State. New York State is free from wrong, so our friends from New York say. They may be right. So other States are free from wrong; but the States that were mentioned were not free from wrong, and that statement rests upon the admission of Hopkins.

I wish I had the power adequately to paint the sewing circle there in Pennsylvania. "With fingers weary and worn, with eyelids heavy and red," there sat those old women in Pennsylvania, sewing, sewing; sewing; and then they were dragooned into taking three, four, or five hundred tickets. The tickets were thrown at them. "Take these tickets! Take these tickets, you, and buy them!" And they reached into their frayed and worn purses, and they dug out a dollar, a dollar and a half, two dollars apiece, and paid for some five-hundred-and-odd tickets that were thus sent to themthey, the worst people on the face of the earth from whom to demand such an outlay! It was shameful; it was disgraceful; and no amount of saying now that "I am sorry I did it, and I would not do it again if I had it to do over again"not a whole roomful of that sort of thing mouthed by everybody here who is for Harry Hopkins and for that sort of thing can cram it down the throats of three or four or five or six of us, and convince us that that is the right or decent thing to do, and his toleration of it cannot be defended.

Thus it goes all along the line. "I am thinking now just of

Thus it goes all along the line. "I am thinking now just of human beings." How I have heard that expression echoed down the corridors of this Chamber! "I am thinking just of human beings, men, women, and children. I am thinking just of these human beings who, through no fault of their own, have had the misfortune to be put upon a W. P. A. roll. I am thinking of them." You may talk to me forever without making any future impression about being for men, women, and children, and the submerged one-third that are "ill-clad, ill-housed, and hungry"; but, Senators, when you came to deal with them in the most precious possession they had, the right to vote, you said to them, "Take these tickets, $1.50, $2, if you will, and do as you are told to do on election day."

I tell you, Mr. President, it makes one's blood run cold. Oh, it does not make the blood run cold of some of you over there. It would not touch you if I were to call the roll of those who died because of it. But if the things are true that Hopkins admits to be true-and he does admit it-then it is time for us to put our stamp of disapproval upon it. You cannot condone it and you cannot approve it. You cannot condone it and you cannot approve it, no matter how much eloquence may be wasted in this body, no matter how many people may tell you that those things are things which always were done in politics. It may be that they were. I have not met with that kind of politics. If it were done in my State in my behalf. I would repudiate it so quickly that I would make the man who did it suffer for it; and I will not act in a different way in regard to this great man Hopkins, around whose head we put a halo here today, and around whom we have drawn the mystic circle, and one of us has said in substance he is a greater man than the Saviour Himself. Just think of it. This man has proven himself in this way upon the record that is before the Senate of dealing with these people in the manner I have described.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may be permitted to inform the Senator from California that he has 5 minutes more under the limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well, sir. I am sorry I have but 5 minutes. I wish I had the time that I ought to have occupied at the last session upon this nomination. I do not like to talk long. I do not like to get up here and make a speech of this sort, or a speech of any sort, now. I make it because it is my duty to make it. I make it because it is the way I have thought all my life. I make it because when Republicans were in power I fought nominees of the President of the United States whom I thought to be unfit. I make it because I want to stop this thing with the W. P. A. and with the poor people of the country. I repeat, in the language of the great man I have quoted before, I speak, I think, of human beings alone.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the end of my remarks an article by Raymond Clapper relative to Mr. Hopkins. There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of January 16, 1939]

HOPKINS VERSUS HOPKINS (By Raymond Clapper)

Frequently during this administration men connected with it have retired from their New Deal positions only to reappear in the public eye as energetic floggers of the regime with which they had been connected. They find that policies which once seemed pure as the driven snow are, when seen from outside the administration, somewhat smeared with soot. There is no critic more severe and exacting than the New Deal officeholder who has put away his halo and gone back to the world of sin. His is sharper than a Hoover's tooth.

In a sense, Harry Hopkins has outdone them all. Whereas office-holders have stepped out and immediately cocked their blunder-busses at others in the New Deal, Hopkins, not a man to do things by halves, has taken to shooting at himself. Former Relief Administrator Hopkins has become a most penetrating and constructive critic of Relief Administrator Hopkins.

Former Relief Administrator Hopkins disapproves of the political speeches made by Relief Administrator Hopkins last summer. Former Relief Administrator Hopkins thinks that Relief Administrator Hopkins was wrong last summer in not firing Kentucky relief employees who were playing politics. Former Relief Administrator Hopkins thinks the Senate made a mistake last summer when it voted down the Hatch amendment to prohibit political use of relief, whereas Relief Administrator Hopkins, who was expressing his views on various political matters at the time, remained silent when a word from him would have forced the Senate to adopt the Hatch proposal.

No one predicted that this boon would result from taking Hopkins out of W. P. A. Looking at relief from the outside, he is now its most constructive critic, and he is giving the force of his endorsement, which is considerable because of his experience ability, to efforts in Congress to fumigate relief of its political odors. As an ex post facto administrator of relief, Hopkins is setting a standard that his successors can well strive to reach.

Hopkins has thus helped to prepare a receptive atmosphere for the recommendations of the Byrnes committee, which proposes pulling relief and reemployment activities together into a new Department of Public Weifare, placing them on a permanent basis as far out of reach of partisan politics as is possible with this sort of activity. Relief activities would be coordinated and tied in with public works, unemployment compensation, and larger assistance to the aged and incapacitated. The Byrnes committee also will seek to include in the pending temporary relief appropriation bill safeguards against political manipulation of relief.

The House bill omitted any provision for introducing civil service into the relief organization. If a new permanent relief set-up is to be ordered by Congress, the present omission of civil-service provisions in the temporary relief appropriation is of small importance.

small importance.

Roosevelt had, by Executive order, prepared to blanket into civil-service status, existing employees of W. P. A. on February 1. The House objected to freezing political appointees into W. P. A. by this method and vetoed the whole scheme but neglected to provide any substitute in the form of civil-service examinations. Some 35,000 jobs are involved. Those jobs ought to be placed on a nonpolitical career basis.

Also, State relief administrators now have to be confirmed by the Senate, which makes senatorial patronage out of those jobs and makes them as political as the old postmasterships. Senators insisted upon the right of confirmation, fearing that otherwise the relief administrators might become hostile political forces. Those administrators, too, ought to be nonpolitical career men.

Anyway, former Relief Administrator Hopkins shows by what a simple process objective and constructive criticism can be obtained. Take a New Dealer off his job and start him talking. It would be really getting somewhere if Roosevelt, after leaving the White House, became a newspaper columnist and started telling what he thought was wrong with the New Deal. That would be something.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hesitate to detain the Senate longer in the consideration of this nomination, but I shall occupy the time of the Senate for a few moments, not only because I deem it my duty to do so but because I want to do so.

I hope that in what I shall say I may be free from emotion, and free from any unfairness toward anybody; but we are dealing here, and must continue to deal longer than most of us would desire, with a subject that is intensely human. That subject is the relationship of government to those of its citizens who are unfortunate enough not to be able, by their own efforts or their own opportunities, to enjoy the share of whatever economic prosperity or wealth there is in the Nation, which under other circumstances they would be permitted to enjoy.

We have been engaging here during the past 6 or 7 years in what has come to be popularly known as relief. We started out in the beginning under the delusion that the Federal Government could loan money to the States, and thereby escape its responsibility of administration; and for a while we harbored the delusion that that money loaned to the States would be returned. We soon discovered the fiction of that delusion; and the Government, by gradual steps with which we are all familiar, took over the responsibility of relief and work on a national scale. Mr. Hopkins became the Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, referred to as the F. E. R. A. Gradually that developed into the C. W. A., the Civil Works Administration, which finally evolved into the W. P. A., the Works Progress Administration.

During the entire time during which Mr. Hopkins has been the Administrator of F. E. R. A., and C. W. A., and W. P. A., there have been expended $9,357,076,000. During that time between 225,000 and 250,000 separate projects have been prosecuted and completed under the W. P. A. and the C. W. A. under the administration of Mr. Hopkins. During the life of the Works Progress Administration 6,780,000 different persons have worked throughout the United States on projects that were conducted under the supervision of the W. P. A. and Mr. Hopkins.

I ask any Senator here who opposes this nomination, or who opposes the program of the W. P. A., to point to a single one of these 250,000 projects in connection with which there has been discovered a dollar's worth of graft under the administration of Harry Hopkins. These projects have consisted of the erection of schoolhouses all over this Nation. They have consisted of the construction of playgrounds and parks and highways. They have consisted of the rejuvenation and revival of historic sites of one kind and another all over the Nation in order to perpetuate in the minds of coming generations the deeds of heroism of those who have gone before. They have consisted of all kinds of worthy projects.

I have seen some of these projects. Driving through the mountains of Kentucky I have stopped in the middle of the road to observe a three-room or four-room modern brick and stone schoolhouse standing hard by a one-room log cabin, the sort of schoolhouse in which our people in those sections have been educated from generation to generation. I have seen hundreds of more commodious buildings all over the country.

In all the debate over the character of Harry Hopkins as a person and over the character of his administration as a public officer I have heard no reference made to these evidences of permanent improvement, to the enrichment of our social and economic lives in not only every county but in almost every village and hamlet and throughout every countryside over this Nation, in connection with no one of which has anybody charged, nor can anyone prove, that a dollar of graft went to anyone in charge of these projects or this program, or to anyone who worked upon them.

Since the 4th of March 1933, 6,780,000 men have been employed under the jurisdiction of Mr. Hopkins, and the newspapers of the Nation which have been unfriendly to this administration, and which have sought to find something which could be the basis of a charge of misconduct, have gone out with spyglasses and with magnifying instruments of all kinds to find a peg on which to hang a hat indicating corruption or incompetence. Then, in an unfortunate statement made by Mr. Hopkins in the spring of 1938, he said that if he were still a citizen of Iowa-having once been a citizen of that State-he would vote for the opponent of our friend and colleague, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]. I said at the time Mr. Hopkins made that statement, and I now say, that it was an indiscreet statement, that it was a mistake for him to have made it, it was an improper statement for him to have made. Aside from the merits of any contest in which the Senator from Iowa, for whom all of us have the highest respect and esteem, was a candidate, the statement was an indiscretion, it was improper, whether it was deliberate or casual, as at the time I thought it to have been. The Senator from Iowa, however, believed it was deliberate. Whether it was deliberate or casual, it ought not to have been made. I venture the suggestion that if it had not been made the Sheppard committee never would have been authorized by an amendment to go into the activities of the W. P. A. The Sheppard committee having already been appointed to investigate campaign expenditures in the various senatorial races. the statement that was made by Mr. Hopkins created such a furor on the floor of the Senate that it resulted in the amendment of the resolution under which the Sheppard committee was appointed, involving an investigation of the activities of the W. P. A. in senatorial contests.

As the result of the activities of the Sheppard committee, a report has been brought here in which the committee criticizes the activities of certain subordinate officers of the W. P. A. in three States-Tennessee, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky. In its report the Sheppard committee was just enough and fair enough to say that although they discovered some activities in Kentucky that were reprehensible, I had no knowledge of them, and was in no way responsible for them. The Sheppard committee could have made no other sort of report, because if they had had all of their investigators in Kentucky, and if they had remained there until now, and should stay there another year, they could not have produced and could not now produce any evidence that could have fastened upon me either knowledge of or responsibility for the things which they criticized in the State of Reference has been made in the report of the committee and in the debate on the floor of the Senate to the report made by a very lovable and estimable newspaper reporter who represented the Scripps-Howard press of an investigation he made in the State of Kentucky. I refer to Mr. Thomas L. Stokes. I know Mr. Stokes. We all know him. He is an estimable man, and I think wanted to be fair. I do not think the fact that that particular chain of newspapers was hoping for my defeat and in their paper in the State of Kentucky opposed me vigorously day by day in their news columns and their editorials had any effect on the kind of report Mr. Stokes made to his paper.

At that time there were 60,000 people on the rolls of the W. P. A. in Kentucky, and after spending weeks in the State, Mr. Stokes found that 22 people had been guilty of conduct which he thought was subject to criticism, and he wrote about them in his papers. Those cases were immediately referred to Mr. Hopkins, and he did what every department of this Government will do under such circumstances; he sent his investigators to the particular localities involved to interview the people concerned and to investigate the charges which had been made in these newspaper articles. The same course had been pursued by the Post Office Department and is pursued day by day and year by year whenever charges are made against a postal employee. The same practice is followed by every other department when charges are made against its personnel. It sends its investigating force to look into the charges and make a

By inference and by implication Mr. Hopkins is criticized here because he pursued that policy, because he sent his own investigators instead of going into some other department and getting theirs to investigate these cases. The result of his investigation was that, out of 22, 2 of the charges were sustained, and 20 of them were declared not sustained. I do not know what evidence the committee has in addition to that which was gathered by Mr. Hopkins' investigators. It is not very important. The committee says that Mr. Hopkins was wrong, that 18 of the charges were sustained instead of 2.

Not only these newspapers, which were, I suppose, interested in the result in Kentucky, not on account of my importance, but because in the position I occupy temporarily I was a sort of symbol in the State of Kentucky of the New Deal fight, but other newspaper writers here in Washington have undertaken to create the impression that if it had not been for corruption and intimidation and coercion and reprehensible conduct of someone in connection with W. P. A.,

I would have not been returned to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, so far as the people of Kentucky are concerned, I do not have to defend my record on the floor of the Senate. The first office I ever held was that of prosecuting attorney, to which I was elected when I was 26 years of age. At the end of 4 years in that office I was elected a judge without opposition.

Before my 4-year term had expired I had been elected to Congress to represent a great district of that State in the House of Representatives. And although I had a fight in my first campaign, for 14 years I was returned without opposition to the House of Representatives.

In 1926 I was nominated, without opposition, for United States Senator from the State of Kentucky. At the end of a 6-year term I was renominated, carrying 112 counties out of 120, and was reelected in 1932.

In 1938 I was confronted with the opposition of the chief executive of my State, a popular and colorful young man who had been able to build up a political organization which was the strongest and the most nearly invulnerable that ever existed in the State of Kentucky. In my campaign for renomination I had to fight that organization, with all those on the State pay roll who were openly assessed from 2 to 5 percent of their salaries in order to raise a campaign fund, and the Sheppard committee reports that the portion of that fund collected from men and women who were employed and paid wholly or in part out of the Federal Treasury, amounted to $70,000. That included men who were working on the highways, where the Federal Government was helping to pay the expense. That included old-age pension agents in every county, who drew half their salary out of the Federal Treasury. That included the personnel of the unemployment service, every dollar of whose salary was paid out of Washington, not a dollar of which was contributed by the State of Kentucky.

I do not wish to rehash the primary campaign in Kentucky; but in view of the unfair and in some cases deliberate misrepresentations of those who have tried to paint my nomination and election with the infamy of imputed wrong, I have a right to speak. As I said here the other day when interrupting another Senator, for 30 years I have been holding public office because I have been chosen by the people of my State and my communities. I never bought a vote nor authorized a man or woman to buy a vote in my behalf. I never put up a dollar in all my life to buy a vote. I do not believe in it. All my life I have stood for fair and honorable elections in Kentucky and offended and made enemies of some of my own party associates when I fought for a direct primary in order that the people might vote their choice, instead of having their choices manipulated in political conventions. And whatever the outside world thinks, knowing, as I think I do, what the people of Kentucky think, regardless of what the people anywhere else may think, I do not propose either for unfriendly newspapers or for unfriendly colleagues of my own here, if there are any, to smear that record that I have made over a period of 30 years in order to find a pretense for voting against Harry Hopkins for Secretary of Commerce.

About all the compensation we get here in this body is perhaps the delusion that we are rendering a public service and the reputation that we are able to build up in the performance of that service. There are no financial rewards that we can honorably take here that could not be infinitely multiplied on the outside by the exercise of only half of our energy or our care or our diligence in the performance of some private duty.

Mr. President, what are the facts? The statement has been made here in this debate that because the pay rolls of the W. P. A. were increased in 1938 we are automatically to conclude that the increase was due to politics. Who made that increase possible? Not Harry Hopkins. Not Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is the ultimate target of all this denunciation-and you need not doubt that for a moment. Harry Hopkins did not make possible the increase in the W. P. A. pay roll in 1938. Franklin D. Roosevelt did not make it possible. The Congress of the United States bears the responsibility for that, for they increased the amount that might be expended for W. P. A. labor over that of 1937 because, whatever you call it, whether it was a recession or whether it was a depression, as described by those whose minds dwell in venom-whether it was a depression or a recession-it began in the latter part of 1937; and the number of those unemployed began to increase in the latter part of 1937, and that condition continued over into 1938. As a result of the increased unemployment of this Nation the House of Representatives and the Senate increased the amount of money appropriated for public works in the Nation, and if Mr. Hopkins had not expended that money by the employment of more men and women he would have been subject to and would have received the just condemnation of the Congress of the United States and the country.

So it is not true that because of the increase in the W. P. A. rolls in 1938, politics is to be inferred. But if politics is to be inferred, then I say that in every State in the Union the increase of employees was determined by the need for work on the W. P. A. and in connection with other programs of the States of this Nation by reason of unemployment.

I have before me, Mr. President, tabulated figures for both 1937 and 1938 concerning the number of those on the W. P. A. rolls in every State in the Union, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the Record here as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Kentucky. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The figures are as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY. I will go over the figures for all the States. The Sheppard committee singled out Tennessee, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania, three States, in which the W. P. A. was subject to criticism. I have made a tabulation of the percentage of increase in all the States and by regions, as decided by the W. P. A.

In the State of Connecticut the increase was 40 percent. In the State of Maine the increase was 33 percent. In Massachusetts it was 58 percent; in New Hampshire, 50 percent. In New York City it was 30 percent. In New York State, outside the city, it was 25 percent. In Rhode Island it was 20 percent. In Vermont it was 70 percent. In the whole region in which these States are located, region No. 1, the increase was 33 percent.

Region No. 2: In Delaware the increase was 55 percent. In the District of Columbia, where nobody was running for office, and where no politics possibly could have entered into it, the increase was 80 percent. In Maryland it was 38 percent. In New Jersey it was 42 percent. In Pennsylvania it was 40 percent. In West Virginia it was 50 percent. In that entire region, region No. 2, the increase was about 38 percent.

The third region: Alabama had an increase of 105 percent. Arkansas had an increase of 80 percent; Florida, 75 percent; Georgia, 84 percent; Louisiana, 85 percent; Mississippi, 100 percent; North Carolina, 110 percent; South Carolina, 60 percent; Tennessee, 110 percent; Texas, 65 percent; Virginia, 40 percent. The total increase in 1938 in the region known as the third region, in which these States are located, was an average of 80 percent.

The fourth region: Illinois had an increase of 80 percent. Indiana had an increase of 55 percent. Iowa had 45 percent. Kansas had about 20-percent increase. Kentucky had 55 percent. In the State of Michigan, from January to December, there was an increase of 115 percent. If there was a State in the Union in which the administration was interested in the election of a Governor at least—there being no senatorial race and Governor Murphy being a candidate for reelection—it was the State of Michigan. I believe it would not be drawing on my imagination to say that the President and Mr. Hopkins, if they had any choice in Michigan, were in favor of Gov. Frank Murphy.

I know that all of us Democrats hoped for his reelection as Governor. And yet from August 1938 to November 1938, more than 50,000 people were taken off the rolls of the W. P. A. in the State of Michigan.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot yield. I am sorry. I have only 30 minutes, and I have not much time left.

In Minnesota the increase was 55 percent; in Missouri the increase was 75 percent; in Ohio it was 130 percent; in Wisconsin it was 75 percent; in Arizona it was 33½ percent; in California, 40 percent; in Colorado, 19 percent; and so forth.

I ask unanimous consent to include this tabulation in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate having heard the request, and there being no objection, it may be printed. The tabulation is as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have given these figures—and they are official figures—in order to refute the suggestion that in any State, or in the Nation as a whole, Harry Hopkins, Franklin D. Roosevelt, or anybody connected with the W. P. A., was trying to increase the rolls in order to affect the result of an election. If anybody is responsible or blamable for the increase in the W. P. A. rolls, it is the Congress of the United States.

On the day of the primary in Kentucky there were 69,000 on the rolls. From 40 to 50 percent of them were Republicans, and are now Republicans. They have not been fired. They could not vote in the Democratic primaries. Taking a conservative figure of 40 percent, and subtracting that figure from 69,000, we have left 41,735. One-third of those who were left were not registered, and therefore they could not vote in the primary election. That left 27,000. One-third of those who were registered did not vote, and when we deduct that number from the figure we have, the number left is 18,525.

I have no way of knowing how many of those left voted for me. I assume a majority of them would have done so as a matter of course, because they were working on a program which I as a Senator had helped to bring about. However, I never electioneered with a single one of them. I never visited any of them. I did not go into the W. P. A. headquarters of the State in Kentucky, nor in any region, nor in any county.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator that his time has expired, unless he requests an extension.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to ask for an extension. However, if there is no objection, I should like to have the 5 minutes which was taken out of my time by yielding a moment ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky may have 5 minutes additional.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky may continue for 5 minutes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am sorry, but I follow the old democratic principle of special privileges to none. Although I know the occasion is a very important one for my distinguished friend, I shall have to object to any extension at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me conclude with one sentence: The majority which I received in the primary was 72,000. If I had not received a single vote from W. P. A. workers in Kentucky, my majority would have been at least 60,000; so, though I am grateful for the W. P. A. votes I received as for all the votes that I received, the result was not determined by that vote.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for the patient attention it has given me. I am sorry I have not a little more time. However, I am content to leave the verdict with the Senate.

I now suggest the absence of a quorum in order that Senators who are absent may be called to the Chamber before this vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum being made, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lee	Reynolds

Mr. LEWIS. I beg again to announce the absence of certain Senators, and the reasons therefor, as given by me on a previous roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins, of New York, to be Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask to be excused from voting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Maryland is excused from voting.

Mr. LEWIS. I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton], who is absent because of illness, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], who are absent on important public business, if present and voting, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] is detained in the State of Massachusetts attending a conference of New England Governors on the New England flood-control program. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 27, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

HEALTH OF THE NATION (H. DOC. NO. 120)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my annual message to the Congress I referred to problems of health security. I take occasion now to bring this subject specifically to your attention in transmitting the report and recommendations on national health prepared by the Interdepartmental Committee to Coordinate Health and Welfare Activities.

The health of the people is a public concern; ill health is a major cause of suffering, economic loss, and dependency; good health is essential to the security and progress of the Nation.

Health needs were studied by the Committee on Economic Security which I appointed in 1934, and certain basic steps were taken by the Congress in the Social Security Act. It was recognized at that time that a comprehensive health program was required as an essential link in our national defenses against individual and social insecurity. Further study, however, seemed necessary at that time to determine ways and means of providing this protection most effectively.

In August 1935, after the passage of the Social Security Act, I appointed the Interdepartmental Committee to Coordinate Health and Welfare Activities. Early in 1938 this committee forwarded to me reports prepared by their technical experts. They had reviewed unmet health needs, pointing to the desirability of a national health program, and they submitted the outlines of such a program. These reports were impressive. I therefore suggested that a conference be held to bring the findings before representatives of the general public and of the medical, public health, and allied professions.

More than 200 men and women, representing many walks of life and many parts of our country, came together in Washington last July to consider the technical committee's findings and recommendations and to offer further proposals. There was agreement on two basic points: The existence of serious unmet needs for medical service; and our failure to make full application of the growing powers of medical science to prevent or control disease and disability.

I have been concerned by the evidence of inequalities that exist among the States as to personnel and facilities for health services. There are equally serious inequalities of resources, medical facilities, and services in different sections and among different economic groups. These inequalities create handicaps for the parts of our country and the groups of our people which most sorely need the benefits of modern medical science.

The objective of a national health program is to make available in all parts of our country and for all groups of our people the scientific knowledge and skill at our command to prevent and care for sickness and disability; to safeguard mothers, infants, and children; and to offset through social insurance the loss of earnings among workers who are temporarily or permanently disabled.

The committee does not propose a great expansion of Federal health services. It recommends that plans be worked out and administered by States and localities with the assistance of Federal grants-in-aid. The aim is a flexible program. The committee points out that while the eventual costs of the proposed program would be considerable, they represent a sound investment which can be expected to wipe out, in the long run, certain costs now borne in the form of relief.

We have reason to derive great satisfaction from the increase in the average length of life in our country and from the improvement in the average levels of health and wellbeing. Yet these improvements in the averages are cold comfort to the millions of our people whose security in health and survival is still as limited as was that of the Nation as a whole 50 years ago.

The average level of health or the average cost of sickness has little meaning for those who now must meet personal catastrophes. To know that a stream is 4 feet deep on the average is of little help to those who drown in the places where it is 10 feet deep. The recommendations of the committee offer a program to bridge that stream by reducing the risks of needless suffering and death, and of costs and dependency, that now overwhelm millions of individual families and sap the resources of the Nation.

I recommend the report of the Interdepartmental Committee for careful study by the Congress. The essence of the program recommended by the Committee is Federal-State cooperation. Federal legislation necessarily precedes, for it indicates the assistance which may be made available to the States in a cooperative program for the Nation's health.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 23, 1939.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask that the President's message with the Interdepartmental Committee report which accompanies it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESEARCH-A NATIONAL RESOURCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress, a report entitled "Research—A National Resource," compiled by the National Resources Committee.

This report deals with the relation of the Federal Government to research. Subsequent reports in this field will cover research by colleges, universities and foundations, by business organizations, by the industrial laboratories, and by the State and municipal governments.

The dependence of civilization on science is universally recognized, but the extent of the activities of private and public agencies carrying on scientific inquiry is not generally known. It is unlikely that large numbers of our people have any adequate realization of the services which are being rendered by the executive agencies of the Federal Government through scientific researches in medicine, agriculture, economics, public administration, and the other natural and social sciences.

This report indicates the new emphasis in recent years on activities in the social science fields and stresses the need for effective coordination of all agencies engaged in research in order to achieve the solution of many of our more difficult problems.

I commend the report to the consideration of the Congress.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 23, 1939.

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annulties for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

House Concurrent Resolution 3

Whereas the welfare of the great Commonwealth of Iowa de-

Whereas the welfare of the great Commonwealth of Iowa depends upon the stabilization of agriculture; and Whereas long-term loans and low interest rates help materially to stabilize the agricultural industry; and Whereas the emergency farm-loan interest rate of 3½ percent, made possible by special action of the National Congress to the farmer borrowers having Federal land-bank loans, expires July 1, 1940, and the emergency farm-loan interest rate of 4 percent, made possible by a special act of the National Congress to the farmer borrowers having Land Bank Commissioner loans, expires July 1, 1940; and

Whereas the Land Bank Commissioner loans provide for principal payments of 5 percent or 10 percent per annum in addition to the interest payments; and
Whereas thousands of farmers in the State of Iowa have Federal land-bank and/or Land Bank Commissioner loans, and because eral land-bank and/or Land Bank Commissioner loans, and because of the fact that the interest rates are not definitely fixed at a low rate and because of the fact that principal payments of at least 5 percent or 10 percent per annum are required on Land Bank Commissioner loans, there is much uncertainty and indefiniteness in the plans of such farmer borrowers; and Whereas it appears to be possible to extend lower interest rates to the farmers without an excessive burden to the taxpayer and with almost no administrative costs and that interest rates on Government loans to other industries is considerably less than that fixed for the farmer of the Middle West; and Whereas it is our opinion that low interest rates and small principal payments accorded to the farmers of Iowa through the Federal land-bank system would contribute much to the stabilization of agriculture: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Iowa, duly assembled in Des Moines, Iowa, respectfully petitions the Members of the National Congress to use every possible effort to secure the passage of a law making 3½-percent interest rate permanent to the farmer borrowers of the Federal land-bank and the Land Bank Commissioner and that this legislature urges the Members of the National Congress to secure the lature urges the Members of the National Congress to secure the passage of a law extending all principal payments on Land Bank Commissioner loans over a period of 34 years as provided for Federal land-bank loans, and that the said be made permanent and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each United States Senator and Representative from the State of Iowa, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, to the President of the United States Senate, and to the President of the United States

SALVAGE OF TIMBER IN NEW ENGLAND—REDUCTION OF FIRE HAZARD

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and ask to have it printed in full in the RECORD. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by me regarding the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire will be received, printed in the Record and properly referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 913) authorizing an appropriation for full payment of the approved schedules of prices for salvaged timber products purchased or to be purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

A bill authorizing an appropriation for full payment of the approved schedules of prices for salvaged timber products purchased or to be purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, and for other purposes

Whereas the hurricane of September 1938 left great areas in the New England States devastated and the forests in those areas a tangled mass of fallen timber, causing financial loss to more than 20,000 farm owners whose subsistence depended on their timber;

Whereas, in order to prevent suffering and give aid in restoration of financial stability to these farm owners, it became necessary for the Federal Government to put into effect a program of work to reduce fire hazard and a timber-salvage operation to recover some part of the destroyed wealth of these States; and

Whereas the fire hazard now existing threatens a disaster to life and property which can be lessened by accelerating the salvage operation; and

Whereas the powers hitherto granted by the Congress to the executive branch of the Government are inadequate to meet the urgent needs of this stricken area: Therefore **Be it enacted, etc. That there is hereby authorized to be appro-

needs of this stricken area: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000,000, to be immediately available and to continue available until expended, which shall be used for paying the difference between the approved schedules of prices for salvaged timber products purchased or to be purchased from the owners thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, and the amounts paid from funds loaned by the Disaster Loan Corporation to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, and for necessary administrative expenses (including printing and binding) in connection with the timber-salvaging operations conducted by the Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration. tration.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $4,000,000, to be immediately available and to continue available until expended, for paying the owners thereof at the rate of $2.50 per thousand board feet for logs heretofore or hereafter delivered to and accepted by the Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, which payment shall be in addition to that provided for in section 1 of

The statement presented by Mr. Tobey is as follows:

I have introduced this bill after making a careful study of the timber disaster which affects New England and part of New York, feeling that prompt action by the Government is imperative, not only from the standpoint of fair treatment to the timber owners for losses they have already sustained, but more particularly with the view to taking definite action to aid in the necessary campaign to reduce the fire hazard which is now existing in this area and which is increasing with the passage of each week.

The United States Forest Service has reported that without adequate aid from the Federal Government to reduce the fire hazard it is well within the bounds of reason that such a serious holocaust might occur during the coming fire season as to far exceed the hurricane of September in resulting loss of life and property. Furthermore, says the report, a fire would cause irreparable damage to the forests of the future in elimination of the remaining live timber on extensive areas. I have introduced this bill after making a careful study of the Irreparable damage to the forests of the future in elimination of the remaining live timber on extensive areas.

I have talked with officials in the Forest Service and have been advised that if such a devastation should occur it would take 50 years after replanting for pine to become of merchantable age, 60 years for spruce, and approximately 100 years for northern hardwoods.

In the office of Mr. Silver I have hardwoods.

In the office of Mr. Silcox I have seen pictures of severe forest fires over large areas in other parts of the country and appreciate the seriousness of our New England situation.

At the present time the Federal Government is paying the timber owner 90 percent of the schedule of prices for timber delivered to the ponds or to the sawmills. The great practical difficulty has been lack of sufficient inducement to warrant the timber owner to accept the Federal proposal and operate the lumber for delivery to the places designated by the Government. This bill seeks to furnish that inducement.

Section I provides for the payment of 100 percent of the delivered value of the timber, purchase to be made at the point of delivery. Under that plan alone the timber owner would still stand to lose on his investment, for, according to estimates of the United States Forest Service, made after a survey of the tangled conditions of our timberlands as of last October, it would cost the timber owner approximately $2 per thousand feet more to cut the timber and transport it to the point of delivery than it would under normal circumstances.

to cut the timber and transport it to the point of delivery than it would under normal circumstances.

Unless one has seen the condition of our timberlands with his own eyes it is impossible for him to visualize the picture. In the few hours of the hurricane at least half of the timber in New Hampshire became an ugly mass of crisscrossed waste, a mass of broken, twisted, and splintered wood, carrying with it the life savings of thousands of families and the wealth that was to have put children through college or provide funds for many of our older people in their last years.

Due to increased demand for trucks and labor as a result of the down-timber conditions, it has been estimated that this additional cost has now risen from $2 to $2.50.

Therefore, under section 2 of this bill, I have provided that the Federal Government pay the timber owner a bonus of two dollars and a half for each thousand board feet of logs which he brings to the designated point of delivery.

and a half for each thousand board feet of logs which he brings to the designated point of delivery.

The Forest Service has estimated that from one billion to one and six-tenths billion feet can be salvaged up to the end of June, the deadline of the period during which the timber is salvageable. Based upon these figures, the appropriation called for is $4,000,000. I believe that this twofold plan would be an inducement sufficient to effect the acceptance by the timber owner of the Federal purchase plan, and will thereby greatly reduce the fire hazard.

The Forest Service has estimated that there are from two and a half to four billion feet of merchantable timber down, as of its report of January 14. It reports that as of January 14, 450,000,000 to 500,000,000 feet of timber had been contracted for delivery and that the logs actually received on that date totaled 30,000,000 to 32,000,000 feet.

It can well be seen from these figures that unless the Federal Government takes further action immediately for fire-risk reduction the hazard will increase and will threaten the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property as well as loss of human

The Federal investment of the $4,000,000 to provide for such payment of $2.50 per 1,000 board-feet is a small one when we consider the potential future loss by fire of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property, which will result if this fire hazard is not materially reduced.

I urge that this bill be given immediate consideration by the committee and that the Congress act with the least possible delay in

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 23, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. John Compton Ball, pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O Lord, do we lift our souls for the activities of a new day, and with joy in our hearts and praises on our lips we acknowledge Thy holiness, wisdom, power, and loving kindness. We thank Thee for life and the blessings bestowed upon us as a nation, and pray that we may stand firm for the privileges given us by the sacrifices of our forefathers.

To this end, endue our President with divine wisdom. Give to our beloved Speaker of this House of Representatives the guidance of Thy Holy Spirit in his leadership and decisions. May every Member be motivated not by the fear of men but by faith in God; for, conscious of the needs of our constituents and the great national problems that confront us, we feel unequal to the task unless we possess wisdom from on high. So we plead for Thy continued guidance this day and every day; and as the physical sunshine floods the land with light, so may our hearts be illuminated and warmed by the sunshine of Thy divine presence and love. In the name of Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 20, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE MATTERS PERTAINING TO REPLACEMENT AND CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 28.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 28

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate All Matters Pertaining to the Replacement and Conservation of Wildlife is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44 of the Seventy-fourth Congress and House Resolution 11 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1941, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation. Any unexpended balance of the total amount authorized for the use of the said special committee under House Resolution 97 of the Seventy-fifth Congress is hereby continued available until said date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Virginia tell us how much unexpended money is in the Treasury available to the committee?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I could not tell the gentleman the exact amount, but enough to finish the work of the committee for the full calendar year of 1939. This appropriation was made available to us in 1937 and we worked during 1937 and 1938 and we will have enough to work throughout 1939 out of the one appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What does the gentleman propose to do for the year 1940?

Mr. ROBERTSON. We will ask for enough money to continue the work of the committee during that time, and I may say to the gentleman there has never been a special investigating committee of the House that has operated for as little money or has saved the Government more money than this Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us in a few words what his committee has accomplished and what he hopes to accomplish?

Mr. ROBERTSON. We have coordinated the conservation activities of the emergency agencies; we have coordinated the regular departments with these emergency agencies; and we have directed the tremendous expenditures of the C. C. camps into very constructive channels in preserving a great natural resource, the wildlife of the country, in building dams and reservoirs to check the run-off and to restore water levels. We have cooperated with the Soil Conservation Service, and only on the 10th of this month were we able to get an amendment to the regulation paying soil-improvement benefits to farmers to cover the planting of annuals and perennials, legumes, and shrubs for the improvement of the habitat of wildlife. There are literally millions of acres of waste or arid lands serving no purpose, not suited for agriculture. We can build that land up or encourage the farmers to do so through cooperative agreements, instruction in farm management, and by distributing free Korean lespedeza, for instance, a soil builder, and a soil holder, and a wonderful food supply for birds of all kinds. The past work of our committee and plans for the future were summarized in a 29-page report submitted to the House on January 3.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It strikes me the committee has quite a program and the gentleman might well consider having this committee made a standing committee of the House. Has the committee given any consideration to that?

Mr. ROBERTSON. There has been a big demand for that to be done, but we have not asked for it, for two reasons. In the first place, a standing committee would be more expensive to the Congress. In the second place, under the plan under which the Democrats work, a member of an exclusive committee cannot be a member of any minor committee, and this would exclude from membership on this committee those with technical knowledge of what is to be done because they all have major committee assignments.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has made out a very good case and I have no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice this resolution was introduced on January 3 and referred to the Committee on Rules. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia if he has made any request of the chairman of the committee to report the resolution?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have, and he said last week he would be very glad to report it, but he had not had the members assigned to his committee. The chairman is now out of the city on important business, I understand, and will not be back until the last of the week. I am sure he would have no objection, because he is in thorough sympathy with the resolution. We have a large volume of work to be handled all the time, and there should be no break in the committee's activities.

Mr. MAPES. Has the gentleman from Virginia spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Rules about calling it up in this way?

Mr. ROBERTSON. No, because he is out of the city; but I am sure I can say that he would have no objection, as we have handled it previously in this way. In 1935 we handled it by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, I realize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], the chairman of the committee, is able to take care of himself, but let me say to the gentleman from Virginia, first, as he knows, I am very much in favor of the work which he has been doing as chairman of this committee, but let me say further that there are several resolutions of this nature pending before the Committee on Rules, and it seems to me there is some question about the form of the resolution and some other questions which ought to be considered by the Committee on Rules,

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is in the exact language of previous resolutions, and on one previous occasion we handled the resolution in this manner by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of the continuance of this committee, but I shall object to its present consideration because it is subject to a point of order. The resolution should not be brought in in the form in which it is presented. I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record, and to include therein several brief addresses delivered at the dedicatory exercises of a Federal building in Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. On Friday last I offered for the RECORD, by asking unanimous consent, an article written by one of our colleagues the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton]. That unanimous-consent request was refused through the objection of a gentleman on the majority side. What I would like to know is whether or not we are still operating under the rules which I have understood to prevail, to the effect that articles by Members themselves are not objected to when they are offered for the RECORD.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman does not expect me to answer that question.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think it is incumbent upon me to respond to my good friend and colleague from Indiana [Mr. Halleck] because I objected to his offering the article in question on Friday last. It is not my intention, nor is it the intention, as far as I know, of anyone on the majority side, to object to the inclusion of remarks of Members themselves if made by a Member, whether of the majority or the minority party, over the radio, or to the inclusion of brief editorials; but it seems to me that the Joint Committee on Printing ought to consider whether we are going to be permitted to put whole books into the RECORD. This particular article would have taken up so many pages in the RECORD that I objected to it, and I shall continue to object to anything like that, whether it comes from my own side or the Republican side.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman thoroughly well knows that articles that go far beyond what the gentleman from Indiana offered, so far as the number of pages is concerned, have been permitted to be placed in the RECORD, and the gentleman has been silent, so far as I know, when they were offered.

Mr. BUCK. Oh, the gentleman knows that I have not been here during the sessions when everything has been offered. I appreciate the position of the minority leader in this matter, but it strikes me that he and the majority leader and the Committee on Printing ought to get together and adopt some definite policy as to what is going to go into the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That could not be done, and the majority leader has admitted it. Consequently we take the attitude that if gentlemen on that side object to our requests, we will object to their requests.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. HALLECK. I object.

ACTING CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which was read:

January 23, 1939.

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sir: Desiring to be temporarily absent from my office, I hereby designate Mr. H. Newlin Megill, an official in my office, to sign any and all papers for me which he would be authorized to sign by virtue of this designation and of clause 4, rule III of the House. Respectfully yours, SOUTH TRIMBLE Clerk of the House of Representatives.

NATIONAL RESOURCE (H. DOC. NO. 122)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a report entitled "Research-a National Resource," compiled by the National Resources Committee.

This report deals with the relation of the Federal Government to research. Subsequent reports in this field will cover research by colleges, universities and foundations, by business organizations, by the industrial laboratories, and by the State and municipal governments.

The dependence of civilization on science is universally recognized, but the extent of the activities of private and public agencies carrying on scientific inquiry is not generally known. It is unlikely that large numbers of our people have any adequate realization of the services which are being rendered by the executive agencies of the Federal Government through scientific researches in medicine, agriculture, economics, public administration, and the other natural and social sciences.

This report indicates the new emphasis in recent years on activities in the social-science fields and stresses the need for effective coordination of all agencies engaged in research in order to achieve the solution of many of our more difficult problems

I commend the report to the consideration of the Con-

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT (H. DOC. NO. 121)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931.

PUBLIC HEALTH (H. DOC. NO. 120)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my annual message to the Congress I referred to problems of health security. I take occasion now to bring this subject specifically to your attention in transmitting the report and recommendations on national health prepared by the Interdepartmental Committee to Coordinate Health and Welfare Activities.

The health of the people is a public concern, ill health is a major cause of suffering, economic loss, and dependency; good health is essential to the security and progress of the Nation.

Health needs were studied by the Committee on Economic Security which I appointed in 1934, and certain basic steps were taken by the Congress in the Social Security Act. It was recognized at that time that a comprehensive health program was required as an essential link in our national defenses against individual and social insecurity. Further study, however, seemed necessary at that time to determine ways and means of providing this protection most effectively.

In August 1935, after the passage of the Social Security Act, I appointed the Interdepartmental Committee to Coordinate Health and Welfare Activities. Early in 1938, this committee forwarded to me reports prepared by their technical experts. They had reviewed unmet health needs, pointing to the desirability of a national health program, and they submitted the outlines of such a program. These reports were impressive. I therefore suggested that a conference be held to bring the findings before representatives of the general public and of the medical, public health, and allied profes-

More than 200 men and women, representing many walks of life and many parts of our country, came together in Washington last July to consider the technical committee's findings and recommendations and to offer further proposals. There was agreement on two basic points: The existence of serious unmet needs for medical service; and our failure to make full application of the growing powers of medical science to prevent or control disease and disability.

I have been concerned by the evidence of inequalities that exist among the States as to personnel and facilities for health services. There are equally serious inequalities of resources, medical facilities, and services in different sections and among different economic groups. These inequalities create handicaps for the parts of our country and the groups of our people which most sorely need the benefits of modern medical science.

The objective of a national health program is to make available in all parts of our country and for all groups of our people the scientific knowledge and skill at our command to prevent and care for sickness and disability; to safeguard mothers, infants, and children; and to offset through social insurance the loss of earnings among workers who are temporarily or permanently disabled.

The committee does not propose a great expansion of Federal health services. It recommends that plans be worked out and administered by States and localities, with the assistance of Federal grants-in-aid. The aim is a flexible program. The committee points out that while the eventual costs of the proposed program would be considerable they represent a sound investment which can be expected to wipe out, in the long run, certain costs now borne in the form of

We have reason to derive great satisfaction from the increase in the average length of life in our country and from the improvement in the average levels of health and wellbeing. Yet these improvements in the averages are cold comfort to the millions of our people whose security in health and survival is still as limited as was that of the Nation as a whole 50 years ago.

The average level of health or the average cost of sickness has little meaning for those who now must meet personal catastrophes. To know that a stream is 4 feet deep on the average is of little help to those who drown in the places where it is 10 feet deep. The recommendations of the committee offer a program to bridge that stream by reducing the risks of needless suffering and death, and of costs and dependency, that now overwhelm millions of individual families and sap the resources of the Nation.

I recommend the report of the Interdepartmental Committee for careful study by the Congress. The essence of the program recommended by the committee is Federal-State cooperation. Federal legislation necessarily precedes, for it indicates the assistance which may be made available to the States in a cooperative program for the Nation's

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

NAVAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House while that committee is considering H. R. 2880.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Do I understand the gentleman is going to begin hearings on the naval construction bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; on Wednesday next.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When is it the gentle-man's purpose to bring that bill to the House?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am hoping that we may be able to finish the work by at least this day one week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And will that give ample opportunity for everyone to be heard by the committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am sure that ample opportunity will be accorded everyone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after the completion of the special orders on tomorrow, Tuesday, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made on Saturday, January 21, over the network of the National Broadcasting Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. HILL. These are my own remarks.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It was the gentleman's own remarks that were objected to on Friday by one of the Members on your side also.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL-FISCAL YEAR 1939

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2868, with Mr. Doxey in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Friday last, there was pending a point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, at the time the Committee rose on Friday there was pending before the Chair a point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], that the item for the erection of the Census Building was subject to a point of order because it exceeded the authorization.

The act of May 25, 1926, section 5, alluded to by the gentleman, placed a limitation of $50,000,000 on certain types of buildings that might be erected in the District of Columbia, including the acquisition of land. That act was amended by the act of January 13, 1928, Forty-fifth Statutes at Large. page 52, increasing the authorization by $25,000,000. That amount was all for land. It was further amended by the act of March 31, 1930, Forty-sixth Statutes, page 136, by increasing prior authorizations an additional $115,000,000, making a total authorization of $190,000,000, $40,000,000 being for land and $150,000,000 for buildings.

Chargeable to these authorizations, buildings have been authorized in the amount of $142,773,092,08, and appropriations of $28,680,000 have been made under the authorizations for land acquisitions. This leaves a balance to the credit of the authorization for buildings of $7,226,908, and under the land authorization of $40,000,000, a difference to the credit of the authorization of $11,320,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have personally verified these figures from the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department. Therefore there is authorization for the item set out in the deficiency bill of $3,300,000 for the Census Building.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire to be heard?

Mr. TABER. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The act of January 13, 1928, was limited entirely to the acquisition of land. The total authorization which is available in both brackets-that is, for buildings and sites-is $165,000,000. When you consider that authorization, of course, you have to omit from the additions those purchases which were made prior to the original act. The total authorizations for the purpose of constructing these buildings is $165,000,000.

Turning to the figures that I have obtained from the Procurement Division, the expenditures for those purposes and the appropriations, with the limits of cost fixed, run a total of $175,341,358.22. With that picture I still submit that the authorizations heretofore made have already been exceeded and that this appropriation is not authorized by the statutes that have been referred to, or by any other, so far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York concluded his statement?

Mr. TABER. I have, insofar as that primary statement is concerned. It seems to me it is up to the person proposing to sustain a proposed law against which a point of order has been made to submit the details indicating what their position is, so that we may go into that question just as far as we can verify the whole situation.

I have before me and am prepared to cite the different acts making appropriations, as far as I am relying on them. I have before me the Budget estimates out of which certain allotments were made. I think the whole matter can be very easily straightened out if it were presented in that way. It would appear clearly that the authorization for the construction of this building has already been exceeded.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to reply to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Merely to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have just cited to the Chair and to Committee the fact that we have not only examined the statutes, but I have a statement over the signature of the Director of the Procurement Division which shows the facts just as I indicated them, that there has been a total authorization of $150,000,000 for buildings alone and a total authorization of $40,000,000 for land purchases. I have investigated the acts, the clerk of the committee has investigated them, and I have a statement as to the accuracy of the facts over the signature of the Director of the Procurement Division. I think that disproves his case.

So, Mr. Chairman, the burden is upon the gentleman from New York to show that his facts in support of his point of order are accurate and not upon me to disprove them.

Under the ordinary rules of procedure the burden of proof to sustain a point of order is upon the party by whom it is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, unless the gentleman from New York desires to reply to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I repeat, it has always been the rule in considering points of order that the burden is entirely upon the party who seeks to bring his legislation within the authorization—to make his case.

I have before me, which I call to the attention of the Chair, a list of buildings and costs, and I have my adding-machine lists showing what the various items total, if the Chair would like to have it. I can go down the line and cover each item if the Chair requires that I cover it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not requiring anything. The Chair is merely affording an opportunity to have all the facts presented.

Mr. TABER. But, Mr. Chairman, I submit the burden is upon the party seeking to sustain the authorization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not require it, but the gentleman may proceed, if he so desires.

Mr. TABER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the following buildings that have been constructed, the date of that authorization, and the amount of their cost:

Every one of these expenditures was chargeable to the $165,000,000 authorization. The expenditures for the purchase of land were for land acquired before the authorization for the purchase of land was increased, or before the $25,-000,000 was set up for that purpose. The total of all these items I have enumerated is $176,000,000, or $11,000,000 more than the authorization for building construction.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman has read a number of items that come under the head of Public Works Administration construction. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read a paragraph from the letter I have from the Director of the Procurement Division.

In the first place, may I say, these items are not properly chargeable to this authorization. The Director of Procurement writes:

The foregoing does not take into account expenditures aggregating $27,272,933,72, itemized on the third page of exhibit 2, for buildings and other improvements constructed in the District of Columbia under allotments by the Public Works Administration. These allotments were pursuant to Title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act (48 Stat. 201), as extended by section 12 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 119), and section 201 of the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 357). Under section 202 of the National Industrial Recovery Act the Administrator was directed to prepare the program of Public Works, which included: "(a) Construction, repair, and improvement of * * * public buildings * * *; and under section 203 (a) the President was authorized and empowered, through the Administrator or through such other agencies as he might designate, to construct any public-works project included in that program, and the last sentence of the section made its provisions expressly applicable to public works in the District of Columbia. This legislation contained no reference to the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926, supra, and did not otherwise limit the amount expendable under the program for projects in the District of Columbia. It has not been considered that expenditures under this program are chargeable to the total amount authorized for appropriation for projects in the District of Columbia under the Public Buildings Act, and the amendatory legislation relative thereto.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that particular subject.

These allotments were made out of funds appropriated to the President and were allotted for the purpose of constructing certain authorized projects. I cannot see why this operation does not operate as a satisfaction of the authorization. If it is going to be held that every time an appropriation bill is brought in here it must specify the statutory basis for its authority, we are going to be in very serious trouble because not 1 out of 20 items gives any such citation. There is not any question but that statutory authority existed and the appropriation was made. The authority was delegated to the President to allot it and he alloted money for the construction of these authorized projects. The authorization was satisfied as a result of those allotments.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. Was not a part of the original expenditure for the erection of the Department of Commerce Building for the purpose of housing the Bureau of the Census, and was not the building enlarged on that account; therefore, has not that part of the appropriation which might have been applied to the Bureau of the Census already been used in preparing suitable quarters for the Bureau in the present Department of Commerce Building?

Mr. TABER. I think that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

When this point of order was raised on Friday last, the Chair was in some doubt as to whether the appropriation in the pending paragraph was authorized under existing law. The citation to the act of May 25, 1926, contained in the paragraph, seemed to place a limitation upon the amount of money that could be appropriated for the construction of buildings within the District of Columbia. Since last Friday the Chair has had an opportunity of looking into the laws authorizing construction within the District of Columbia. The Chair has found that the act of May 25, 1926, has been amended on two specific occasions-first by the act of January 13, 1928 (45 Stat. 52), and, second, by the act of March 31, 1930 (46 Stat. 136). These amendatory acts have increased the authorization for the District of Columbia to $150,000,000 for the construction of buildings and $40,000,-000 for the acquisition of lands for such buildings.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] has submitted for the inspection of the Chair a letter addressed to him over the signature of the Director of Procurement of the Treasury Department. The Chair finds in that com-munication—and of course the Chair must rely upon the statement of an officer of the Government over his signature-that of the $150,000,000 authorized by construction in the District of Columbia $142,773,092.08 has already been authorized, thus leaving of the original authorization a sum of $7,226,908 for future appropriations. Of the $40,000,000 authorized for the acquisition of land there remains unallocated and unappropriated the sum of $11,320,000. It is manifest, therefore, that under the acts heretofore referred to by the Chair there is sufficient authorization within the limit of cost set in those acts for an appropriation of $3,500,-000 for the construction of a Census Building. The Chair desires also to point out that the Director of Procurement in his letter to Mr. Woodrum specifically states that the erection of the new Census Building is within the area defined in the authorization acts.

The question has also been raised as to whether the construction of public buildings in the District of Columbia under allotments by the Public Works Administration should be chargeable against a limitation of $150,000,000 set by the Public Buildings Act of 1926, as amended. The Chair has examined carefully title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, section 12 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, and section 201 of the Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937. These acts contained no reference to the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926, as amended, and did not otherwise limit the amount expendable for projects in the District of Columbia as authorized by the Public Buildings Act. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that the moneys used under the Public Works Administration for the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia should not be chargeable to the total amount authorized for projects in the District of Columbia under the Public Buildings Act, as amended. The Chair is fortified in this opinion by the fact that the Director of Procurement of the Treasury Department has placed a like construction upon this proposition,

For these reasons the Chair is of the opinion that the appropriation herein provided is within the authorization set by Congress and, therefore, conforms with the rules of the House. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of page 3 of the bill, line 3, to an item making appropriation for the New England hurricane damage and that it may be in order to make a point of order against this unauthorized expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dirksen: Page 6, line 6, strike out from line 6 to line 16, inclusive.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the point of this amendment is to strike out the entire section of the bill which provides $3,500,000 for the acquisition of land and the erection of the new building for the Census Bureau in the Department of Commerce.

On Thursday last I acquainted the House with the amount of space being rented by the Federal Government both in and outside the District of Columbia and also gave some totals as to the number of buildings that have been erected, to indicate the extent to which governmental functions have increased. I recognize the fact that there are some functions of the Government that cannot be moved out of the Nation's Capital. Certainly, no one would pretend that you could take the Department of State, the Department of Labor, or the Department of the Interior and move them to other sections of the country, because their functions must be coordinated with other functions that are being carried on here. Conversely, however, there are some functions that can be moved from the District of Columbia. It occurs to me that the taking of the census and the tabulating of the results is one of such functions.

This can very well be done at this time without prejudicing the work of the Census Bureau or any acquisitions that have been made under the proposal in this bill. If you will examine page 21 of the hearings you will find that Admiral Peoples testified that thus far no land has been acquired for this purpose. Secondly, if you will examine the hearings on page 24 you will find that 200,000 square feet of space is now available with which to carry on the preliminary work. Since those who are conducting this work have testified before the committee that it is a progressive build-up of personnel, I think it is a fair inference from the hearings that space is now available for the work that must be done for awhile, at least. Consequently we can give some attention to the proposal to move this whole function to some other section of the country by deferring action on a new building at this time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield briefly.
Mr. COLMER. As I understand, the purpose of the gentleman's amendment, as stated, is to cut out this entire section of the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COLMER. I notice on reading the amendment that is cuts out lines 6 to 11. I thought I might just call the attention of the gentleman to that fact.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; the amendment covers from line 6 to line 16.

Mr. COLMER. I believe if the gentleman will observe his amendment he will find it covers to line 11.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that if that mistake appears in the amendment the amendment may be changed to read "line 16" instead of "line 11."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say that the amendment covers lines 6 to 16.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thought it was line 16, and I think it was properly phrased in the first instance.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman taking the position that the country has already been overtaxed to construct monumental buildings here in the District of Columbia, and that this is an opportune time to indicate dissatisfaction with a continuation of that policy?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In part I take that position. I take this position predicated on two premises. In the first place, I do not believe there is an immediate necessity for erecting this building. Secondly, if it must be built-and those in possession of expert opinion and authority and who have the figures insist that it must be built—let us build it somewhere else and decentralize this function and have it carried on away from the District of Columbia.

Further in the testimony you will find that while they state it is not economically feasible to place these functions anywhere but in Washington, D. C., yet you cannot read the record of the hearings without coming to the conclusion, from the statements of those who testified from the Department of Commerce itself, that this function may very well be moved to some other section of the country. When the time comes to erect such a building, let us place it somewhere else than Washington, D. C., and start progressively on curing the congestion and the traffic hazards that have grown up as a result of implementing the Federal personnel here until today it amounts to approximately 120,000 persons.

The center of population is today located somewhere near the Illinois-Indiana line, some seven or eight hundred miles from here. We could very well send this function out there, because it is principally a case of providing 2 weeks' work for enumerators and then going into a building with a battery of tabulating machines and tabulating the result.

On the basis of what appears in the hearings we might very well strike out this provision at this time, because it is not immediately necessary. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we should stop appropriating large sums of money for the purpose of erecting great buildings in the District of Columbia; buildings which are permanent in character and which we will have immediate agitation to fill. The requirements of this Bureau, according to the story of its own representatives, are taken care of until the 1st of next January. This means they now have space in the Department of Commerce Building to take care of 2,500 of their employees, as appears on page 17 of the hearings, and they need additional space only for a period of approximately 20 months, as appears directly on the same page of the hearings. Why should we construct a building calculated to house 7,500 employees to satisfy a demand for 20 months' use in 10 years? When that great Department of Commerce Building was erected it was understood it would house the census activities and would take care of that situation. With what temporary space we can obtain both here in Washington and elsewhere there is plenty of space available to take care of this situation. We have no business going ahead at this time with terrific expenditures in Washington.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman envision a day in the not distant future when a great many of these useless buildings or commissions will be demobilized?

Mr. TABER. It is the only salvation for America. [Applause.1

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the hearings before the committee showed that the Government is now renting in the District of Columbia 120 different buildings to house the present activities of the Government, and whatever may be said about useless bureaus and the multiplying of Government agencies and what not, I recall that one of my first committee assignments when I came to Congress 16 years ago was to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and at that time the Government was paying an annual rental bill of more than $25,000,000 in the District of Columbia and outside of the District of Columbia. The Government has never, under any administration, pursued the policy that an ordinarily conservative and prudent businessman would pursue of trying to house his own activities with a view to economizing in space and coordinating such activities. This the Government has never done. There may be more bureaus now-I do not deny this—probably we all entertain the hope that many of them may be liquidated sometime or other, but if our fondest hopes were realized in that direction, we badly need space of this type in the District of Columbia.

This is not to be a monumental building, I may say to my good friend from Georgia. This is to be a warehouse-utilitarian type of building, costing $9 a square foot and built for use and service.

It is perfectly ridiculous to talk about conducting this census or tabulating it at any other place than in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not just now, as I only have 5 minutes.

With the advent of social security and railroad retirement. there will be greater need for record space than ever before, and while the census field work is done out in the country at large, the tabulation and the records from which compiled must be done in the District of Columbia at the Nation's Capital.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; just briefly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no emergency about the construction of this building, is there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We think there is an emergency.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman really feel that it would be better to spend this $3,500,000 by adding it to the amount that the House passed the other evening here, namely, $725,000,000, which I voted to increase to $875,000,000, to take care of the poor and the unemployed people of this country, rather than to use this sum for the construction of a building for which there is no immediate necessity?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In the first place, there is immediate necessity for it; and in the second place, the gentleman from Virginia thinks we made ample provision for the poor and the needy people, if you can get the money to such people; but aside from that, if you do not construct this building at a cost of $3,500,000, we shall have to have someone else construct the building and pay them not less than $400,000 a year for it. We are paying 95 cents a square foot for space in rented buildings in the District of Columbia right now.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not just now, if the gentleman will permit me.

The evidence shows that this building will liquidate itself on the basis of rent in 10 years, and it is badly needed for governmental activities.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman realize that these public buildings we put up all cost more to operate and take care of than the rent we have been paying?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; in addition to the cost of 95 cents a square foot, we pay for the heating and the janitor service. The added expense runs the cost to around $1.50 a square foot for renting space in the District of Columbia. Any ordinarily prudent businessman would construct his own office space rather than do this.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And the building would also be counted as an asset and its availability to extinguish the public debt could be claimed, could it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It would be an asset, undoubtedly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dirksen) there were—ayes 99, noes 107.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. DIRKSEN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reportedayes 124, noes 117.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended,

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Doxey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2858, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1939, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with two amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Dirksen amendment striking out the provision for the construction of a building for the Bureau of the Census

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon the other amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the other amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dirksen: Page 6, line 6, strike out lines 6 to 16, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 106, noes 136. Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 192, not voting 70, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSOLIDATING AND CODIFYING INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is such an important matter that it is proper for the chairman of the committee or some Member on the majority side to offer the House a suitable explanation of the reason for the passage of this act at this time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration, H. R. 2762, consolidates and codifies the internalrevenue laws of the United States, and would enact into absolute law instead of prima facie evidence of law all of the internal-revenue laws that are now in force.

This bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Ways and Means. Its preparation is the work of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, with which work the House is familiar, in cooperation with the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice. The staff has been working on this since about 1930, in cooperation with the officials of the Treasury Department and of the Department of Justice.

There is no objection to it. In fact, its passage is commended by the Department of Justice. I have a letter, contained in the report, from the Department of Justice recommending the enactment of this code into law. It does not change existing law in any particular. It brings into consolidated form, into one compact volume, about 150 separate acts of Congress, beginning with the Revised Statutes, enacted in 1874. There are so many laws contained in so many volumes of the Statutes at Large that it is very confusing and it is difficult even for lawyers to determine what the law actually is, and the ordinary taxpayer cannot do it at all.

This bill makes no change whatever in existing law, but consolidates and codifies the existing law, and brings it all into one volume so that it is immediately and conveniently available.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood the chairman to say this was prepared in cooperation with the Department. Printed in the volume as it first came to the Ways and Means Committee was transmitted a letter from the Department of Justice, but there was no reference to the Treasury Department as cooperating and approving this codification, as far as any written evidence is concerned. I understood at the time that the chairman of the committee had had verbal cooperation and approval of the Treasury Department, but I think it would be well for the chairman to make a statement in connection with that matter.

Another thing I would like to bring out is that when the Congress adopts this resolution and it becomes law, then there is no reference to past laws, but it is the law to date in connection with internal-revenue operations of the Government is it not?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It would have the force of statutory law. It would not be prima facie evidence thereof but the law itself.

As far as the Treasury Department is concerned-Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, this joint committee of the House and Senate has been operating on taxation for years, and this committee has had this in mind for several years. That is true, is it not?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And they have been working on it not for the purpose of changing any law whatever-

Mr. DOUGHTON. No.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But to correlate the laws and bring them together in a compact form so that those who use this portion of the law-and there are millions of people in the country who do use it-may have these laws properly indexed and condensed into one volume.

I should like to ask the gentleman this question: It has been the purpose of this committee to honestly correlate these laws without any intention of making any change in the law whatsoever?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the information which the gentleman has from these experts, and that has been corroborated by the Department of Justice, is that there has been no change in the law whatever. All it does is bring them together. It differs from some codifications. codifications made by the Congress and other legislative bodies implies a complete study of all laws, in an effort to take out the deadwood and inconsistencies, and resolve the inconsistencies into some form, and thereby enact a new law. In this case I understand this commission has religiously stayed away from any attempt to make any change whatso-ever, but have stuck absolutely to the law. Take laws upon which the statute of limitations has run, or laws that in their own language indicate that they are now of no standing. Some of the Members on this side, particularly the new Members, are especially interested in knowing whether or not should they vote for this they will be voting for any change of law. I think the gentleman has stated emphatically that there is no change of any kind in the law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I can assure the House of that fact. Moreover, in order to safeguard and assure the correctness of this draft, and to safeguard against any mistakes, the Treasury Department has checked and rechecked through about 25 or 30 attorneys in that Department the work of the staff in order that this may be as accurate as it is humanly possible to make it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield. Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand this is the embodiment of all existing tax laws.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In what manner has the committee eliminated the deadwood? Does not this bill provide for the repeal of some of this deadwood? The gentleman from Ohio stated that experts in the Department of the Treasury have gotten together and eliminated a lot of deadwood and laws that the statute of limitations has run against. To my knowledge the statute of limitations never runs against an act of Congress, and I wonder whether by this act the committee have recommended to Congress that certain acts be repealed? And I want to suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that I am a little concerned about what check has been made by the congressional committee to see that this is an embodiment of all existing tax laws.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman will permit, the members of the committee, of course, could not make the check with the thoroughness that the staff could make it; but the committee has agreed that it is willing to be governed by and responsible for the work of the staff of the joint committee. A similar code was completed during the last session of Congress. In order, however, that there might be no risk or doubt, we agreed to let it go over and let the Treasury Department check against the work of the staff. We have done everything possible to safeguard the integrity of the tax laws.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I have been the ranking minority member of the committee which presumably has jurisdiction over the revision of the laws and the codification of the laws. This committee presumably has a staff to do just this thing. We have found that it is of much greater help to the courts and to attorneys practicing before those courts to authoribe a House or a Senate document with changes in existing laws in the codifications set up in block-letter type and in italics. This is the first time I have ever had my attention called to the reenactment of all existing tax laws.

I do not think we should be in too much of a hurry about this. This is one of the most important subjects with which businessmen, bankers, and professional men, have to deal. I think we should proceed very cautiously. Although I am usually willing to take the word of the gentleman from North Carolina, because I know that he is very conscientious about this-and the same applies to other members of the Ways and Means Committee-I do not think this bill should be passed under unanimous consent. Apparently copies of this bill are not available, at least we did not know that the bill was going to be called up today. I think the Members should have an opportunity at least to look this over, and in the quiet and privacy of their offices to make sure that no provisions of law in which they might be peculiarly interested are omitted from the codification. I am inclined, therefore, to object to the request, not because I do not have confidence in the committee to do this but because I think that the bill is of the utmost importance to the Nation and should not be passed under a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My use of the words "statute of limitations" was rather unfortunate. I meant by that the expiration of statutes which by their own language had a limited time of application. I meant it only by way of

As I understand it, there has been no change of any kind in any law at all. If a law was found in connection with tax matters which law in its own language indicated that it terminated at a certain date, then that law has been repealed, it has not been brought into this codification.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that there is a possibility that the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice in their zeal to make a workable law have perhaps eliminated from this codification certain socalled unworkable provisions which have been a constant embarrassment to the Justice Department and the Treasury Department. I want to satisfy this House, and I think the gentleman from North Carolina wants to satisfy this House, that this is not done under the classification of "dead wood."

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is not here involved any question of the zeal of the Treasury Department or the Department of Justice. The lead has been taken by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. The Treasury Department and the Department of Justice have at the instance and request of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation cooperated with this committee. They have not taken the lead, they have not pushed it, they are not insisting on it now, they have not urged it upon us.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to make my position clear. I am not against the bill, because I do not know what is in it. I think the attitude of the majority of the Members of Congress is that they do not know whether they are for it or against it because they do not know what is in it. Here we are dealing with a very basic law upon which this Government operates and under which it collects from $6,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 of revenue. I submit such a bill should not pass by unanimous consent.

I do not think I can conscientiously let this bill go through by unanimous consent without giving it more consideration, and for this reason, Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will withhold this request for a minute, because one of our Members on this side did not have the opportunity to extend his own remarks and until his request is granted I must object to other Members getting similar permission.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman submit his request

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton], as published in Colliers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to understand the request. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] ask unanimous consent that the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] be extended to include an article contained in a magazine?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include a statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton], as published in

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he has received permission of the copyright owner to insert these remarks?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have not received anybody's permission.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It is a copyrighted article.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I will take a chance that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] will not object.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, then I object to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HORBS !.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the regular orders in order for that day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Miller] may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the special orders for today I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE GOLD RESERVE ACT

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, before I begin my subject I should like to make a few remarks with reference to the message I heard a while ago that came from the White House. I refer not so much to the message but to the specter behind the message. I see the shadow standing behind us guiding the destinies of our people. This appeal to people who lack the necessities of life and those who lack medical care is a bid for public sympathy. What for? To destroy our business structure which has made the country great and prosperous.

It is an appeal to force this Congress, through the power to public sympathy, to consent to the destruction of our business structure. I refer particularly to the medical profession itself. I have practiced medicine for a long time and 60 percent of my work and the work of other medical men has been done for nothing. I want the people to know that, and I want the people also to know that the medical profession is one that devotes its entire career to the alleviation of human suffering and to helping people. For such work they have not asked any Federal aid.

The Federal Government, in order to gain strength itself by such public appeals to the people, to the masses, makes the statement it is going to give the people something for nothing. It uses that as a club for power to destroy the medical profession, as it has done other businesses, such as the public utilities and many other business structures in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I want the Members of this Congress to know that no one occupies a more enviable position than the President himself. He cannot lose, because he appeals to the masses in order to get their support. He asks their support ogive him power, and after he gets their support, if anything goes wrong, he is not to blame; he washes his hands of the whole thing, because it was the will of the masses or a mandate from the people. If, however, he is successful, he receives all the credit, and again he wins. So it is heads I win, tails you lose. And Congress sits here and takes it all while he wins. You ought to have a goat up there to look at every day. That is symbolical of your position. Sometimes it is too much for me.

This is the twelfth legislative day, and Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of all Members in this House.

As a new man in the greatest legislative body in the world, and I may say the most prolific legislative body in the world, I, of course, need advice.

My work has been confined to making a living in business. I have been captain and owner of ocean-going ships, doctor of medicine and a surgeon, pilot of aircraft, and a businessman. I am not familiar with legislation as such, but I am familiar with constitutional law, and the rights of the people. Mr. Speaker, I realize, as one of the people, that if this body remove the people's rights one by one by law, when the last is removed, the people become slaves to legal despotism, and a legal despotism deprives the people of their rights just as successfully as the popular despotisms of today. You get a despotism by legislating yourself out of your rights, and that is what we are doing in this body.

Mr. Speaker, in a republican form of government such as ours, the Government should confine itself within the powers delegated to it by the people, as set forth in the Constitution of the United States. Such powers are purely administrative, regulatory, and protective.

All rights to conduct business are reserved by the people to themselves, and the people are those engaged in industry, commerce, business, labor, agriculture, and all earning enterprises. To expect that is only just and right, for this group has paid the total Government and our Nation's expenditures from its earliest beginning to date.

In other words, the Government does not earn money. It spends the money earned by the people who support it. The people have uncomplainingly fought many wars and attempted invasions, but are in despair when they must protect themselves against invasion by the government of their own creation. It is hard enough to fight attempted destruction from without, but hope is lost when the attack is launched from within, and by the very government in which the people place their hope and trust.

Being interested in recovery, I am not different from others, although my opinions may differ in the procedure for its return.

I take the view that currency is the blood which circulates in the arteries of business, and gold is the heart. The flow of currency when interrupted may cause temporary illness to business, from which it may recover, but the removal of gold-secured currency strikes a blow at the very heart of the business structure from which it will not recover until standardized gold currency is restored.

The majority of the Seventy-third Congress that voted for the Gold Reserve Act drove a dagrer in the heart of business, and the Seventy-sixth Congress should remove it so as to aid recovery in our business structure.

I shall now quote verbatim four sections of the Gold Reserve Act, in which I will attempt to show that the act is unconstitutional; that it is destructive to industry, commerce, business, labor, agriculture, and all earning groups; and that it destroys public confidence in the Government and undermines the fundamental principles in which we believe.

I quote House Resolution 1491, title 1, section 2 (b):

During time of war, or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, the President may, through any agency that he may designate, or otherwise, investigate, regulate, or prohibit, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of licenses or otherwise, any transactions in foreign exchange, transfers of credit between or payments by banking institutions as defined by the President, and export, hoarding, melting, or earmarking of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency, by any person within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof; and the President may require any person engaged in any transaction referred to in this subdivision to furnish, under oath, complete information relative thereto, including the production of any books of account, contracts, letters, or other papers in connection therewith in the custody or control of such person, either before or after such transaction is completed. Whoever willfully violates any of the provisions of this subdivision or of any license, order, rule, or regulation issued thereunder shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or, if a natural person, may be imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both; and any officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation may be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both. As used in this subdivision, the term "person" means an individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has not the effect of the legislation the gentleman has just cited been to effectually demonetize gold? Has not gold been as effectually demonetized as silver in our monetary system?

Mr. THORKELSON. I shall come to that point shortly. That is all explained in the statement I shall make.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That is a fact, is it not? Mr. THORKELSON. Yes; that is absolutely a fact.

This paragraph, which is part of the Gold Reserve Act, was passed by the majority of the Seventy-third Congress and bestows nearly absolute power on the President over public liberties. It opens the gate to persecution; it lifts the curtain of inquisition, and, as I view the dim past, I shudder.

The words "during time of war" are used as a smoke screen for a favorable reception of the real intent of the act, which is for the President to have power "to declare an emergency." We have had an emergency for 6 years for the money changers in the temple, and this noble gentry directly or indirectly control over thirteen and a half billions of gold and gold certificates.

Our great mass of workers have labored for the money changers too long. I am now tired of it, and I believe it is time for Congress to declare an emergency for our own people, so that they may benefit in being secured by the wealth they have earned and which rightfully belongs to them.

Six years of emergency without a war is open to suspicion, and my suspicion is that something is wrong.

In this act the President may declare an emergency when he pleases. After such declaration he may investigate, prosecute, and persecute anyone to his heart's content, and end up by fining him $10,000 and sentencing him to 10 years in prison. For what? For having in his possession gold or silver, a property which belongs to the people by right and is so declared in the Constitution of the United States. Gold is property no different from any other property, and as such it belongs to the people, the creators of such wealth.

This absolute power is not left entirely to the President, because the Secretary of the Treasury, if you please, becomes an inquisitor also. I quote section 3 (n):

Whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury such action is necessary to protect the currency system of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may require any or all individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations to pay and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States any or all gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates owned by such individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations. Upon receipt of such gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay therefor an equivalent amount of any other form of coin or currency coined or issued under the laws of the United States.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mas-

Mr. GIFFORD. May I inject there the statement that under the New Deal and the progressiveness of the dollar, formerly if you had a bottle of whisky worth $5 you were arrested for carrying the whisky but you would not be arrested for carrying gold, whereas today you are arrested if you carry gold but you can carry the whisky. This is the new method of property confiscation.

Mr. THORKELSON. The gentleman is correct.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay all costs of the transportation of such gold bullion, gold certificates, coin, or currency, including the cost of insurance, protection, and such other incidental costs as may be reasonably necessary.

This simply means that for gold and valuable currency they hand you phoney money, but they pay transportation and they insure it so they will not lose it. They are liberal

Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation failing to comply with any requirement of the Secretary of the Treasury made under this subsection shall be subject to a penalty equal to twice the value of the gold or gold certificates in respect of which such failure occurred, and such penalty may be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury by suit or otherwise.

I quote again:

Whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury action is necessary to protect the currency system.

It is astonishing that such rot, deception, and senseless words were allowed to be written into this act, and for no other reason than to betray our people. The sole purpose is for our people to trade good money for inflated or valueless currency; a most damnable fraud to be perpetrated on an unsuspecting and trusting Nation. May God open their eyes before it is too late.

In this paragraph Congress abdicated and delegated congressional power and prerogatives to the royal family. The majority of the Seventy-third Congress crowned a king, and the Supreme Court of the United States blessed the ceremony. I want Congress to understand what has been done to the great mass of American people-our people.

No doubt other emergency legislation will come up in this Congress, and it is my desire to warn my colleagues that the first duty of Congress is to determine absolutely and conclusively that all measures presented come well within the legislative power delegated to Congress by the people in the Constitution and are not dictated by personal opinions of Members of Congress or of any employee of the Government. I want you to bear that in mind. That is something this Congress has not adhered to in the history of any session. It is no use for us to blame it on anyone and say the President is guilty or someone else is guilty. Congress is responsible to the people, because all legislative power is vested in Congress. We must know that legislation is constitutional before it is passed up to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court should pass only on the mistakes of Congress, and we must know ourselves that legislation comes well within the Constitution of the United States.

Section 4 states:

Section 4 states:

In order to provide for the safer and more effective operation of the national banking system and the Federal Reserve System, to preserve for the people the full benefits of the currency provided for by the Congress through the national banking system and the Federal Reserve System, and to relieve interstate commerce of the burdens and obstructions resulting from the receipt on an unsound or unsafe basis of deposits subject to withdrawal by check, during such emergency period as the President of the United States by proclamation may prescribe, no member bank of the Federal Reserve System shall transact any banking business except to such extent and subject to such regulations, limitations, and restrictions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President. Any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, or any director, officer, or employee thereof, violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, may, in addition to such fine, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding 10 years. Each day that any such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense. separate offense.

It is my desire to call the attention of my colleagues to the words in the section, "provided for by Congress," which in a subtle manner intimate that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury accepted the administration of this power because Congress requested them to do so; and Congress is betrayed by its master, or shall I say masters?

Public Resolution No. 10-House Joint Resolution No. 192-

Whereas the holding of or dealing in gold affect the public interest, and are therefore subject to proper regulation and restriction;

Whereas the existing emergency has disclosed that provisions of obligations which purport to give the obligee a right to require payment in gold or a particular kind of coin or currency of the United States, or in an amount of money of the United States measured thereby, obstruct the power of the Congress to regulate the value of the money of the United States, and are inconsistent with the declared policy of the Congress to require a call times. with the declared policy of the Congress to maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar, coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts.

The premise set forth in this first paragraph that-is correct, but "restriction" is the stranglehold of the despot. To say that the right to receive payment in gold, gold coin, or gold secured currency would obstruct the power of Congress to regulate the value of money is an unmitigated falsehood, because the contrary is true. Gold is the only metal that lends itself to regulation, because it can be assayed, it can be weighed, and it has a standard international value.

* * * the holding of or dealing in gold affect the public interest, and therefore subject to proper regulation * * *

To say that the use of gold money or gold-secured currency is "inconsistent with the declared policy of Congress to maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar" is to my mind a most extraordinary reasoning. For Congress to maintain that it can at all times control the purchasing power of every dollar is, to say the least, an unwarrantable assumption. No person or nation can control the purchasing power of money, for it is dependent upon constant fluctuation of prices, and for Congress to presume that it can regulate and control the equal purchasing power of every dollar in all the markets of the world makes Congress an international laughingstock. I now quote the conclusion of the resolution:

Resolved, etc., That (a) every provision contained in or made with respect to any obligation which purports to give the obligee a right to require payment in gold or a particular kind of coin or currency, or in an amount in money of the United States measured thereby, is declared to be against public policy; and no such provision shall be contained in or made with respect to any obligation hereafter incurred. Every obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred, whether or not any such provision is contained therein or made with respect thereto, shall be discharged upon payment, dollar for dollar, in any coin or currency which at the time of payment is legal tender for public or private debts. Any such provision contained in any law authorizing obligations to be issued by or under authority of the United States is hereby repealed, but the repeal of any such provision shall not invalidate any other provision or authority contained in such law. or authority contained in such law.

The assumption of the Senate and the House of Representatives that "obligations" which require "payment in gold" or "in money measured thereby" is against public policy, is open to the most severe criticism, and, in my opinion, places the Congress of the United States in a very embarrassing position with its own people. Congress will realize this when our workingmen and small-business people become aware of the fact that foreign governments and foreign investments are payable in gold, both as to interest and principal, while we, the people of the United States, who have worked and earned this wealth, are denied ownership or security by the property we have accumulated. I am surprised that the majority in the Seventy-third Congress was so lax in the protection of their own and their people's rights.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 additional

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton] has been granted permission to address the House for 20 minutes immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Montana. Has the gentlewoman from New Jersey any objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mrs. NORTON. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. The remarks of the gentleman have been extraordinarily interesting. I have placed remarks in the RECORD along the same line. May I ask the gentleman if he understands that, although any kind of money, of no matter what substance, that has the stamp of the Government on it shall be received as legal tender, some $8,000,000,-000 worth of gold certificates have actually been issued to the Federal Reserve? What are these gold certificates worth, in the gentleman's estimation? Why were these gold certificates given to the Federal Reserve, although the private individual is deprived of them?

Mr. THORKELSON. Gold certificates held by interests outside the Treasury and by the governors of the Federal Reserve banks amount to approximately $11,500,000,000. They are a lien against the gold and are used in international transactions. The money used in international transactions is based upon a dollar with a gold content of 15.521 grains, but we are not permitted to use such a dollar in the United States. Our dollar is not secured by gold or silver. The money held by the governors of the Federal Reserve banks and other interests is held by the money ring or by the money changers in the temple, that the President said he drove out.

Mr. GIFFORD. If and when that gold is released by the Treasury, is the Federal Reserve going to get it all?

Mr. THORKELSON. The gold reserve in the Treasury should balance the money in circulation, as was done in

In 1921 we had an inflation of nearly 36 percent, and a dollar at that time was worth 64 cents in purchasing power: and Governor Strong, of the Federal Reserve Bank, when he took charge, withdrew $100,000,000 per month until he had withdrawn $1,800,000,000 from circulation and the gold in circulation at that time was about $4,393,000,000 and the money in circulation balanced the gold in the Treasury and so established a balance between the gold in the Treasury and the money in circulation. After he did that, the dollar was worth 100 cents in gold and 100 cents in purchasing value or power. We had then, as we have always had, a stabilized and secured dollar, a sound dollar, based upon gold, and recognized by international standards as such.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Returning to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, is it not a fact that the gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve Board are simply a coverage for the lendings of the Federal Reserve banks of currency at interest, a coverage of 40 percent?

Mr. THORKELSON. The gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve banks, of course, are held by them as a lien against the gold. They own the gold that is in the Treasury of the United States, or that gold is owned by the international money ring and the people who live over in Europe and other places because those people hold the gold certificates, or they hold United States securities. We must bear in mind that every government outside of the United States holding United States securities—it does not matter what sort of securities they are—or even if such government acquire money we are using here today, such money when it goes outside the boundaries of the United States becomes a gold dollar, if you please, and its value is 15.521 grains of gold nine-tenths fine according to our valuation. It does not matter what kind of money it may be if it is in the hands of foreign governments, but we are denied that right, and that is what I object to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. THORKELSON. I would like to finish this statement, if I may.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the gentleman in accord with the recommendations made to the public today by the American Mining Congress with reference to our gold policy to be followed in the future as against what the gentleman is protesting against now?

Mr. THORKELSON. The American Mining Congress does not bring it out clearly. I am in accord with some of its viewpoints. In the first place, we see in the papers that the United States buys gold or that the Treasury Department buys so much gold, but we do not buy gold. Gold buys our securities and the reason gold buys our securities is because foreigners in buying our securities receive a gold-bearing interest on such securities and that interest is denied to the American people. So naturally investing in American bonds becomes a very valuable investment to people who live without the United States, but we are denied the right to share in such interest or profit from our investment. We get rubber money, watered money, and if any private corporation in the United States did the same thing that the Government has done to the American people today, the Gov-ernment itself would put them in the penitentiary for the rest of their lives. They are supercriminals, if you please.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then the gentleman disagrees with the American Mining Congress when it recommends a continuation of the purchase of this gold at $35 an ounce?

Mr. THORKELSON. Well, it does not matter, because when the gold was reduced from 25.8, or 40 percent, to 15.21 grains of gold, the money was cheapened in that proportion so that it became $35 per ounce.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that; but we are issuing tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds to someone in payment of this gold. Does the gentleman think we should continue that even if it is reduced to 15.21?

Mr. THORKELSON. No.

I venture to say that when the American people realize the true state of affairs, many of those who were responsible for the passage of the Gold Reserve Act and other unsound legislation, will not be returned to Congress.

The people should, and I believe they will, insist that Congress repeal this act, when they realize that wages, salaries, and all earnings will, until it is repealed, be paid in inflated currency; and that insurance and other investments are not secured by gold as they were before 1933, but are instead payable only in the same inflated currency.

"Congress has the right to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, and fix the standards of weights and measures." The power to coin money is not questioned. To regulate the value means exactly that and nothing else. Gold is an international standardized metal with a fixed value, and therefore is the security upon which all money and currency is based. The grain content in each piece of money regulates the value of each coin, and the number of grains regulates the value to each other and to that of foreign coin. Gold, of course, is used because it is permanent metal. It can be melted, refined, and weighed; and each grain represents a fixed value, which regulates the value of all money. When gold is removed as the standard security for money, nothing is left but inflated, valueless currency; and that is what we are using today.

Quoting from the Congressional Record of March 25, 1937, page 3524:

Our domestic dollars are neither based upon nor redeemable in gold; hence the value of such dollars has little, if any, relation to the value of the foreign dollar. * * * Today we are on neither a gold nor a silver standard. As stated, the dollar is a managed money unit. We now have a commodity dollar. The value of the dollar in terms of commodities and services changes from day to

This is the opinion of a great Democratic Senator, and it also sets forth the administration's policy. The administration is attempting to establish a dollar based, not upon gold for stability, but upon the ability of a committee to regulate and control prices of all commodities; and I might say here, the most impossible and unsound plan that anyone could conceive, and absolutely beyond the power of anyone to

In order that you may have a clearer understanding of such policy, I quote Congressional Record, March 25, 1937, page 3525:

The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed.

Let me be frank in saying that the United States seeks the kind of dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing and debt-paying power as the dollar value we hope to attain in the near future.

The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodi-

The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is an end from which the Government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear: We are interested in American commodity prices.

When we have restored the price level we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation in London last July. And I say it now once more.

This is the outline of the administration's monetary policy stated by the President himself, and it is to establish the purchasing power but not the value of currency. This was true in Germany, and no doubt some of you recollect seeing postage stamps for 50,000,000 marks.

I shall now quote from the argument by the Attorney General of the United States before the Supreme Court, when he assisted in giving the Nation's gold to the money changers in the temple and deprived our own people of the right to own and share in the property which was rightfully theirs, and as is set forth in the Constitution of the United States:

It is my belief that the word "regulate" as used in the Constitution has never been completely and carefully analyzed in all of its implications. * * And, moreover, the word "regulate" implies a continuing power, and is the same term that is used with reference to commerce and connotes the power of adjustment. It implies the power of melting the power of adjustment. plies the power of making the condition accord more fully with reality and with justice. (Congressional Record, March 25, 1937,

The Attorney General has certainly leaned backward in his interpretation of the word "regulate," and he evidently forgot that the word referred to money and not to the regulation of abstract value. He is also right when he says "'regulate' implies a continued power," but it is not as used in relation to commerce, and it is not in accord with justice. It is a question of the value of gold and the regulation of it. The reason the word "fix" is used in relation to weights and measures is because weights and measures cannot be melted, assayed, valued, or regulated at so much per grain, but are instead the standards of just what the Constitution implies-"weights and measures."

In justice to the Attorney General as to his uncertainty of the constitutionality of this act. I quote from his own words:

I do not assume to suggest what the future may develop with egard to this aspect of the constitutional question. I do not know. regard to this aspect of the constitutional question.

These things will follow in due course.

So, according to Attorney General Cummings himself, the constitutionality of the act hangs in the air, like many other experiments of the New Deal. The greatest power of all is the control of money, and it was recognized as such by Alexander Hamilton. In credit to him, it must be said that he was willing for the American people at least to own gold and to be secured by gold and gold securities. As a Republican, no one can fail to give him credit for this democratic principle. The New Deal managers have, however, outdone Alexander Hamilton by depriving the people of their right to own and be secured by gold, and have established imperialistic control over money instead of the Hamiltonian democratic common ownership thereof. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the remarks of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton], I may be permitted to address the House for 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE CASE OF HARRY BRIDGES

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present to the House the facts concerning charges that have been discussed in the press and elsewhere with regard to the action of the Secretary of Labor in the Bridges case. Because I have been frequently asked by many Members of the House and others for information as to the attitude of the Secretary of Labor, in justice to her and because I wish to satisfy myself and those Members who believe in fair play, I decided to ask the Secretary to supply me with the facts in the case so that we may be able to judge the case on its merits stripped of all emotional appeal. To that end I shall read to you my letter to the Secretary and her reply to me:

JANUARY 18, 1939.

The SECRETARY OF LABOR,

Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

Dear Miss Perkins: As a result of the recent charges made by the Dies committee with respect to the administration of the immigration laws, and particularly with reference to the case of Harry Bridges, many Members of the House have asked me, in my capacity as chairman of the Labor Committee, if there is any basis for these charges.

As you know, communism, fascism, and nazi-ism are extremely repugnant to me personally and to the political ideals for which I have stood in my public life. I am, therefore, deeply concerned that charges should be brought that the Department of which you are the head is lax in deporting aliens who carry on propaganda hostile to our democratic institutions.

Since I am regretfully aware that you have had no opportunity to present your own report of the official history of the Bridges case to Congress, I should appreciate a statement from you as to the facts in this case and the application of the law to them. Sincerely yours,

Mrs. MARY T. NORTON.

The reply of the Secretary I received this morning and reads as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, January 21, 1939.

Hon. MARY T. NORTON,

Chairman, Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
DEAR MRS. NORTON: I am grateful to you for your letter of January 18 drawing my attention to the comments of Congressman Dies' ary 18 drawing my attention to the comments of Congressman Dirs' committee on the Bridges case, as I have always welcomed any opportunity given me to give an account of my administration of the immigration laws or any other statutes, the administration of which has been given by Congress to the Secretary of Labor. I assure you that communism or any other system of political thought which has as its object the destruction of our historic liberties and the form of government of a constitutional democracy is as objectionable to me as it is to you.

I, of course, cannot agree to any charges that I have been guilty of neglect of duty in enforcing any statute of the United States. It must be remembered, however, that the Secretary of Labor has been given no roving commission by Congress to deport all aliens whose activities happen to be unpopular with many people. The function of the Department in enforcing the immigration statutes function of the Department in enforcing the immigration statutes is a quasi-judicial process of administrative law based on specific requirements placed in the law by Congress. It is of importance, therefore, that in carrying out this process the Department should proceed with absolute adherence to the Constitution and with punctilious regard to the rights of individuals and for those safeguards of procedure established by the courts under the due-process clause and embodied in the regulations.

According to the records of the Immigration and Naturalization Service Bridges was legally admitted to this country in 1920. It

Service, Bridges was legally admitted to this country in 1920. It was not until the longshoremen's strike in 1934 that any complaint was made as to his status in the United States. During the strike the Department received letters calling attention to the fact that Bridges was an alien and asking that he be deported.

The various immigration acts do not forbid an alien to organize workers, lead strikes, induce fellow stevedores not to unload ships, or engage in other trade-union activities. Nor can such actions be regarded as attempts to overthrow the Government. Consequently, none of these letters contained anything relevant to the immigration laws except an occasional one which alleged that Bridges was tion laws except an occasional one which alleged that Bridges was a Communist. These charges were carefully investigated at that time, and in 1935 the San Francisco office of the Service reported that there was no evidence to show that Bridges was connected with the Communist Party or with any other radical organization, and that an investigation by the criminal-prevention detail of the San Francisco police force had reach the same result.

It was not until the fall of 1937, when the Seattle office submitted some affidavits signed by persons who alleged that they had seen Bridges participating in Communist Party activities, that any concrete charges were filed in this Department. An investigation was then undertaken which resulted in more affidavits being filed and a warrant was issued and the case set down for hearing in San Francisco in accordance with the regulations of the Immigration

Francisco in accordance with the regulations of the Immigration Service, which provides the alien with an opportunity to be heard and to be represented by counsel before any deportation order is issued, in accordance with the standards of due process prescribed by the courts.

A few days before the hearing date the circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit, in reversing a deportation order against one Joseph Strecker, an acknowledged member of the Communist Party, held that membership in the Communist Party was not a ground for deportation. Since this was the only charge contained in the for deportation. Since this was the only charge contained in the Bridges warrant which had support in the affidavits, I was told by the Solicitor of this Department that unless this decision was reversed by the Supreme Court that the charges brought against Bridges, even if proved, had no legal significance whatsoever. The officials of the Department of Justice concurred in this view, and on advice of the Solicitor and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization I postponed pending hearings in all alleged alien Communist cases until the conflict of decisions in the circuit courts resulting from the Strecker opinion was cleared up by the Supreme resulting from the Strecker opinion was cleared up by the Supreme Court.

This action was in accord with the usual Government legal practice of avoiding unnecessary expense and multiple litigation in the lower courts when a test case is pending in the higher courts. The warrants in cases in this category have not been canceled and further action has been deferred only until the decision of the United States Supreme Court is handed down.

There is no specific reference in the immigration laws to Communists or the Communist Party. The Immigration Act of 1918, as amended by the act of 1920 (41 Stat. 1008, U. S. Code, title 8, sec. 137), upon which the warrant in the Bridges case was predicated provides for the deportation of aliens "who are members of, or affiliated with any organization * * that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States." In cases where Communist Party members have been deported, it has been the administrative practice of the Immigration Service to show the Communist Party was an organization thus described by introducing Communist literature indicating the political doctrines of the party. This was the procedure in the Strecker proceedings, which began in 1933, long before any complaints about Bridges had ever been received. The Solicitor has advised me that the documentary evidence offered on this point in the Strecker case was substantially as strong as the documentary evidence upon which the Government had relied in other cases for the past 15 years.

The Dies committee report has contended that the record in The Dies committee report has contended that the record in this case was defective in the matter of proof with respect to the nature of the Communist Party. It is not necessary to debate this point, however, since the Supreme Court has apparently taken another view. Under the jurisdictional rules of the Supreme Court, the Government in its petition for certiorari had to show that the Strecker decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit had created a genuine conflict of decisions among the circuit courts of appeal. The respondent, in opposing this petition, argued that the case was distinguishable from decisions in other circuits because of a significant difference in the evidence presented. Consequently, the Supreme Court's action in granting the writ of certiorari indicated that the Court was of the opinion that the decision in the fifth circuit represented a different construction of the law and that the Strecker sented a different construction of the law and that the Strecker case was not distinguishable from other Communist Party cases. This case will be argued next month when the Government will ask that the decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals be reversed. It is hoped the decision of the highest court will clarify the law so that the Labor Department can feel sure of its legal ground in dealing with cases under the 1918 act.

That the 1918 act as amended is susceptible of varying interpretations is borne out by a report submitted to the House of Representatives a few years ago by the Committee on Immigration when Congressman Dies was acting chairman. In this report it was stated that under the present immigration laws "alien Com-munists are not excludable or deportable as such." (See Report No. 153, House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to accompany H. R. 12044, 72d Cong. 1st sess., dated May 17, 1932.) Inasmuch as Congress took no action upon the bill reported by the committee at that time, the law today is the same as it was

The report of the Dies investigating committee has censured the Department for postponing the Bridges hearing until the Strecker case was decided on the ground that the latter case does not have case was decided on the ground that the latter case does not have any important bearing on the Bridges proceedings. As a matter of fact, the only difference between the two is that Strecker has admitted his membership in the Communist Party, whereas Bridges under oath has denied that he was ever a member of that party. Yet this report makes the contention that there were other grounds for deportation in the Bridges case, namely, "that he himself advocated the overthrow of the Government by force and violence and that he had likewise advocated sabotage." The report does not cite any evidence to support this; and as a matter of fact.

does not cite any evidence to support this; and, as a matter of fact,

is possible that the committee had in mind the same extracts from two or three affidavits which Congressman Dres drew to my attention in an open letter given to the press on August 30, 1938. These consisted of certain uncorroborated remarks attributed These quotations consisted of a derogatory statement with respect to battleships, contemptuous remarks with regard to the President, threatening and intemperate remarks with respect to members of rival union factions. All of them fell far short of amounting to advocacy of the overthrow of the United States Government by force and violence.

After this presentation of its version of the Bridges case, the Dies committee went on to say that it believed there were scores of Fascist, Nazi, and Communist aliens "who could be and should be deported if the Labor Department would proceed against them in accordance with the laws of the land." It makes the broad charge that "the laxity with which the Department of Labor deals with alien agitators would be unbelievable if we did not have before us the most convincing proof. * * * It is further believed that the failure of the Labor Department to carry out the laws with respect to deportation is a contributing factor to the widespread activities and propaganda carried on by un-American elements in the United States.

Only one other case is cited in support of this thesis. This involved an alien named Joseph Kolwaski, who was once deported to Russia because of his communistic activities and later returned to the United States. The charge is made "that he is deportable under the statute, but that the Labor Department has failed to deport him". It is a well-known fact that deportation can prever be the statute, but that the Labor Department has failed to deport him." It is a well-known fact that deportation can never be effectuated in any case unless the country of the alien's nationality issues him a passport. Thus far, both the Soviet and the Polish Governments have refused passports to this alien.

Not a single instance is cited of the committee having discovered that any Nazi or Fascist alien is remaining in this country in violation of the immigration laws, although the committee makes the claim that it had before it "the most convincing proof." In other words, the Department of Labor is condemned for serious failure to carry out the immigration laws with respect to aliens carrying on un-American propaganda on the strength of two cases, in one of which the Department had pressed to the fullest extent of its legal authority, and the other of which action had been merely postponed pending decision on a legal question upon which even the highest Federal courts and committees of Congress have differed.

I am as desirous as any Member of Congress to preserve our American institutions and to defend them from damage by aliens. I have not found anything in the Dies report, however, which convinces me that I should have ignored the most recent holding of the courts, overruled the legal advisers provided me by law, and not postponed a deportation hearing in the face of my knowledge that even if the evidence at the hearing should sustain the charges, deportation itself could not be effected until the conflict of decisions among the circuit courts had been ultimately resolved by the

Sincerely yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

The Secretary of Labor issued a warrant for the arrest of Strecker and a hearing was then held before an examining inspector. On the basis of the findings the Secretary ordered him deported. He appealed this to the courts. The Government won its case in the Federal district court and Strecker then appealed to the Fifth Circuit Court. This court then reversed the decision and upheld Strecker. The Government then appealed this decision to the Supreme Court. This case is expected to come up next month. The circuit court reversed the decision on the grounds that Strecker's admitted membership in the Communist Party was not grounds for deportation.

Strecker admitted being a Communist while Bridges denies membership in the Communist Party. Surely no one would or could believe that the Secretary of Labor has any sympathy with the Communist Party if they know the true facts in the Strecker case—that the basis for her attempted deportation of him was that he was a member of the Communist Party.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that I have said about all that I care to say, and also that I took the floor today merely through a sense of trying to get the true facts of a case about which there seems to be so much misinformation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield? Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentlewoman happen to know when Mr. Bridges came to this country?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not, except as the Secretary of Labor tells me in this letter. According to the records of the Immigration and Naturalization Service Mr. Bridges was regularly admitted to this country in 1920.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Has he been here ever since?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Has he made any attempt to become an American citizen?

Mrs. NORTON. That I do not know, but that question is not involved in the deportation charges. There is nothing in either the immigration or naturalization laws to compel a resident alien to become a citizen.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We have heard so many rumors about Mr. Bridges being a Communist and all that, and also reflection upon the fact that he had not become an American citizen, that I was wondering about the fact.

Mrs. NORTON. According to the letter from the Secretary it was not until the longshoremen's strike in 1934 that any complaint was made about his status in the United States. During that strike the Department received letters calling attention to the fact that Bridges is an alien, and asking that he be deported. Apparently for those 14 years there has been no question about whether or not he was an alien.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Outside of his activities in connection with strikes, and in connection with communism, what has been the man's habits in the United States as to being a good American citizen?

Mrs. NORTON. That I know nothing at all about. My only information is with regard to his status under the immigration laws.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mrs. O'DAY. My information from the Department of Labor is that he entered legally and that his papers were regular and in order.

Mrs. NORTON. I thank the lady from New York, and my understanding is that that is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not a fact that under the leadership of Bridges, by force, vessels entitled to sail from the westcoast ports and to enter those ports have been prevented from departing or entering?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not think that charge has ever been proved, has it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentlewoman does not know anything about the west-coast strike?

Mrs. NORTON. Excepting what I have read, just as the gentleman has read it in the press and in articles. I have the same kind of information about it as the gentleman has.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it the gentlewoman's opinion that vessels have not been prevented from departing and Mrs. NORTON. I have no direct knowledge on that subject whatsoever. Of course, I have read that the striking longshoremen did not load or unload any cargoes, but that has nothing to do with the immigration laws, which is the point at issue here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No information?

Mrs. NORTON. Because I have no special information regarding the facts of record, I prefer to express no opinion. I never pass judgment without knowing the facts.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentlewoman means seeing it herself?

Mrs. NORTON. Seeing or having evidence that is corroborative, to prove it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then the dispatches in the press do not mean anything to the gentlewoman?

Mrs. NORTON. They mean something, but, after all, you read one newspaper which gives one account of a case, and then you read another newspaper containing an entirely different version of the same subject—the gentleman will admit it is rather difficult to arrive at the real facts. I may say that is the reason I wrote to the Secretary of Labor about getting the facts that have been recorded in this case, because I think we have had a great deal of misinformation. As the gentleman knows, and as every Member of this House knows, there is not a Member on the floor who is more opposed to communism, and everything that communism means, than I am. I would do anything within my power to stamp it out. From my contacts with the Secretary of Labor, as chairman of the Labor Committee, I am forced to the conclusion that she is personally as much opposed to communism as I am. I hold no brief for Mr. Bridges, and my opinion of him is not concerned in my desire to learn the truth with regard to the application of the immigration laws to his case. If the evidence in his case proves that he is deportable I would do everything possible to have him expelled from this country.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I ask this question: If under his leadership it is true that vessels-

Mrs. NORTON. But is it true? What have you to prove that it is true?

Mr. HOFFMAN. But may I ask the question?
Mrs. NORTON. You are asking the question.
Mr. HOFFMAN. But I did not finish it. If under his leadership it is true that by force vessels have been prevented from sailing after the authorities had cleared them and vessels had been prevented from unloading at the docks, would the lady consider that a defiance of United States authorities?

Mrs. NORTON. Absolutely; I would.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentlewoman yield? Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You are not going to believe that anybody is a Communist simply because somebody else says he is a Communist?

Mrs. NORTON. Absolutely not.
Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the lady realize that during the war when two people had an argument the worst thing one could call the other was to call him "pro-German"? Now when something comes up, instead of calling a man "pro-German." he is called "a Communist." Is not that about correct?

Mrs. NORTON. It seems to be, I am sorry to say.

I recall exactly what the gentleman speaks of during the war. I do think that we throw labels around far too carelessly. It is a serious matter to say that a man is a Communist or any of the other "isms"-and I rank them all in about the same class-and not have some reason for saying it or some proof of the charge. That is the only reason I have asked for time today, in an effort to clarify this whole question in my own mind and, if possible, to give you the information I think you are all very anxious to have.

Thank you so much. I think my time has expired.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the lady from New Jersey yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield if I have the time.

Mr. CARLSON. If I understood the reading of this letter correctly, there was a statement to the effect that at the present time we have no legislation which forbids aliens organizing and inciting riots and leading organized strikes in this country.

Mrs. NORTON. I think that is correct. Mr. CARLSON. It seems to me if that is true, the lady heads the very important Committee on Labor and she should bring before this House legislation dealing with that subject, because certainly the time must have arrived to take care of that situation.

Mrs. NORTON. I would be glad to get the benefit of the gentleman's knowledge on the subject. Thank you so much. Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. If my time has not expired, I yield.

Mr. GROSS. I understood by the letter which the lady read that we could not deport an alien unless the country to which we were going to send him was willing to accept him?

Mrs. NORTON. That is correct.

Mr. GROSS. What are we supposed to do with himsink him, or shoot him, or what?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not know. I have simply quoted you the law. You understand this is not my own opinion. I have quoted you the law on this matter and the reasons which the Secretary gave. I am presenting her side of the case to my colleagues because she cannot appear before the House. And if I know anything about the majority of my colleagues, it is that they want to be fair. I do not think she should be blamed for the failure of a foreign government, over which she has no control, to issue passports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therewith a speech that I made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will withhold that request, due to the situation, because otherwise I will have to object.

Mr. PATMAN. It is simply a unanimous-consent request to include my own remarks.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Unless the gentleman will withhold that, I will have to object to it, due to the situation which I think the gentleman is aware of.

Mr. PATMAN. I will be glad to do that. I will withdraw the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not understand the situation. If I am not to be allowed to extend my own remarks, I do not see why anyone else should be allowed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has already withdrawn his request. Does the gentleman wish to renew it?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I do not renew it, under the circumstances. I just wanted to understand the situation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, do I have permission or

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I will object to it, and that will settle it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I just want to revise and extend my own remarks on a question I asked one of the Members.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Until we get this matter straightened out we had better hew strictly to the line. Mr. O'CONNOR. What is the question you want straightened out?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker, The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Under special order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. Leland M. Ford] is recognized for 35 minutes.

MIGRATION OF DESTITUTE PERSONS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the Tolan resolution, introduced January 19, providing for the Speaker of the House to appoint a special investigating committee of five members to inquire into the interstate migration of destitute citizens to study, survey, and investigate the social and economic needs and the movement of indigent persons across State lines, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto, which would not be of public interest but which would aid the House in enacting remedial legislation.

This was concurred in by my other good friend and colleague, Congressman Gearhart, also from California.

I have come here from the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County-this is the same as county commissioners in some of the Eastern States-where 5 supervisors handle all the 54 departments of government, including, of course, the budget; and due to that experience I believe I have some information that should be helpful and informative to this committee when formed, chiefly to indicate what is happening to some of these western communities with particular reference to their finances, and to try to show the seriousness of the matter and the necessity for speedy action.

This is a matter that certainly is a nonpartisan one and one in which both sides of this House, Republicans and Democrats, should be interested, and one upon which both these great parties can meet upon the common ground of the safety and welfare of this country above everything else.

It is the matter of the great expenditure of money and its relationship to taxes and the ability of the taxpayer to pay the bill. Our taxpayers are interested not only in the amount of Federal tax that they are called on to pay but the State, county, city, and district taxes that go to make up the total tax, for, after all, they have to pay all the tax whatever it may be.

Any of us who have served in government know that there is only one common, general source from which to obtain any amount of money that is spent, no matter for what purpose it is spent, and that is from our people by taxation.

We who have had the responsibility of general government recently further know that there is a limit to the ability of taxpayers to keep on paying and that in many places there have been serious threats of taxpayers' strikes, and that in Cook County, Ill., a taxpayers' strike did actually take place, with many detrimental results.

We further know that there is such a thing as the equalization of taxes for communities, and this should extend to the States. Therefore, I think it is fair and proper to say that the matter of indigent migration is one in which equalization of the relief load taxes can and should be equalized. This migration of indigents has thrown a disproportionate tax load on many States which they can no longer continue to bear and pay.

As an instance of what is actually happening in California I would like those of you, who do not know, to know that the treasurer and tax collector of Los Angeles County has just advised me that right now there are 275,000 pieces of property in Los Angeles County upon which the taxpayers cannot pay their taxes, and these properties have now become delinquent.

We have a moratorium provision, I may say for those of you who do not know, permitting the payment of taxes on delinquent property in 10 equal annual installments.

Many thousands of these properties have been delinquent over 5 years and have been sold to the State under our California law. How many other counties have similar conditions to face now or will have them later on? What is causing this situation?

I do not think there is any question but that this indigent migration has been one of the greatest factors in the increased tax load of many communities. This has been very well covered in the Monthly Labor Review by the United States Department of Labor, August 1938, volume 47, page 2, beginning on page 240 under Refugee Labor Migration to California, 1937.

I am not going to try to cover that here now but give this as a reference for informative information for the committee and others who should be interested.

I think part of the answer, at least, is contained in the wire from Roger Jessup, chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, which is here quoted:

All Los Angeles County watches with anxious interest the efforts now being made to halt flow of indigents here. Federal policies responsible for this influx must be changed to avoid eventual disaster. The influx of these indigents since earliest years of depression has brought on critical economic situation and tax strike is threatened as result of excessive charity burden it has imposed. Two years ago this county's charity budget was $25,000,000, last year it was $35,000,000, and this year it is up to $42,000,000. More than 56,000 persons in this county alone now receive aged aid at annual cost of $20,000,000. More than $5,000,000 of county tax funds exclusive of cost of administration and hospitalization being spent this year to care for unemployables. Over $950,000 this year goes to care for indigent aliens, most of whom have become permanent charges. Total county, State, and Federal aid in this county this year totals $70,000,000. No more indigents can be handled without lowering subsistence budgets. Influx from other regions largely responsible for this situation. We look to you to save this beautiful county from becoming Nation's poor farm.

I may add that in 1928 the relief bill was $10,000,000, but that bill has grown to $43,000,000 in 10 years—from $10,-000,000 to $43,000,000 for charity relief alone.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include and to have printed as part of my remarks a chart showing the county of Los Angeles financial program for 1937-38, a chart which was sent out with every tax bill in Los Angeles County.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I shall not—I wonder if the gentleman can explain how this chart will appear in the Record, whether it will be a photographic copy or by a graph?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I do not know how it is usual to handle such illustrations, whether by photostatic copy inserted in the RECORD or not, but I think it should be reproduced in some way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I am not going to quote you many statistics, but am going to quote some figures taken from this graphic statement issued with every tax bill in Los Angeles County, giving an accounting as to how much and where we received the money to run government and what happened to that money, or, in other words, how it was spent. This statement was sent out so that taxpayers could see what was going on in order that they might become "charity relief cost conscious" and to get their reaction. We got their reaction. Most people do not realize the relative cost of the relief program to government nor its restrictive and limiting effect upon the necessary functions of government.

The total shown here, which is the total budget of that county, is $57,715,000. Sixty percent of this total went to charity relief—in round figures, $35,000,000. This was startling information not only to many officials but to our people as a whole to find that the item of charity relief had become larger, bigger, greater than the combined total of the other 53 departments of government. This graph showed that out of a tax levy of $34,000,000, against it for payment was $35,000,000 for the one item of charity relief alone.

The only way that government was carried on was due to the fact that there was a four and one-half million dollar surplus, $4,000,000 that we collected in miscellaneous revenue, and that the State government and the United States Government had given $14,600,000 to the county. In other words, it shows that if it were not for this aid received from the Federal Government the county government could not have been carried on at all under the prevailing conditions. The county tax rate has jumped from 72 cents to $1.52. This does not include the city rates, which, when included, show for Los Angeles city $5.44, and in many of the outlying cities a rate much higher. In other words, from 5 to 61/2 percent. Out of last year's county rate of $1.41, 73 cents went for charity relief alone and 68 cents for all the other 53 departments of government. It appears, then, that government has become incidental to charity relief, whereas, in my opinion, charity relief should be incidental to government.

We have just gone through some very trying times caused by excessive mortgages on homes and real estate, with the Federal Government trying to correct these conditions. With this tax rate of from five to seven dollars per hundred, most people do not stop to think that it has the effect of placing an involuntary mortgage on all property in the county to about 50 percent of its real value, and in which case the owner of the property upon which this mortgage is placed does not actually receive any money. This occurs when the assessor makes his valuation of the property, which in many cases is about 50 percent of its real value. Take, for instance, a man with a $10,000 home; if a suggestion was made that a $5,000 mortgage or trust deed be placed on his home at the rate of 5 to 7 percent per annum for which he would not receive the money, he would immediately become very much discouraged and very much frightened as to his future ability to pay it. That is exactly what we are doing when we place a tax rate of that amount on the property. While the principal may not become due, there is that tax burden equivalent to the payment of interest at the rate of from 5 to 7 percent.

I draw your attention again to the fact that the item of charity relief there is costing more than the other 53 combined departments of government. The effect of this relationship upon the other departments has been to restrict, curtail, and cut out certain necessary functions of government, as demonstrated in our forestry department, our floodcontrol department, and our road department.

We did not have the personnel, fire-fighting equipment, properly maintained fire trails, nor firebreaks, as was demonstrated in our fire some 8 weeks ago which burned over 23,000 acres and destroyed some 500 homes.

The flood-control department has reached its legal limit under the law as to rate of taxation. Last year $1,250,000, and this year $550,000, had to be taken out of the road department budget in order to continue flood-control work necessary to protect life and property.

We were unable to place any new construction for roads in our road department budget and, in addition to this, could not rebuild 19 bridges, costing from $250,000 to $600,000 each, that were lost in last March floods, nor take care of the approaches to these bridges.

The reason we could not take care of this was we did not have the money and could not make additional levies on the already over tax-burdened real estate and personal property of that county, as the people could not pay it, which fact is demonstrated by the further fact that there are now 275,000 pieces of property that cannot pay their taxes in this county and have therefore become delinquent. This is the record over the last 4 or 5 years, and it is getting worse.

The question might be asked why the budget was not reduced. The answer is that it was reduced and the budget of every one of the 53 departments was cut down to the danger point and some cut even below that due to necessity. This is further proven by the fact that county government was carried on for only 68 cents, exclusive of charity relief. Wherever it was possible to cut, cuts were made, but 70 percent of this budget has now become mandatory, with only 30 percent discretionary.

It should be seen from the above where the costs are. It may be informative to know, that in 1928-29, 82 percent of this charity relief budget was discretionary, with only 18 percent mandatory. The positions have been exactly reversed, with 82 percent now mandatory and 18 percent discretionary. I might state that when I use the word "mandatory" I mean that those are the things upon which there is no choice, but they are set out by law and have the effect of being commands. We must do these things whether we want to or not.

It might be interesting to know that last year the liberalization of aged aid alone cost that county between twelve and fourteen million dollars and that there are now more than 56,000 persons in this one county alone receiving that aid.

Further, in the fiscal year 1930-31 the aged aid case load was 16,226. This case load rose in 7 years to 430,500 for the fiscal year 1937-38, or an increase of 2,550 percent in 7 years. This was brought about by the enactment of Federal legislation. In order for California to receive benefits thereunder it had to change its legislation to conform with that of the Federal Government. These changes were as follows:

Cutting the required age from 70 years to 65 years. Changing the residence requirement from 15 years to 5

This let down the bars to many thousands. In order to take care of the new load with proper registration, we had to put on 107 additional personnel, and this personnel was making appointments in August to meet these people as late as March of the following year, all to draw aged aid relief of $35 per month.

It is interesting to know that a memorandum was prepared by Los Angeles County for Mr. Harry L. Hopkins as of his request of July 7, 1937, and things have become worse since

The relative cost per capita was 92 cents in 1925, and in 1936 this had risen to $44.62. When this same figure is reduced to relief cost per taxpayer, leaving out those who are on relief, it is found that they have risen to $87.51. When the additional figure for supplying medical and institutional relief to resident and nonresident indigents is included, this adds an additional $8.98, bringing the total cost per capita to $94.28 for the year 1936, and conditions are now worse. same statement shows (par. 5, p. 2) that the California State Department of Agriculture reported 2,460,614 persons entered the State of California by automobile in the 12month period ending April 30, 1937, with the destination of 74 percent of these persons given as southern California. A substantial proportion of these people volunteered that they were in need of manual employment and that over 75 percent were from so-called drought States. During this same period—April 1937—there were 101,510 on charity relief made up of aged, 43,000, which figure you will note has now jumped to over 56,000; blind; orphan children; indigent; general hospital; tubercular sanatorium; poor farm; and convalescents.

The question may arise as to why the county should take care of these people under the limitations of the State law. We do not take care of them directly, but here is exactly what happens. They have arrived, out of employment and in most instances destitute and hungry, and in this condition—say the wage scale is $3.50 per day—they will work for less and if enough of them continue to come they will work for still less. They then fill the positions in many capacities of those people who are residents, thus throwing the residents who are qualified for relief directly on to the relief rolls, which in turn throws an immediate burden upon the taxpayer, breaks the wage scale, and lowers the American standard of living.

Business and industry are restricted by reason of being unable to sell to these people of a lower standard of living, and by reason of less volume, pay rolls are lowered in number, which in turn causes more unemployment. It creates a very vicious circle in which every person in California is interested—the taxpayer, the businessman, the laborer, and last but not least, all those who are entitled to receive benefits must watch the resources used to pay for these benefits melt away.

I give you this information hoping it will disclose the picture of conditions not only in Los Angeles County but similar conditions prevailing in Kern, San Joaquin, and many other counties, and I hope this may be publicized because many of these things are not known to people who have not actually handled budgets, and I believe it is the duty of every governmental official to give his people the facts.

California is a State which, on account of natural conditions, should and can sustain itself and its people, but most of the cause of all this financial difficulty is the great indigent migration of people from other States. This State can carry its own load but it cannot carry the load of the other 47 States in addition to its own. I, therefore, believe there is plenty of room for the equalization of this tax load.

People have come to this State on account of its climatic conditions and the fertility of the State itself, and in-addition to that to receive aged-aid benefits and charity benefits, but the Federal Government is not bearing its rightful proportion of these costs. It is self evident that the number of people on relief in that State is out of proportion to the population.

It is true, that the Federal Government does make grants to the various States for the purpose of relief and for the further purpose of helping these States financially to care for their people. This should have the effect of reducing the State tax load in these States, and, in my opinion, it does, but here is a fact that must be considered: That in those States which are receiving this Federal aid to take care of their relief load, when great numbers of those receiving relief migrate to other States, it has the effect of further reducing their taxes, but when the States to which these people migrate do not get the funds which were supposed to go to these indigents, such States automatically have their tax load increased, and this is what is happening to California and to many other States.

It is the opinion of people of the State of California that this relief money should follow that migration.

We are prepared in California, through our records, to tell where every migrant comes from, and we believe that the Federal Government should recognize the inequality of having the State of California take care of other States' loads without additional funds with which to do it.

It is my belief that if the tax load becomes so heavy in this or any other State that it becomes uneconomical to carry on any business, to own homes or own property; that there is nothing but failure ahead; and in order to protect against a situation of this kind is one of the reasons I am making this talk.

Some States might take the view that they are accomplishing something for themselves by sending this load on to California, through this migration of people on relief, but these States must remember that when the resources of California are gone, these same people will have become accustomed to relief, and they will then go back to the States which can carry them, either to the Southern States, where climatic conditions are attractive and where it does not cost so much to live, or to those Northern States which have great capital; and these people know which these great States are, and they will go there knowing that they have the money to carry them. This should be given consideration by every State.

The statement will probably be made that California is advertising for these people. This statement is not true, because if one will take the trouble to read the advertisements that are carried by California it will be found therein that the specific request is made not to come to California looking either for a job or for relief. California does advertise, and I maintain that it must continue to do so, for industry to come, and for those people who have the means to sustain themselves. We must do this out of self-defense, for while we have so many jobless people it would be foolhardy, in my opinion, to discontinue bringing in those industries which bring employment to our people.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona rose.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. My time is limited, and what I am about to say I think will answer some of the questions that may be in your minds.

To show that conditions are getting no better, out of this year's budget of some sixty-eight millions, forty-three millions are set aside for relief.

I want it understood right here and now that I do not want anyone to draw from my statements the inference that I am against necessary relief. I am not; and I have just as much kindness in my heart and just as much charity in my heart, and so has the State of California, in the consideration of this matter as anyone in this room; but regardless of that, that State is finding it impossible to carry the whole load. We can and will carry our own.

I want it further understood, too, that I cast no aspersions of any kind upon those people who are on relief and who have migrated, for I believe them to be, in many instances, very fine people who have found themselves in this unfortunate condition over which they have had no control. But I would like to draw to the attention of those who are already on relief, particularly in California, that if this migration continues it will eventually take that aid that they are now getting away from them, after all resources are used up.

To those people who are disabled and to those who find themselves in unfortunate circumstances and are willing to work, my heart goes out, but to those who have become professionals, in this matter of relief, and who are living off those who are on relief, I say it is high time that we close the doors. I mean by this last group, those pressure groups who constantly appear before legislative bodies with a selfish purpose in mind demanding higher and higher relief costs, such as the Workers' Alliance has done in Los Angeles County, and those other pressure groups who advocate higher costs without regard to the ability of the people to pay. The danger is that many legislative bodies will have a false conception of the real conditions by reason of the numbers of these people who appear before them, and that these legislative bodies will lose their idea of relationship between the number of these people compared to the number of people who are actually paying the bill, for, after all, the taxpayer, who is in the majority and is paying the bill, is too busy to come before these bodies to give his side of the picture.

Roughly speaking, I believe it is true that about 14 percent of our people are on relief, and that the 86 percent who are not are paying the bills. It is high time, too, that we give this 86 percent some consideration, for certainly we cannot go ahead and wreck the 86 percent no matter how kindly we might feel toward the remaining 14 percent. We must not forget that, after all, this 86 percent can and does sustain the Government and the 14 percent, by paying the bills, and the 14 percent cannot sustain either the Government or the 86 percent. We must also watch that this 86 percent should not be lessened and the 14 percent be increased, because somewhere along the line there certainly is a danger point in this balance, and after that danger point is reached and passed our whole governmental and business structure will eventually fall.

We must not teach our people not to work nor that they should look for relief instead of looking for work.

We must teach them to become self-sustaining.

REMEDIES

It is not sufficient to talk only about these things, but remedies must be looked for.

First. This resolution by Mr. Tolan should be supported, the investigating committee appointed, and the investigation made.

Second. The suggestion is that the Federal Government should provide relief for marginal people in their home States in order to prevent much of this migration.

Third. The Federal Government should disseminate information at the sources of this migration that there will be no relief available to nonresidents of California or States where these same conditions apply.

Fourth. The Federal Government should encourage and aid the return to their homes of the idle thousands now in California and in other States who have neither lost their legal residence in their respective communities nor achieved legal residence in California or other States.

Fifth. The Federal Government should recognize the inequality of having California or other States pay for these people who have come into their respective States from the outside and should transfer the money that is granted for relief to the States to which these people have moved.

Sixth. It should equalize and make uniform the benefits of aid to the aged so as not to make those States which are paying aged aid benefits pay all migrants from those States which are not.

Seventh. It should be driven home to people who are contemplating migrating that it would be far easier to find work in communities where they are known and where jobs are to be found than it would be in a strange place; that in that community where they are known they would have the additional help of those who know them in finding positions.

I hope that the things mentioned herein will be given careful consideration by you gentlemen from the respective States. because eventually you are going to have to reckon with this situation; and while this situation in California and some other States may now be more acute than that in your own, remember, when the resources of these States are gone these migrants will go to the places where there are still resources left and where they can be taken care of. I ask your full consideration of this and hope you will realize the importance of this matter to the welfare of all our people. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the question in all seriousness: Does the gentleman believe that these transients have gone to California more from the standpoint of climate than they have in order to secure these old-age benefits which have been pointed out, being led very, very largely by propaganda which has come out of California, not from State authorities but from those who have advocated great payments to the aged? Which has been the drawing card, the climate or the expected monetary benefits?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. The matter will have to be segregated by periods. During the present period, in the last 4 or 5 years, due to the high rates paid by the State of California these people have been flocking to it.

This can be proved by inquiries that are coming into that State asking for the amount of aid we pay. In prior years it may have been true that they went there on account of climatic conditions, but now I think it is a combination of both.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us assume you had a $10,000 home in this county at the present time. I mean a home that would sell to a willing buyer for $10,000. What is your assessed valuation and what is the annual taxes on that home?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. The valuation would be from $4,000 to $5,000 on a $10,000 home and the taxes would be about $200.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may say to the gentleman we have cities back in the Northern States in which the taxes are double that rate at the present time and we have not that influx of people.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. That is probably due to your climatic conditions. I have interviewed some of these people, and I want to cite one specific instance. I asked a man why he came, and he said, "We will not freeze in this coun-He said further, "I do not have to buy coal, and if I have not an overcoat my people will not freeze to death." He said, "I think I have a right to come here under those circumstances." If you have a home with a valuation of $5,000, with a $200 tax, you are getting taxed pretty stiffly. Regardless of the tax rate and valuation in your State or mine, that does not say that the taxes in my county are too high or those in the gentleman's county are too high.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It does not; but the taxpayer enters into the matter.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the county where the tax is now $500 per year instead of $200 per year the taxpayer is no more able to pay the $500 plus than the man in California with a tax of $200.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Is the gentleman giving me a hypothetical case?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am giving the gentleman an actual case. I could produce the tax receipts to show this. I have spoken on the floor about this matter time and time again.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I happen to know something about taxes, having been on the tax board of my county for a number of years. It all depends on your method of taxation. If your assessor puts a $10,000 valuation on that property, that is one thing; but if he puts the same valuation on that we do-50 percent of its actual valuation-then you get a different figure. It all depends on the respective rates. In other words, we have to put them on a comparable basis,

Mr. CRAWFORD. I appreciate that.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. In our county the assessor puts on a 40 to 50 percent assessed valuation and the $200 is predicated on that assessed valuation. If our assessor assessed on a 100 percent basis, then the tax would be $455.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. Hoffman asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the President's program of preparedness is not the only "getting ready" that is being done by this administration.

Some may have thought that the appointment of Frank Murphy as head of the Department of Justice was merely his reward for his aid to Lewis, the C. I. O., and the Communists during the Michigan sit-down strikes, but as the President called him back from the Philippines to become Governor of Michigan, so now he is placing him in a position where he can aid in controlling patronage for the 1940 campaign.

Nor was Murphy slow in delivering the goods. Toward a successful campaign in 1940 control of the W. P. A. posts in Michigan would be a great aid.

Let me quote here what the Michigan Times, published at Grand Rapids, had to say on this subject. I quote:

JOB NO. 1 FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

If former Gov. Frank Murphy is confirmed by the Senate to the post of Attorney General of the United States, job No. 1 on his docket should be an investigation by Attorney General Murphy into the conduct of Lame Duck Murphy in connection with the affairs of the Works Progress Administration in Michigan.

He won't have to go far for the evidence; he can consult his own conscience, that conscience which in his public speeches he refers conscience—that conscience which in his public speeches he refers to so frequently and with such warm approval.

No public figure in our time has basked in his own self-approval to quite the same extent as has Frank Murphy. About every third sentence in his stump speeches concerns his purity of motive, his purity on his own admission being such that he must look down with a contraction of the contraction of t with some contempt on a well-known soap, which is only 99+1/100 with some contempt of a war and a second percent pure.

Well, let's see how this one-man purity league operates.

He was defeated at the polls last fall by an electorate that had become more than a trific allergic to conversation unaccompanied by action. On December 31 he left office, his right wrist somewhat have the property of the back, and departed for Washing-by action. On December 31 he left office, his right wrist somewhat lame from patting himself on the back, and departed for Washington. Immediately things began to happen.

You see, if Michigan is to be carried by the Democratic new dealers in 1940, control of the W. P. A. key posts in Michigan is a vitally necessary factor, according to the ideas of Mr. Murphy. The worth of the continual assertions of the new dealers that "no political coercion of W. P. A. employees would be tolerated" is revealed by Mr. Murphy's next step, which was to "promote" the capable and honest Louis M. Nims, State W. P. A. administrator, to post in Chicago and appoint Col. Abner Larned, of Detroit, to succeed Nims.

succeed Nims.

The idea was that by "promoting" Nims and getting him out of the State, in a few months he could be dropped with less outcry and his place filled by a more complaisant and politically minded new dealer. Nims saw this move coming, refused the promotion to the Chicago post, and accepted a position as deputy State highway commissioner under Murray Van Wagoner.

Then the program continued. It was necessary to provide a job for Charles Weber, former treasurer of the Kent County Democratic Committee, former secretary of the State administrative board, and for Charles Weber, former treasurer of the Kent County Democratic Committee, former secretary of the State administrative board, and (most important of all) manager of Murphy's 1936 campaign in Kent County. So the next move was to discharge on a week's notice Albert D. MacRae, west Michigan regional director of the W. P. A., and give his job to Weber.

For 3½ years MacRae had headed the W. P. A. in 21 western Michigan counties, and in that time the honesty and integrity of his character and the excellence of his technical training had produced results so obvious that the western Michigan district was frequently cited by national officials as a model of what W. P. A. should be. He brought to his job, a job that involved the spending of millions of dollars of the public funds, a wealth of experience as an engineer, a building contractor, and a highway constructor. No hint of scandal was ever breathed against his handling of his office; he refused to play politics with human misery, and no W. P. A. employee ever received from him any "orders" as to how he should vote.

Literally hundreds of schools, hospitals, and public buildings,

Literally hundreds of schools, hospitals, and public buildings, mile after mile of highways, sewer systems, and waterworks projects were erected under his direction. In 3½ years Louis M. Nims, as State administrator, and Albert D. MacRae, as regional director, made only one mistake, and that mistake was fatal.

made only one mistake, and that mistake was fatal.

It was a mistake that was easy for honest men to make.

That mistake was this: They accepted at face value the protestations of the new dealers that W. P. A. was not to engage in political activity. They refused to "turn on the heat" even when such a New Deal darling as Frank Murphy was fighting for reelection. As a result, they're out.

This then, translated into actual action, is all that Mr. Attorney General's fervent apostrophes to purity in government really mean. It means that an able engineer, doing an engineer's job and doing it well, must be removed to make room for a former instructor in junior high school who has, as far as the record shows, never spent a day directing any construction project anywhere. Mr. Weber will now direct the work of thousands of men and the expenditure of millions of dollars, and his qualifications for this post? He was of millions of dollars, and his qualifications for this post? He was Frank ("Purity-in-Government") Murphy's Kent County campaign manager in 1936!

As they sing in Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience," "Why, what a particularly pure young man this pure young man must be!" You can take the witness now, Mr. Attorney General.

Some may have thought that kicking Harry Hopkins upstairs and out of W. P. A. was to place him beyond the reach of those who have exposed his use of Federal funds for political purposes. That may have been one purpose, but we should not forget that the 1940 census will soon be in the making; that the appointment of thousands of census enumerators will fall under the jurisdiction of Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce.

Having shown in the W. P. A. his exceptional ability for the distribution of Federal relief funds where they would do the most good politically and having been caught distributing money appropriated for food, clothing, and shelter for the purpose of purchasing votes in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and other States, Hopkins can be more useful in this new field.

Oh, yes, the President advocates preparedness. Just as he induced Democratic Congressmen and Senators during the first years of his administration to give him a blank check for billions of dollars, much of which his subordinates used in an effort to defeat the very men who trusted him, who voted him the money, so now he is again preparing in advance for the political campaign of 1940, with control of the National Democratic Convention as his immediate objective.

It is more than passing strange that those Democrats against whom the powers and the money of the Federal Government will be used cannot see the handwriting on the wall, or lack the courage to check him in his effort to destroy them as well as our form of government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, the address we have just heard of the gentleman from California has been particularly interesting to me, for I find that my State of Arizona, of which I am the sole Representative in this body, has very similar problems and is harassed by the same difficulties, if not to the same degree, as is the Golden State on the Pacific coast. It is true that we have some of the same economic inducements in Arizona, and, in addition, we have other inducements which give us a slightly different phase of the problem than that which the gentleman from California has explained to us. It is about this different phase that I wish to speak briefly.

Since 1849 and the memorable gold-rush days California has been the land of promise, not only to the people of the whole United States but to the people of other lands as well. It has been regarded as a new land of untold economic possibilities. It is not surprising that the gold rush has continued and has gradually lost itself in the sunshine rush of recent years; but when it comes to furnishing sunshine for health purposes Arizona vies with her neighbors in that regard. We are glad to tell the world of this fact, but we do not wish to overadvertise our climate in this respect, for we in Arizona much prefer that the rest of the country shall know that Arizona is as good a place for the well to come and live long as for the sick to come and get well. It is the latter class, however, in all parts of the country, who are better and more widely informed than is the former class.

In view of the fact that Arizona, in its remarkable topography, affords a range of temperature and climate such as is found from the Equator to the North Pole, with sunshine everywhere, makes it ideal as a natural sanitarium for those afflicted with sinus trouble, arthritis, asthma, or tuberculosis. It is equally favorable for those who wish to avoid contracting such physical ailments. Of late years eastern doctors are quite likely to say to certain of their patients, whether the patients be wealthy or poor, "Go to Arizona." Just as California has been for a long time "the land of promise" so has Arizona for a shorter time been known as "the land of health."

Most of the transient and indigent folk who enter California do so through Arizona; probably more than 60 percent enter over Highways 60, 66, 70, and 80; or, if they go by rail, over the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific Railroads. Not all of those who enter Arizona on the east pass entirely through the State, for many of them stop in our southern valleys as migratory farm laborers. The easiest way to get to California from any part of the county lying to the east is through southern Arizona, which accounts for so many entering California from Arizona and explains in part why so many stop in Arizona.

In the House Record for Saturday, August 21, 1937, I had something to say in the last Congress about Arizona being "Uncle Sam's sun parlor," and at that time I pointed out that the United States Government, as well as various churches and fraternal organizations, recognized the merits of our curative climate by establishing hospitals, sanitariums, and such institutions in our land of sunshine. We welcome all such efforts, and we want physically distressed citizens from all parts of the country to come to the health-giving climate of our southwestern community. At the same time, it should be known we are struggling under a heavy burden which is thrown upon us. Especially is this true with regard to the indigent sick.

Hundreds of families are flocking into Arizona with one or both parents suffering from tuberculosis, and they feel that if they can only reach the desert, no matter how poor they may be, the cure will be quick and inevitable. Many pathetic cases have come to my personal attention.

The health authorities of Maricopa and Pima Counties and the State health authorities have explained to me the distressing situation. The local authorities cannot take care of these poor folk, nor even protect their children who may be afflicted unless some Government protection is offered them.

A recent school survey shows an alarming amount of tuberculosis among school children in Arizona. I am positive that these afflicted children were born in other States and brought the tuberculosis with them to Arizona. The superintendent of the largest school system in Arizona urged me to work with him to provide open-air schools where tubercular children may be given physical care at the same time their minds are being developed. But that same school system has been growing by leaps and bounds, so that the rich community is unable to house its school children adequately, and is now very much overcrowded and lacks even ordinary housing facilities. The community cannot possibly furnish open-air schools for its tubercular children.

However, it is not for the tubercular school children alone that I make this plea, but for parents and children of the many, many transients who struggle to the "land of sunshine," live under most deplorable conditions, with the hope that the healing rays of the sun will check this dread disease. I do not know what proportional part good food, clean, and comfortable surroundings, together with pure air and sunshine, have to do in curing tuberculosis, but I do think it is too much to expect a starving family to get well on sunshine and climate alone. In Arizona there is a minimum resident requirement necessary before indigents may receive local government aid. That is a very cruel but necessary local provision. Certainly the General Government ought to do something to help take care of these transient sick.

If an investigation is to be made of this whole relief problem, Arizona will be more interested in proportion to wealth and the load which she is carrying than any other Southwestern State. I do feel that this is an urgent matter, and I do hope that Congress can view the situation as a national problem worthy of immediate attention.

THE LATE SENATOR EDWARD P. COSTIGAN

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, before the Senate begins the consideration of the relief joint resolution, I desire to make a brief statement on a matter which is rather close to me.

My friend and former colleague, ex-Senator Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, passed away at his home in Denver on Tuesday, January 17, 1939.

Senator Costigan served in the United States Senate from March 4, 1931, until ill health forced his retirement from active duties in March 1936. The record of his life and his achievements is written large in the history of his State and the Nation, so that no recital of them is necessary; but I do wish to express a few words of personal appreciation of his character and services and my regret at his passing.

Senator Costigan was one of the most courteous, considerate, and best-liked Senators who ever sat in this body. He was a gentleman in the best and truest meaning of the term. He was gifted with an unusually fine mind, which had been cultivated and developed by a lifetime of study and thought.

He devoted the major efforts of his life to the advocacy and support of measures for the promotion of the public welfare. He always held close to his heart the interests of the less fortunate and the underprivileged. He never hesitated or faltered in his course because of fear of consequences.

The illness and death of Senator Costigan was a severe loss to his friends, his State, and his country. He will be remembered and mourned by an army of devoted friends and admirers throughout the land.

I submit as a part of my remarks an editorial from the Washington News very appropriately but briefly commenting upon the life and public services of Senator Costigan. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

COSTIGAN OF COLORADO

Edward P. Costigan literally wore himself out in the service of the American people. His whole career was a battle for the general welfare, fought with those finest of weapons—intelligence and courage.

There was nothing of the opportunist in him. He supported causes because he believed them to be right, even when he knew them to be unpopular.

them to be unpopular.

As a lawyer he defended the coal-mine strikers of Ludlow when that meant the enmity of the most powerful influences in Colorado. He followed Theodore Roosevelt into the Progressive Party and labored against hopeless odds to keep that party alive after the defeat of 1912. He enlisted to promote Woodrow Wilson's tariff ideals and remained a minority member of the Tariff Commission through the Harding-Coolidge administrations to resist the sabotage of those ideals. He was elected to the Senate 2 years before the New Deal, but the liberal policies which he supported and in large measure inspired represented the convictions of a lifetime. of a lifetime.

We felt it as a great tragedy when Senator Costigan's health broke under the strain of ceaseless, selfless work and he found it impossible to be a candidate for reelection in 1936. He was not one who could be content in idleness. Years of inaction when there was so much needing to be done, so many disadvantaged people needing help, could have brought him little but unhappiness. We think of his death as a merciful release to rest well earned by one of the most gallant men we have known in public life. public life.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has asked that a newspaper clipping be printed as a part of his remarks. Does it include the poem which was read at Senator Costigan's funeral?

Mr. ADAMS. It does not.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to have the poem inserted in the RECORD following his remarks?

Mr. ADAMS. It will be a pleasure to me if the Senator from Nebraska will do it now. I have concluded what I had to say.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a clipping from the Rocky Mountain News, which includes a poem on life in general written by Senator Costigan himself and read at his funeral. I received the poem from the ex-Governor of Colorado, Hon. William E. Sweet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article and poem are as follows:

[From the Rocky Mountain News of January 20, 1939] Costigan's Own Poem on Life Read at Funeral.—Verses Written Just Before Death Commend "Bold Existence"

A poem written a few months ago by former Senator Edward P. Costigan as symbolic of his life was read at his funeral yesterday by the Very Rev. Paul Roberts, dean of St. John's Cathedral.

Political and personal friends, many of whom could not get into the crowded Costigan home at 1642 Detroit Street, where the services were held, stood in silence while the dean recited A Lightning-Shattered Pine. The poem read:

red Pine. The poem read:

Let aspen crowds salaam the storm;
I was the pine, my monarch form,
Crag spurning, backward frowned the cloud,
Till lightnings wrapped me in their shroud.
Rich is their need who own no fears,
Upon the mountain top of years.
I lie; my monster limbs divide
And, blasted, waste, but save their pride.
My downfall is old prophecy
For which no fellow mourning be,

And unto all who dare so high
"So live," I say, "so living die."
My parents saw my footsteps stray—
And cried to me that early day,
"Child, where the sky and cliff depart
The lightnings yet will steal your heart."
I heard them but laughed down their dread,
The mysic nulsed the menace field. The music pulsed, the menace fled
And ever since my dreams apart
Were lightnings that should steal my heart.
And many aeons have I danced When the red steeds have by me glanced, And many acons thrilled to hear The agonizing hills in fear! The agonizing hills in fear!
Then thousand tempests have implored
To run me on their gleaming sword,
A million thunder peals have caught
And messaged back their anthem thought.
Till now I am indeed a part
Of lightnings that have claimed my heart,
As you may be who with me share
The climbing steen and soul to deep The climbing steep and soul to dare The climbing steep and soul to dare.
The brush that weeps around my trunk
Thinks in decay my being sunk.
Thinks me withdrawn as they withdrew
The parent forests e'er I grew.
Of simple mind! My stolen heart
Of lightnings now the deathless part
May flush the winds and torch the cloud
And wrap my equals in its shroud.
So, while my trunk shall pass away
To pitchy black or ashen gray,
Flame charioted, I, heart of pine,
Will search the earth for hearts like mine.
Senetor Costigan's wife Mrs. Mabel Costigan

Although Senator Costigan's wife, Mrs. Mabel Costigan, had requested that flowers be omitted, many out-of-town friends sent bouquets and sprays.

LEGISLATORS PRESENT

The services followed the regular Episcopalian ceremony. There was no music. Dean Roberts read Alfred Tennyson's Crossing the Bar, a favorite poem of the former Senator.

A recess voted by the thirty-second general assembly resulted in the attendance of many legislators at the funeral. Mrs. Costigan was presented with copies of resolutions voted by both the senate and the house in connection with the death of her husband.

Mine workers and other representatives of labor movements championed by Senator Costigan attended in large numbers. There was a delegation of workers and officials of the fuel company for which the Senator was general counsel. Mail carriers in antiform attended the services. uniform attended the services.

GRAVE SERVICES SIMPLE

A long procession of cars slowly made its way to Fairmount Cemetery where the body of Senator Costigan was placed in a

At the cemetery, as at the home, the service was one of quiet simplicity. There were no addresses. Dean Roberts gave a short prayer as the body was lowered into the grave.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER'S CREED

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as the Senate met this morning following a recess, and therefore the proceedings were not opened with prayer, in lieu of the prayer which would otherwise have been offered, I wish to read to the Senate a short editorial, written by James E. Lawrence, editor of the Lincoln (Nebr.) Daily Star. The title is "Frankfurter's Creed," and the editorial reads as follows:

FRANKFURTER'S CREED

"Civil liberties mean liberties for those we like and those we don't like or even detest."—From the testimony given by newly appointed Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter in testifying before a committee of the United States Senate inquiring into his qualifications to serve as a member of the highest American Court of justice.

In those words may be found the solid foundation of human liberty, the arch stone of democratic ideals, and the simple, practical formula of Christian citizenship, and Christian government.

tical formula of Christian citizenship, and Christian government. What would its general acceptance mean to a world of men, women, and children today—a world which struggles for food and shelter—a world which now or at some time hungers or has hungered for peace and security—and a world which yearns or has yearned for the glorious estate of freedom, and for the precious blessings of liberty?

In place of stark fear, of dread apprehension of human servitude because liberties have been destroyed, of scorching bitterness and consuming hates which threaten to consume the people of the world themselves—its general acceptance would mean peace for troubled minds of human beings, peace for troubled nations, and justice for the humblest as well as justice for the powerful. Its general acceptance would end agony and usher in a revival of human hopes. Its general acceptance would restore to the distorted, suffering minds of men and women confidence in the inherent goodness of the glorified creatures who comprise mankind.

A Jew said it—a Jew who was born in Vienna—who came to this country because deep in his soul he believed in a country which had espoused the ideals to which he himself gave voice—a Jew, who had just been elevated to the Supreme Court by Pressing a group of the Separator who a Jew, who had just been elevated to the Supreme Court by President Roosevelt. He sat there facing a group of the Senators who will pass upon the question of his confirmation. In the hearing he had been challenged because he was a Jew, and because it happened that he was born in Vienna. And this was his answer, an answer given in a low voice, barely reaching those nearby, an answer not intended as a reply to those who had challenged his appointment but on the contrary as a simple profession of faith and of devotion to the principle of civil liberties. There is an enduring majesty in his words. There is comfort and hope in those words. There is in them something of sublime wisdom which no friend of democratic government, and no believer in democratic ideals, can afford to ignore.

democratic ideals, can afford to ignore.

Tolerance is the word upon which those who are the most intolerant of all rely. Civil liberties mean liberties for those we like, and also for those we do not like, or may detest. Tolerance calls for a respect for the opinions and the actions of those we like and also for the opinions and the actions of those we do not like or may detest. Tolerance means trying to understand those who may differ with us, not only trying to understand those who may differ with us to the control of the understand those who may determ the control of the understand those who may determ the control of the understand those who may determ the control of the understand the respective what may detest. Tolerance means trying to understand those who may differ with us; not only trying to understand but respecting what they may say, according them the full privilege to freely speak their conscience, and not only according them that privilege but insisting it is one of their inalienable rights. Tolerance calls for kindliness, for gentleness, and for fairness. Tolerance calls for patience, for intelligence, for generosity, and for a love of humanity

And what has the world today? It has the members of a race hated and despised, tracked down like rats, forbidden to leave their homes except under cover of darkness, stripped of their belongings, denied an asylum, and shot down. Such persecution begets greatness and wisdom. Out of the persecution of a race which has known persecution throughout its existence, from one of that race, comes a better appreciation of the full meaning of civil liberties than can be had from any other source.

The world tries for tolerance and practices intolerance. There is in that the old Biblical admonition of St. Luke: "If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone?"

Will those who talk in the name of civil liberties deny to others, others they may like, others they may not like, or others they may detest, civil liberties?

JOINT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas] a member of the Joint Committee on Government Organization, under Public Resolution No. 4, Seventy-fifth Congress, vice Hon. Fred H. Brown, former Senator from New Hampshire, whose term has expired.

ALIENS EMPLOYED UNDER THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 285, agreed to June 8, 1938, data and information concerning aliens employed under the Department of the Interior and the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for a $1,000,000,000 appropriation for the W. P. A. for the purpose of providing work for the unemployed until the end of the present fiscal year, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a membership meeting of the New York City Branch of the Railway Mail Association, favoring an appropriation of $875,-000,000 for the Works Progress Administration, as proposed by the President, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called improved General Welfare Act, granting assistance to persons over 60 years of age, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the retention of the principle of the present neutrality law and extension of the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OVERTON presented a resolution adopted by the Louisiana Farm Council, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Louisiana Farm Council recognizes that the chief Whereas the Louisiana Farm Council recognizes that the chief problems concerning functions of the United States with reference to rural life are: (1) Utilization of our basic natural resources (agricultural land), (2) means of providing gainful employment for American farmers and farm laborers, (3) recognize the importance of a sound agricultural program for the purpose of creating buying power within the United States in order that business may thrive and particularly that interstate trade may increase; therefore we beg to offer the suggestion that the value of domestic sugar has been underestimated in the handling of this great problem; and Whereas we are not ungrateful for the work which has been done by the United States Department of Agriculture in developing new varieties of sugarcane for domestic growers which are well adapted to southern climatical conditions and resistance to disease and insects; and whereas we appreciate the efforts of the A. A. A. in attempting to secure parity values for all crops; and

Whereas the Louislana sugar business is an old and established industry and all of the State and Federal workers have failed to find a substitute for it; and industry and all of the State and Federal workers have failed to find a substitute for it; and

Whereas capital of some $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 now invested in mills has no value except in the the manufacture of sugar, and capital of no small sum invested in farm machinery is not suitable for use in the growing of other crops, and all of this equipment would be sacrificed if sugar is not supported. We wish to call attention to the fact that in the continental United States at the present time there is an overproduction of all major farm crops except sugar, and that if the sugar crop is not allowed its rightful place in the United States, lands now planted to sugar would ultimately compete with the overburdened cotton, rice, corn, dairy, beef cattle, and hog crops; and

Whereas if a reasonable expansion in sugarcane for sugar is allowed to take place from year to year, every acre planted to cane for sugar could be made to relieve the pressure on the overproduced great farm commodities, particularly cotton, river rice, and truck; and

Whereas we further wish to point out that the Louisiana sugar

Whereas we further wish to point out that the Louisiana sugar industry at present supports many farmers and farm laborers as is shown by statistics. In 1935, 94.59 percent of the cane farms for sugar averaged 11.903 acres per farm. For every 7.4 acres one farm worker is required. For every 15.3 acres one extra part-time worker is required; and

Whereas we recognize that the United States Department of Agriculture, through its Sugar Division, is instructed to carry out an act of Congress, however, we wish to point out that a reduction in the acreage of sugarcane for sugar in 1939 must result in decreased earning power per farm; hence, decreased employment for labor and decreased trade both intrastate and interstate; and, further, that a great portion of our natural resource (land) is still lying idle, accumulating taxes as a detriment to the owner, the community, and the Nation. We recognize that if a stable policy could be held out as encouragement to the investment in machinery and implements, all of this land would go into the production of the now underproduced great commodity—sugar. The development of this land in the production of sugar would give gainful employment to thousands of public wards now on the relief rolls, not only in this State but in those other States from which we buy our goods: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is our belief that the domestic sugar crop under prevailing laws is being turned into a liability instead of a great asset and that if it were allowed to gradually expand there would be no unemployment in the Sugar Belt and that many men now unemployed from other sections would move into the belt and that employment would be increased in the manufacturing and that employment would be increased in the manufacturing centers where we buy our goods. That under the present broad authority granted the Secretary of Agriculture by the present Sugar Act, he allow a fair profit to the cane grower and processor alike, and that the law be amended to permit of a normal expansion in continental sugar production; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to the Sugar Section of the United States Department of Agriculture, to Senator John H. Overton, to Senator Allen J. Ellender, and to all of Louisiana's Congressmen.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Truman] are detained from the Senate on important public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, those of us who have been serving on the Appropriations Committee in connection with House Joint Resolution 83, dealing with the appropriation for relief, have been conscious that there has been much misunderstanding throughout the land in reference to the facts. There has been much misrepresentation as to the situation, some innocent and some not innocent. There has been a very extensive propaganda. The issue has been misstated to the people of the United States. I do not say intentionally. The issue that has been apparently presented to the people is as to whether or not there is to be a cut in the relief appropriations. People write me saying, "You should not cut the relief appropriations."

Mr. President, the question is not as to a cut in relief appropriations, but as to the amount which shall be added. This is a joint resolution providing additional appropriations for relief. The appropriations which were made in the last session of Congress were made for an 8-month period. We now have a recommendation from the President that $875,-000,000 be appropriated.

The House of Representatives, after an extensive hearing, decided that the needs and obligations of the country could be fulfilled by an appropriation of $725,000,000 in addition to the moneys now available and heretofore appropriated. There had been appropriated for relief during the fiscal year 1939, prior to this joint resolution, $1,740,000,000. That much has already been appropriated. So the question is whether we shall appropriate a total of $2,465,000,000 or whether we shall appropriate a total of $2,615,000,000—a difference of practically 5 percent in the aggregate appropriations for relief in the fiscal year 1939.

The subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations held extensive hearings. They had before them only advocates of the larger sum, and I wish to say that some of us, representing the view that the $725,000,000 appropriation was adequate, resent the attitude some take that we wish to turn out on the streets in the midst of winter those in need of relief, that we are regardless of the obligations which the Federal Government owes to its citizens.

I desire to say to the Members of the Senate that it is my sincere judgment that those who have supported the lesser amount are more concerned, if possible, in the welfare of those in distress than are those who are advocating the larger amount. Why do I say that? We are told that the recovery program is a great humanitarian movement. We are told that the program which we advocate, involving the lesser amount, means jeopardizing the recovery program in this country. We are told that it means misery and privation for families.

Mr. President, when we speak of humanitarian projects, some concentrate their gaze upon too narrow an area. Some are thinking only of the 3,000,000 people who are immediately the beneficiaries of the Government's generosity. Some of us are thinking of 130,000,000 people. Some of us think that the greatest humanitarian movement in the history of this world is the American Government and American institutions. Some of us are fearful that unless the tendency to extreme appropriations is turned we will break down the greatest humanitarian movement in the history of this world. And I do not say that idly, or as a mere argument. I say that we have reached the point, or are approaching the point, where we must count the cost. I think no longer can we merely say that "Here is a project good in its purposes, good in its results, and therefore we will undertake it." I think we must begin to count the cost.

No group would suffer as much by the falling of our institutions, by the impairment of the credit of the United States, as would those on relief. They would be the greatest sufferers. Those for whose benefit humanitarian projects have been inaugurated would be the first and the greatest sufferers if the credit of this great Government were impaired and we could no longer go forward and spend for their benefit.

The $150,000,000 which represents the difference between the two groups of the Committee on Appropriations is but a part of the difference. There is a question of the tendency and of the trend of the mind of Congress. We are told, as I have said, that we are jeopardizing the entire recovery movement. I ask Senators to look back over the record. If they will do so, they will find that the recovery movement, stimulated by this administration, executive and legislative, went forward upon an upgrade. Then there came a recession of the recovery movement. The prime problem of America today is that of unemployment. There are 10,000,000 to 11,000,000 employables in this country in need of employment. If we are to work our way out, we are to do it through private employment, and not through public employment. It is impossible to secure increase in private employment unless we give some encouragement to the man who is to meet the pay roll on Saturday night. We cannot on the one hand strike down industry, say to industry, "You shall never profit," and on the other hand say to industry, "You must absorb 10,000,000 or 11,000,000 unemployed."

Throughout this land, throughout this body, is uneasiness as to the future of this country; and Senators know it. It is not said often on the floor, but it is said in the cloak rooms, it is said in our homes, "Where are we going? How long can this continue?" We have had it said twice before our Committee on Appropriations that the character of appropriations we have been making for relief cannot be continued indefinitely, and those two remarks were made by the two men who urged us most strongly to approve the increased amount.

What is the interest in this? It is in the mental attitude of the people of America; it is in their viewpoint of the Congress of the United States. They want to know what Congress proposes to do. Is Congress interested in establishing sound and safe conditions, or is Congress going to spend and spend and spend until the credit of the Government is at an end? If we can show to the country that Congress is studying the problem of expenditures, that Congress means to be considerate of the taxpayer, that Congress, before it appropriates, will study and will think of the consequences, there will be a wave of encouragement through this land which may do a vast amount of good.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. ADAMS. Very gladly.

Mr. SMATHERS. In view of the fact that the President of the United States said that it would take $875,000,000, and in view of the fact, as stated by the Senator this morning, that every witness who appeared before the committee testified that it would take that amount, where does the Senator and where did the committee get the information, and from whom, that $725,000,000 would do the job?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be very glad to digress from what I was saying in order that the Senator may have an answer to his question promptly.

No doubt the President of the United States relied upon the figures he got from Colonel Harrington, of the Works Progress Administration, and he had a right to do so. The President of the United States cannot go about and gather up the figures for himself. We as members of the subcommittee accepted the figures Colonel Harrington gave us, with the addition of figures which the President of the United States sent to us the day after we heard Colonel Harrington.

Colonel Harrington's figures are not correct. He has made a mistake of $56,000,000, and we are dealing with an issue of $150,000,000. How does he make that mistake? He tells us that there is money available, now on hand, to pay the expenses of his administration until the 7th of February. Then, when he proceeds to figure what we need to appropriate, he goes back to the 1st of February and duplicates the appropriation. So he figures we are going to spend twice from the 1st to the 7th of February, which involves $45,000,000. It is a perfectly obvious mistake.

Sixty million dollars of the original appropriation was turned over to certain Federal agencies for the purpose of employing W. P. A. workers until the 1st of March.

That money was sent over. The period was fixed. Money is already provided so that 90,000 of the workers will be paid up until the 1st of March. There, again, we have a mistake of over $11,000,000. We find the sum of $56,000,000 which the good colonel innocently tells us we need, and which we already have.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Was the colonel's attention called to these alleged mistakes?

Mr. ADAMS. I think not in that exact form. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the colonel read a statement to the committee, and the members of the committee have taken the colonel's statement and studied the figures since they were presented. The statement was a long one. All the figures were not before us at the time. Some of us do not grasp figures as readily as others. But those figures are now in the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from

Mr. McKELLAR. Colonel Harrington did testify, however, that the 90,000 workers employed by other departments were included in the figures he gave, and he also testified that the $60,000,000, which was supposed to be used for that purpose, was included in all his calculations about the matter. The Senator will recall that Colonel Harrington so claimed in his testimony and in his report.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Tennessee is absolutely correct, but he stops short of one fact. The $60,000,000 was turned over to other Federal agencies. They have taken care of 90,000 people. But the $60,000,000 was there to take care of the 90,000 people until the 1st of March. So that the difference arises from the fact that we have the period from this time until the 1st of March, during which 90,000 people are already provided for.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if that is correct, then the joint resolution is certainly incorrect in its terms, because on page 3 it provides:

Provided further, That the limitation of $60,000,000 in section 3

The limitation we are now talking about—on the amount that may be allocated to other Federal departments. establishments, and agencies is hereby increased to $83,000,000.

The purpose of that language was to increase the projects now being carried on by the other agencies. In other words, the $60,000,000 allowed the other agencies who are employing 90,000 men is allocated in this very measure, but is not a sum sufficient for the purpose, because, as the Senator will remember, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] offered an amendment to the provision for $83,000,000 to make it $93,000,000, so as to take care of the 90,000 who were being employed by other agencies. So the Senator must be mistaken as to his claim that that was not provided for in the joint resolution itself.

Mr. ADAMS. Nothing pains me more than to differ with the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we do it in all good nature anyway, because I am much devoted to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. But the senior Senator from Tennessee over-looks one fact. The money has been provided to pay these people up until the 1st of March. The additional sum is added in order that they may be continued in employment from the 1st of March until the 1st of July.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly correct.

Mr. ADAMS. What I am saying is that Colonel Harrington's figures are wrong in not allowing for the fact that 90.000 of these people have had their pay provided for them up until the 1st of March.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator would call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to page 35 of the hearings before the Senate committee he would find that Colonel Harrington presented a statement showing that as of December 31 there were employed under the Works Progress Administration 3,081,000 persons, and that 3,081,000 figure is arrived at only by including 91,000 employed under other Federal Colonel Harrington furnished the break-down. agencies. He said the number on W. P. A. is 2,989,000, and under other Federal agencies 91,000. So the Senator from Colorado is The only way Colonel Harrington arrived at the total figure of 3,081,000 was by including the 91,000 employed by other Federal agencies.

As to the question of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], I think the Senator from Colorado will agree that we endeavored day after day to get from Colonel Harrington more information as to how he ever arrived at the figure of his balance of cash on hand, and to this good minute I am unconvinced by all his fear. I can take a piece of paper and a pencil and convince any man that he has the money and that he cannot possibly show to the satisfaction of any committee that he is without these funds. It is a mere matter of calculation; the Senator from Idaho and I could settle the matter right here. Colonel Harrington told us that he had $313,000,000 on January 1. He has 3,000,000 people employed. He cannot spend that money for anything except to pay people or to buy material. He figures the cost at $61 per month. Sixty times three million is $180,000,000. When you take $180,000,000 from the $313,000,000 you have left $130,000,000, which carries him from February 1 to February 7, and he has $85,000,000 left, unless it is going to be spent in some way that is not authorized by law, because the law does not authorize him to spend anything except for the pay of people and payment for material. We interrogated him time and again in an effort to find out how those figures which were presented by him were arrived at. We did not neglect to do that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The situation has developed in the debate that the differences here are due to a mistake on the part of the colonel.

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is largely true.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if it were not for this mistake which it is presumed that the colonel has made, there would not be any real difference between those supporting the $725,000,000 figure and those supporting the $875,000,000 figure.

Mr. ADAMS. The difference would be less by $56,000,000. Mr. BORAH. The mistake of the colonel, then, covers only $56,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. That is as far as I have gone. I have another item also to mention.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I am trying to ascertain. Is there any real difference here except concerning what is supposed to be a mistake of the colonel?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; I think there are several differences. Mr. BORAH. I mean with reference to the amount to be appropriated?

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. BORAH. That is certainly interesting news.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that Colonel Harrington was examined very carefully about the supposed mistake of $56,000,000, both as to the amount that it would take to carry him to February 7 and as to the amount allotted other agencies of the Government. But Colonel Harrington maintained all through his testimony, and I believe with absolute accuracy, that he had made no mistake: that there was not a dollar to be had after February 7 unless it was appropriated in the pending joint resolution, and that there had been no mistake of $56,000,000. Colonel Harrington stated in his testimony that all the money will be gone on February 7 and that an appropriation will have to be made to carry the work from that time on.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me call the Senator's attention to page 33 of the hearings. Senator Byrnes inquired of Colonel

Harrington:

Senator Byrnes. What I think the committee is anxious to know now is when you say that your money will be exhausted February 7, you mean that it will be exhausted, because you have set aside out of available funds an amount sufficient to take care of your actual obligations for material?

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir.

Senator Byrnes. An amount sufficient to carry your pay roll up

Colonel HARRINGTON, About to the 7th of February,

In other words, several times Colonel Harrington said that he had money to carry his pay roll up to the 7th of February. My own judgment is he has money to carry it beyond that, but I am accepting the colonel's figures for this part of the argument. Then a very extensive minority report was placed upon the desks of Senators yesterday, in which was set forth the amount of money that would have to be spent for February, and the figure is stated at $183,000,000. The only money that is required to be put up is from February 7 to February 28; $183,000,000 will pay 3,000,000 persons at $61 per month for a full month of 30 days. In other words, the payment for a minimum of 7 days, and possibly 9 days, has been doubled up in the figures presented by Colonel Harrington and given in the minority report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. We will get to that in a few moments. But will not the Senator read or permit me to read the next question of Senator Byrnes on the very subject about which the Senator speaks? Let me read it.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator a question before he does that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator question the fact that Colonel Harrington said he had money to last him to the 7th of February?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. I am maintaining that. And he will have it on the 1st of July. If the $875,000,000 is appropriated he will have enough to carry him to the 7th of July. He has to pay his bills after the first of the month. LXXXIV-43

Returning now to the next question, which I think simplifies the matter very much:

Senator Byrnes. And if you pay your pay roll on February 7, then your statement is that you will have no funds left except the funds which have been set aside to meet these contractual obligations that are outstanding; is that correct?

Colonel Harrington. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. Let us make clear what that means.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Inasmuch as the Senator quotes me, and quotes a question I asked Colonel Harrington, I will say that that is undoubtedly what the colonel said, and he was just as wrong as he can ever be according to his own figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from South Carolina may be correct, and Colonel Harrington may be wrong, but Colonel Harrington has made a study of these matters.

Mr. ADAMS. But the colonel thought we had not.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. I want to follow up the matter read by the Senator from Tennessee.

In answer to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] it was stated that no funds would be left except the funds which have been set aside to meet the contractual obligations which are outstanding. In other words, therewould be money to meet part of the pay roll which had accrued during the week under discussion. On the next page Colonel Harrington is asked how much will be left, and he says he will have $50,000,000 left after the 7th of February. That is, he says he has left not only the money to the 7th of February, but $50,000,000 more than that, to meet obligations accrued prior to that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount referred to was for materials used in the work, as is fully explained in the hearings and elsewhere.

Mr. ADAMS. Under the law which was enacted, he is limited to $7 per man per month for materials. Here is an item of $50,000,000, which is eight times what he could have spent for materials under our limitation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. That limitation simply means that he may not spend more than $7 per month per man, and he has 3,000,000 men on the rolls. He could not spend for materials or contract for materials in excess of $21,000,000 in any month; and if he has $85,000,000 for materials, it means that he has not paid a cent for materials for December, November, or October, which is simply incredible.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more on this question?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will be good enough to read to the Senate all of page 34 of the hearings, showing the questions which were asked Colonel Harrington on this point, the facts will be perfectly clear.

Mr. ADAMS. We have two terms which ought not to be confused, namely, "unexpended balances," and "unobligated balances." To give an illustration, a man might have a bank account of $1,000. He might have a check for $100 outstanding. On the books of the bank his unexpended balance would be $1,000. On his own checkbook it would be $900. In other words, he had obligated $100 which did not show on the books of the bank.

The unexpended balance represents the amount to the credit of the W. P. A. on the Treasurer's books. The unobligated balance represents the figures as they should be on the W. P. A. books. That is, when the W. P. A. employs people, it charges against its credit with the Treasurer upon its books the amount it will take to pay whatever obligations it has incurred.

On the 16th of January a statement of the Treasury of the United States was laid on our desks. In that statement the relief appropriations are summarized. On the 31st of December, at a time when Colonel Harrington said he had unexpended $311,000,000-before the committee he said $327,000,000, but when he corrected the proof he changed it to $311,000,000—the Treasury of the United States says that there were unexpended balances of $716,000,000. Colonel Harrington said that he had unobligated balances on the 31st of December of $190,000,000.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment until I complete this point. The United States Treasury says that on the 31st of December there were unobligated balances of $482,000,000. That was on the balance sheet laid on our desks on the 16th of January. We all received a summary of the statement. It is headed in this way:

Extracts from Report of the President of the United States to the Congress Showing the Status of Funds and Operations Under the Emergency Relief Acts of 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938, as of December 31, 1938.

This official statement, on page 94 of the larger volume before us shows unexpended balances of $716,854,000. On page 97 are shown unobligated appropriation balances of emergency relief funds of $482,800,000.

Is there any reason why those of us who sit on the committee and who find Colonel Harrington in error to the extent of $56,000,000 upon the figures before us, should not go back into the official reports and study what the Treasury Department and the President say to us?

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. I am wondering if I heard correctly when I understood the Senator to say, in response to a question by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] that the $150,000,000 cut is not an effort to practice economy but, on the contrary, is the difference between an incorrect figure given by Colonel Harrington and the correct figure.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator did not hear correctly if he understood me to say that it was not an effort to practice economy, because it is an effort to practice economy. Further, I stated that there was a difference of $56,000,000 in the basic factual items furnished by Colonel Harrington; in other words, that the difference in the conclusion which we have reached was affected by that obvious error.

Mr. SMATHERS. There is a difference of $100,000,000. Giving full credit to the mistake alleged to have been made by the colonel, there is still a difference of $100,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. If we disregard the statements of the United States Treasury.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator question the fact that Colonel Harrington knows how much money he will have on the 7th of February?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I am not raising any such question. I am calling the attention of the Senate to the official document submitted to Congress by the President of the United States for the purpose of giving us the information. As between the two, may I ask the Senator whether he would take the word of Colonel Harrington or the word of the President of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator cannot involve me in a controversy of that sort. It is entirely possible that the figures can be reconciled, because frequently when we take the bookkeeping records of one department and the actual facts of another department, while there may be an apparent difference on the surface, it can be easily reconciled.

One more question.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Senator has the reconciliation. Mr. BARKLEY. I think I have it. However, I do not intend to give it just at the moment.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it a secret? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the Senator if I understand correctly that he is attempting-whether successfully or not, we need not quibble over that-to absorb a part of the $150,000,000 cut by attributing it to mistakes of Colonel Harrington?

Mr. ADAMS. No. We are endeavoring to show that there is more money available than Colonel Harrington told the committee there was available. It is a mere matter of the money available to meet relief. Of course, any man who makes serious mistakes upon vital matters naturally subjects the rest of his testimony to scrutiny.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator mentions the figure of 3,000,000. As a matter of fact, there are 3,081,000 persons on the rolls. Does the Senator, in making his estimate, assume that on the first day of February 80,000 persons will have to be immediately stricken from the rolls? I believe the joint resolution provides that the President may not strike off more than a total of 5 percent during February and March. Five percent of 3,000,000 would be 150,000. Are we to assume that in order to reach the Senator's conclusion on the first day of February 81,000 persons, who constitute more than half of the 5 percent provided for in the joint resolution, must be stricken from the rolls?

Mr. ADAMS. May I give to the Senator some more modern figures? After Colonel Harrington testified before our committee he made a speech in New York, and in that speech Colonel Harrington gave out the report for the week ending January 14, showing that the grand total on the W. P. A. rolls had fallen that week by 39,346, to 3,017,035. The figures include Federal agency projects financed with W. P. A. funds to the extent of 90,000 people. So the figure we are dealing with is not 3,081,000. We are dealing with 3,017,000, less 90,000, whose pay has already been provided for up until the 1st of March, and the rate of decline on the relief rolls in a week was practically 40,000.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I was not privileged to hear the opening part of the Senator's statement; but are we to assume that there is in the Treasury, in the form of unexpended balances available to the Works Progress Administration, sufficient money to offset the proposed $150,000,000 cut, so that if this body should approve the $725,000,000 appropriation there would still be available $875,000,000 or somewhere near that amount? I would not have asked the question if I had heard the Senator's entire statement.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not have the figures in mind in that way at all. I am endeavoring to point out what I see to be the financial situation. Then I am going to endeavor to try to deal with the number of the unemployed entitled to go on W. P. A. rolls. I am not dealing definitely with the difference between one figure and another.

Mr. BONE. Let me state the problem I have in mind somewhat differently. Suppose we draw a red line and this body should approve an appropriation of $725,000,000, how much money would be available for W. P. A. for the period ending June 30 next? What would be approximately the total amount available with unexpended balances in the form of a credit against which the W. P. A. can draw?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator refers to unexpended balances. I am trying to explain that the unexpended balances on the 1st of January, according to the figures of the Treasury, were $716,000,000 and $311,000,000, according to Colonel Harrington's figures. Then the unobligated balances which are available for allocation to pay ensuing obligations Colonel Harrington says are $190,000,000, while the Treasury Department says they are $482,000,000.

Mr. BONE. Are we to assume, then, from the Treasury figures that there is now available at this time, according to the latest report the Senator quotes, something over $400,-000,000 available for W. P. A.? I am talking now about the true balance; I do not care what the books of the Treasury may show. I wish to know about the actual number of dollars available to the W. P. A. upon which it can draw for relief purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. I am frank to say to the Senator that I have had some difficulty in deciding for myself as to the two sets of figures. I am unable, with my deficient mathematical capacity, to reconcile the Treasury unobligated balance of $482,000,000 with Colonel Harrington's unobligated balance of $190,000,000 at the same time. The Senator from Kentucky intimates that there is a reconciliation. I trust that there is, and I assume that to a certain extent there is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, if I may interrupt the Senator, on the 31st of December the Treasury figures show the obligated balance; but it is entirely possible that there are millions of dollars, perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars, of obligated contracts that have not reached the Treasury from the W. P. A. I do not know how long it takes for an obligation entered into by the W. P. A. to reach the Treasury. They know nothing about it until it gets there. So it is entirely possible that on the 31st day of December there might be $418,000,000 on the books of the Treasury unobligated or unexpended, and a week later or 2 weeks later, when the obligations come over from W. P. A., they would absorb most of that balance and reduce the amount very materially.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, I do not pretend to be a master of Federal bookkeeping, but the Federal Government's Treasury Department assumes to set up the unobligated balance. If the Senator were correct, the only figure that they could give us would be the unexpended balance, but they do give us the unobligated balance, and they give other figures showing unliquidated obligations, that is, obligations that are accruing. They seem to know somehow the amount. I take it for granted that the W. P. A. make daily reports to the Treasury Department of their financial operations and their obligations as they incur them.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina. Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Colorado may remind the Senator from Kentucky that there could be no outstanding obligations amounting to several hundred million dollars, because the W. P. A. has no authority under the law to incur any obligations for anything except materials, and such obligations must be limited to $7 per man per month, which, even with 3,000,000 men on the rolls, would amount to only $21,000,000 a month. The only way they could have outstanding obligations for several hundred million dollars would be to have paid absolutely nothing during all the months of 1938, which, of course, did not happen.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to read from page 104 of the report of the President of the United States to the Congress in reference to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act. In a series of explanatory notes to the table, under the head of obligations, this is said:

Obligations consist of actual and accruing liabilities or commitments incurred by project managers or other authorized administrative officers. "Obligations," as used herein, do not necessarily represent in all cases an immediate legal liability; but when a definite step has been taken with a view to incurring a liability on the part of the Government, such as in the case where a requisition for supplies, materials, or equipment has been submitted to the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, an amount is set up as an obligation in the allotment account affected. In this connection it may be noted that work performed under the work-relief program is performed principally through the employment of labor on force account rather than by contract; and in order that sufficient funds may be reserved in the particular project account to meet pay rolls the Treasury has adopted the practice of charging as an obligation at the beginning of each pay period (usually covering a half month) an amount to cover the pay rolls when presented at the end of the pay period. In like manner anticipated obligations, covering travel expenses and similar items, are charged by the Treasury Department as obligations in advance of the actual receipt of vouchers therefor.

This procedure is necessary in order that the accounts will reflect as nearly as practicable the accruing liability of the Government for each project, and that administrative agencies will not incur obligations in excess of funds available for projects or limitations thereunder.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not sure that the Senator from Colorado gives full faith and credence to it, but he will recall that Colonel Harrington testified as follows on this very subject—and I am quoting his exact words from page 34 of the record:

There will be no money available after February 7 to employ anyone.

If that is to be believed, then after the date given there will be no money, either hidden or otherwise, with which to employ anyone on W. P. A. projects.

Mr. ADAMS. Will not the Senator go back to page 33, where Colonel Harrington qualified that?

Colonel Harrington was asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes]:

Senator BYRNES. And if you pay your pay roll on February 7, then your statement is that you will have no funds left except the funds which have been set aside to meet these contractual obligations that are outstanding; is that correct?

Colonel Harrington. That is correct; yes, sir.

In other words, there is a 2 weeks' pay roll always outstanding, and the 2 weeks' pay rolls amount to $90,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. But, Mr. President, if we are to believe Colonel Harrington, he has testified unequivocally, without the shadow of turning, that there would be no money to employ anyone under W. P. A. after February 7.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think that is quite a fair interpretation of Colonel Harrington's statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see how it could be disputed; there it is in the record.

Mr. ADAMS. He may say that there is no money to employ anybody, but he has employed people for a 2-week period and he has the money to meet the pay roll when that 2 weeks has run, which will run not until the 7th, but, at least, until the 14th. In other words, I think the Colonel is wrong, not only as to $45,000,000 but I think he has left us uneasy to the extent of $90,000,000.

For these reasons I think that the statement of the finances upon which the conclusions were based was somewhat in error, and I take it for granted that the Senate of the United States does not want to appropriate more money than necessary to meet the needs of those in distress for whose care the Government is fairly obligated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that brings me to interrupt the Senator again, if I may. I am asking this question because those who are not on the committee have had very little time to read the record. How many men does the subcommittee figure will have to be discharged from the rolls during the month of February in case the bill as reported by the committee shall pass?

Mr. ADAMS. None.

Mr. BORAH. How many will it be necessary to discharge in March?

Mr. ADAMS. None.

Mr. BORAH. Will it be necessary to discharge any between now and February?

Mr. ADAMS. It will not be.

Mr. BORAH. Would there be any difference in the number if the joint resolution carried $875,000,000 and should be passed in that form?

Mr. ADAMS. There might be a difference, but what we have done, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, is to put a strong hand on the Administrator and say that prior to the 1st of April he may not reduce the rolls more than 5 percent. Under the original measure, there was no limitation as to the dismissals. We have endeavored to meet the fear that if a lesser amount were appropriated the Administrator would immediately proceed to throw W. P. A. workers out into the cold and utterly disregard the obligations of the Government by making arbitrary, harsh, and unreasonable dismissals from the rolls, and we have said to him, "That you shall not do."

Mr. BORAH. Does not Colonel Harrington claim that if

Mr. BORAH. Does not Colonel Harrington claim that if the joint resolution carrying $725,000,000 is passed, in order to comply with it he must discharge a certain number of men, say 200,000?

Mr. ADAMS. He cannot do it under the law.

Mr. BORAH. No; the committee is proposing the passage of a measure which would prevent him from doing that.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But why did the committee think it necessary to pass such a law?

Mr. ADAMS. Because we were apprehensive that the colonel might say to us, "You have passed this kind of a law and we are going to show you what the consequences will be; we are going to cut it down to a horizontal limit. You are providing enough money to employ over the period of 434 months an average of 2,400,000 men, and we are cutting the rolls immediately to 2,400,000, and are going to carry that number straight through to the 1st of July."

We felt that under the conditions existing in the Nation, if we carry practically the full load until the wintertime is over, until the time when agricultural activities begin, until we begin to feel the effects of the activities of the Public Works Administration, until we begin to feel some of the benefits of rearmament, until additional moneys are paid out in unemployment insurance and security benefits, we can safely rely on those things to allow a more rapid decline.

I desire to say to the Senator that the minority report, which was rather hastily gotten up, says that we are going to have to reduce the number on the W. P. A. rolls to slightly over a million. As a matter of fact, the $725,000,000 carried by the joint resolution will permit the employment in June of over 2,000,000 persons.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the subcommittee adopted the 5-percent provision, preventing cutting the rolls by more than 5 percent during the winter months, they understood that Colonel Harrington had already claimed that in order to carry out the joint resolution as it was passed by the House for $725,000,000, he would have to cut down employment at the rate of 200,000 a month?

Mr. ADAMS. That was an arbitrary stepping-down that Colonel Harrington was working out.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I offered the amendment. I did it for the reason that I had understood that such a statement was made. I knew that $725,000,000 would give to the W. P. A. every dollar necessary to care adequately for the unemployed. I did not want the Administrator to take the position that because the Congress had not given him every dollar he wanted he would arbitrarily make a large cut during the winter, at a time when it should not be made, and therefore provided that any administrative cut prior to April 1 should not be more than 5 percent. It is then provided that for the rest of the year the remainder of the fund may be apportioned by the Administrator in his discretion.

I can hand to the Senator a statement showing how the Administrator may apportion the funds, retaining 3,000,000 persons on the rolls until March 1; then, if he wants to reduce the number by 5 percent, or 150,000, he may do so; and at the end of the fiscal year on June 30 he will have on the rolls 2,000,000 persons. I ask the Senator to permit his mind to go back with me and judge whether or not that is fair.

In January a year ago, when snow was on the ground, when 30,000 persons had been discharged by General Motors, the Chrysler plant was closed down, the textile industry of the Nation was closed down, and the farmers were out of work, we had on the rolls only 1,900,000 persons in the dead of winter, in the worst situation we have had since 1933. All that the Administrator would have to do if he should accept the judgment of the Congress as to appropriating $725,000,000 would be not to remove a soul from the rolls now, but by June 30 to bring the number on the rolls down to 2,000,000 persons, in which event there would still be on the rolls more than were on them back in January 1938, with people out of work, no farmers at work, and conditions as bad as the Senator and I can recall for some time.

I would not want the Administrator to do anything else. The Senator from Idaho knows that I have gone along with these appropriations at times when the Senator himself has wondered whether we were not exceeding the proper amount, and when everybody else has had some question about the matter. I had no desire to do anything that would prevent the Government from adequately caring for these persons, but if the Senator will look into the record he will see that Colonel Harrington said that 50 percent of the increase in the past few months was from the agricultural sections of the South. When we come down to April the farmers of the South want those agricultural workers back on the farms. If we are going to keep them in the city at $26 a week working a few hours, how in the world will we ever be able to get one of them back to the farm? This measure only contemplates that in the middle of the summer, on July 1, we shall have on the rolls 2,000,000 persons, a larger number than were on the rolls in January 1938, and I think the Senator will say that that is fair.

Mr. BORAH. By how many would it be necessary to reduce the rolls between now and the 1st of June?

Mr. BYRNES. We would reduce the rolls very easily in this way—

Mr. BORAH. By how many? By one-third of the present number?

Mr. BYRNES. We will reduce the total to 2,000,000; yes. Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator calculate the present number is?

Mr. BYRNES. It is now 3,000,000. We would reduce it; but the Senator from Idaho knows that we have become progressive in this matter. In January 1938, only 12 months ago, we thought 1,900,000 was a high figure under the terrible conditions then existing. When we appropriated more money, more persons were added. If, instead of $725,000,000, we should make an appropriation of $1,500,000,000, more persons would be added, and next year we should have the same fix.

Mr. BORAH. How many persons are now waiting upon applications which have been examined and approved to get on the rolls and are unable to get on them for lack of funds?

Mr. BYRNES. According to the figures furnished to us, there have been designated by State agencies 725,000 persons. There has never been a time in the history of this program when there have not been that many or more, for the reason that being designated by State authority means designated by the welfare agencies of the State. You cannot get a project for your town unless you can show that you have persons on the relief rolls, and if you are the mayor you cannot do so unless you have persons on the rolls. You have to show the number on the relief rolls; but when the welfare agencies certify those persons to W. P. A., they are often turned down because they are incapable of working.

Therefore, when 725,000 persons have been certified by State agents as wanting jobs, it does not mean that those 725,000 persons will ever be given jobs, because they are selected not by W. P. A. but by local officials in the States. When they certify them over to W. P. A., the foreman says, "Why, this man is not a carpenter capable of working. We cannot give him work," and the man stays in the number of 725,000. The W. P. A. cannot employ him. Even if the $875,000,000 which was requested should be appropriated, that would not mean that the 725,000 would be employed.

Mr. BORAH. No; that is the objection to the whole thing. We are not proposing to take care of hundreds of thousands of persons who are just as much in need of protection as those on the rolls.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, this is true, because I have had occasion to go into it with the figures. The figures show that the direct relief rolls of the Nation have been greatly reduced during the past 6 months—that means the relief rolls of cities and counties—and they have been put on the rolls certified to W. P. A. That has lessened the burden upon local governments; and, of course, those on direct relief are taken care of by local governments. They are not taken care of by the W. P. A.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will agree with me, I think, although he has given far more study to the matter than I have, that there are hundreds of thousands of persons who are in distress who are not being taken care of either by the local people or by the W. P. A.

Mr. BYRNES. I will agree that that is true. Of course, there is not any question about the contention that by unemployment compensation funds we have not taken care of persons who are entitled to it. We know that we have not done so. Of course, it is a big subject; but, according to the percentage rule, we have not taken care of them to the extent that we should have. Beginning January 1, 23 States have gone into unemployment insurance. They are going to take care of a larger number of persons as a result of 23 States paying unemployment insurance. The other agencies of the Government have been carrying a burden. I agree that there are some persons in the country who have not been taken care of; but if they are certified to the W. P. A. in many instances they will not be given jobs, because they cannot do the work that is required. There is a vast difference in the expenditure, because a thousand dollars a year will give a man a job on W. P. A., while an average of $400 a year is paid for direct relief by States, counties, and Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from South Carolina just stated that the number of 725,000 persons who are on the relief roll, who are not yet employed, in part grows out of the effort of local communities to get rid of that burden. It does not relieve a local community for a man to be put on the relief rolls and then not get a job. He is still out of work, just as much so as if he had not been put on the relief rolls.

Mr. BYRNES. If he is certified to W. P. A. and paid a thousand dollars a year, on the average now the local governments put up 17 percent and the Federal Government puts up the rest; but if he is certified as entitled to relief by the local government, and he does not get a job, the city and State certifying him look after him. You may go into the city of Detroit, for example, and see the amount of money they levy in special taxes, and they do take care of such persons. They do not take care of them with the character of relief furnished by W. P. A.; they do not get jobs, but they do get direct relief. They have been determined by the local government to be entitled to relief, and, once determined as entitled to relief, the local government must help them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A while ago the Senator from Colorado said that it would not be necessary for Colonel Harrington, of the W. P. A., to remove anyone from the rolls during February and March.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming they do not remove anyone, 3,000,000 employees at $61 apiece during those 2 months, amounting to $183,000,000 a month, means that during February and March $366,000,000 of the $725,000,000 would be spent.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is making the same error Colonel Harrington made

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to find out first whether he made an error.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is talking about the period from the 1st of February. They have money to take care of part of that time, at least until the 7th of February, and of the 3,000,000 men about whom he is talking, the pay of 90,000 is already taken care of.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming the Senator to be correct that Colonel Harrington made a mistake, and that sufficient money was allocated, earmarked, and put off to the side to carry these special projects up to the 1st day of March, I do not know whether or not that automatically reduces the amount that is available for others. I do not know enough about this alleged mistake to concede that or to understand it, but if there are 3,000,000 on the roll now at $61, that amounts to $183,000,000 a month, and for 2 months it would be $366,000,000. That is more than half of the entire $725,000,000. That would leave $359,000,000 for April, May, and June, which would be an average of $119,000,000 for those months.

We have either to take an unusual number of people off the rolls, beginning with the 1st day of April, in order to reduce the number of men to correspond to the amount of money available, or we have to go ahead and spend more than a monthly proportion all during April, and then at some point later on strike off probably half of them.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will permit me, in the first place, let us get the figures correct. From February 7 to the 1st of March there will not be 3,000,000 people to take care of. There will be, at the maximum, 2,910,000. That is, we have 90,000 to take off. We pay them $61 a month, so $133,-000,000 will be required to take care of the relief roll up until the 1st of March. Then from March 1 to March 7 we will be taking care of 3,000,000, which will require $45,000,000. Then we start at March 7 and run to April 1, and we will have 2,900,000 on the rolls. That would mean a slight reduction and would require $132,000,000. We would have consumed up until the 1st of April $310,000,000 and we would have a balance of $415,000,000.

Then, taking round figures, if we drop the relief rolls in April by 350,000, we can care for them for $155,000,000. If we drop from then on another 300,000, we can care for them for $135,000,000. Then if we drop 200,000 in June, we can care for them for $123,000,000, which makes an aggregate of $725,000,000 and leaves the lowest point 2,023,000, without any very drastic reductions.

Let me give another figure, as to reductions which have taken place in previous years. I am among those who believe that the program which has been worked out by the administration is a successful one and is moving forward rather than backward. I have been persuaded that when we appropriate nearly $1,000,000,000 for the Public Works Administration for the purpose of putting people to work, some people are going to be put to work.

The $900,000,000 that went to the Public Works Administration has resulted in the letting of contracts by the 1st of January to the extent of one and one-half billion dollars. All Senators know, because of the pressure for projects in their communities, that the whole amount had to be included in contracts by the 1st of January.

Witnesses before the committee told us that every man put directly to work under the Public Works Administration would result in putting to work three and a half men indirectly. That was the argument for the Public Works Administration, that while we did not directly employ the men on relief because we provided for the work being done by contract, when we spent the money, every man who went on directly would ultimately result, from the chain of economic processes, in putting three and half men to work.

I am one of those who believe that the spending of that vast sum will reduce the army of unemployed who are in need. Then there is unemployment insurance, which we did not previously have. The State of New York paid out $87,000,000 last year, and other States accordingly. There have been old-age pension lists. In my State we pay down to the age of 60 years. There have been social-security benefits. There has been an upraise in economic conditions.

In 1936, from February to July, 786,000 went off the relief rolls. In 1937, from February to July, 576,000 went off the relief rolls. I am one of those who think that we have a right to consider what happened in those years, and if 786,000 went off the rolls in 1936, and 576,000 went off in 1937, we have a right to anticipate a corresponding or a greater natural reduction, on account of reemployment in private industry, in 1939.

How many does Colonel Harrington figure? He starts with 3,009,000. We all start from the same point. The 750,000 are not included in either computation. We start with 3,000,000 on the first of January, and the question is, How many will have to go off the rolls? The same 750,000, or whatever it may be, remains in either case. Colonel Harrington computed that the relief rolls would drop only 300,000 in 6 months. I am unwilling to concede that in 6 months, under the conditions which exist, we will have a normal reduction of only 300,000 in the relief rolls.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Idaho in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ADAMS. Gladly.

Mr. GILLETTE. The able Senator has directed the attention of the Senate to an astounding discrepancy in the evidence of Colonel Harrington before the subcommittee as to funds he would have available as unobligated balances, and the Treasury statement as of December 31 last, and the statement from the President on the 16th of this month, an astonishing difference of figures of approximately $200,000,000. The President's statement was laid on our desks on the 16th of January. I note that the committee held meetings up to the 18th. Was there any attempt to elicit from Colonel Harrington an explanation of this discrepancy?

Mr. ADAMS. We asked Colonel Harrington for his figures and we got his figures.

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, I think every Senator is intensely interested in knowing the amount of funds available at the present time.

Mr. ADAMS. The matter did not come to my attention until I began to study Colonel Harrington's testimony after it was put in print. It is when the hearings are printed that we sit down and go into the evidence in detail, and that is when we go back and take the published statements. The report of the President came to our desks subsequent to Colonel Harrington's testimony.

Mr. GILLETTE. Then there was no opportunity to attempt to reconcile those figures after the difference was discovered to be in the amount I have stated?

Mr. ADAMS. No. The Senator knows that every day these statements are laid on our desks.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. And there are quite a few days when neither the Senator nor I read them with care.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senate is now in the position of having no information before it, elicited by the subcommittee, as to what funds are actually unexpended at the present time.

Mr. ADAMS. It seemed to the members of the committee that we ought to have been told with the utmost frankness, fairness, and fullness.

Mr. GILLETTE. I agree with the Senator. I am not criticizing the committee, but I am anxiously seeking information.

Mr. ADAMS. What I am saying definitely, of course, is that by Colonel Harrington's own testimony, conceding that he overlooked a double computation of expense for 7 days, and, in my own judgment, for 14 days, according to his own statement, we have more money, some $56,000,000 more, than he thought we had.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I understand the theory of the text of the bill as reported from the committee, regardless of who is right or wrong in the prospectus, if there is any subsequent failure of funds, the President is invited to identify the emergency, and he is virtually invited to come back and get whatever is necessary to meet the emergency. It seems to me that if anyone cannot accept that much of an economy program he had better quit talking about economy at all.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, that was in the minds of the majority of the subcommittee and of the full committee, that we were using our best judgment, and we were saying that if we make a mistake, we will be here until the mistake will be made obvious, and certainly the Congress of the United States will not fail in its duty to the needy people. We never have failed, and it is not wise, in the face of present economic, national, financial conditions to guess that the worst would happen rather than that the best would happen.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NEELY. Early in the Senator's address he made some observations concerning the credit of the United States Government.

Mr. ADAMS. I may interject there that the credit of the United States Government is the best credit of any nation, any individual, or any corporation in this world today.

Mr. NEELY. Let me thank the Senator for that comforting statement. May I now inquire of the Senator whether I am correct in concluding from his remarks this morning that he believes the unusual spending program of this administration has in any degree impaired the Government's credit?

Mr. ADAMS. It is obvious, I will say in answer to the Senator's question, that the immediate credit has not been impaired. However, there is another aspect which perhaps we had better look into. We are here representing the people of the United States partly in States, partly nationally. The credit of the United States has been used since we have been here to an extent that we have increased our indebtedness something over $20,000,000,000. I do not know the exact figures, but that is a rough estimate. I know that across the Appropriations Committee table, since I have been sitting there for 6 years, appropriations have been made of $55,000,000,000, all of which has to be paid for sooner or later by the workers in the United States. In the end it all comes from the men and women who work, who toil. And I am merely saying that we had better study the matter.

We started on an industrial upgrade. Employment was increasing, and we were very hopeful that we were at the end of the depression. The Senator will remember very well in 1935 when the $4,800,000,000 relief bill came before us we were told in the committee and we were told on the floor of the Senate that if we voted for the bill, if we put into effect the security wage, the backbone of the depression would be broken and there would be no occasion to come back for additional relief appropriations. I know there were some Senators on the floor who voted for the bill believing that that would be its effect. I tried at that time to strike a little lower scale. I thought Senators who believed in the claim made with respect to the effect of the passage of the bill, were unduly optimistic.

Mr. President, we have now found industrial production disappointing to us. We have found the amount of unemployment a disappointing thing. Some people say to us that there is apprehension because of the growing indebtedness. What is the situation in the banks? There is a lack of demand for loans for industrial purposes today. The banks with greatly accumulating funds are seeking to have some small return and they are eager buyers of Government bonds. There has been a great demand for Government bonds because of their marketability. But what is in my mind is whether or not the increased indebtedness, due to the increased spending, may have led some people to be uneasy and to hesitate to invest. The difference between prosperity and adversity depends on the state of mind of the businessman of the Nation. If the businessman thinks that things are going to get worse, then his only interest is to save what he has. He seeks to put it into Government securities or to put it into the banks. He does not try to invest it to make his money earn a return, but merely to save it. If, on the other hand, he thinks that conditions are going to improve. if he thinks there is a chance to make a profit by investing his money in developing business and industry, then instead of money going into the banks it will go into active investments. What I am interested in is the mental attitude of the people of America and their viewpoint of the Congress of the United States. If they believe that Congress is interested in establishing sound and safe conditions, that Congress is studying the problem of expenditures and that Congress means to be considerate of the taxpayer, the American people will invest their money in industry and people will be employed in industry and manufacture and in making use of the great natural resources of the land.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Gladly.

Mr. NEELY. I inquire whether the Senator believes that the Government's credit would be endangered by the appropriation of the sum of $875,000,000 requested for the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I am interested, as I have tried to explain to him, in the mental attitude of the people. If the people find that the Congress is careless of their funds and is spending more than is necessary, uneasiness and apprehension is awakened. On the other hand, if the people think that the Congress is being careful and is scrutinizing its expenditures, you have a different turn of mind. My concern is not based solely on the $150,000,000, I will say to the Senator from West Virginia. It has to do with the effect that the needless appropriation of an excess amount has upon the thinking persons among the American people. I do not mean that $150,000,000 is not a big amount. Senators will find that it is if they try to raise that amount through taxes.

Mr. NEELY. Is it not true that in spite of the fact that this administration has increased the public debt by approximately $20,000,000,000, as the Senator has charged, and for reasons which we all understand, the Government's credit is nevertheless better today than it ever has been at any other time in the history of the Nation?

Mr. ADAMS. I just made that statement to the Senator, but I will say further, if I may, that I am not anxious to have the Government go on to see just how long that good credit can last. I do not want to have us experiment to see how close we can get to the edge of the falls before we go over.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, as long as the Government's credit is ceaselessly and persistently increasing, there certainly is no danger of our going over the financial falls. Let me invite the Senator's attention to some facts which I have just verified-

Mr. ADAMS. No; the Senator does not have to verify what he says to me.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator and wholeheartedly return the compliment. The last three issues of short-time Treasury notes aggregate approximately $300,000,000. What interest or return does the Senator suppose the holders of these securities receive?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that they get practically nothing for them. They are trying to save their money, and they are merely using the Government as the custodian for their money. That is all. Rather than pay the cost of keeping their money elsewhere, they are buying these short-term securities at practically no interest.

Mr. NEELY. The rate of return is about a fiftieth of 1 percent.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; no return.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in order that the relative credit of the Government before and after the administration spent $20,000,000,000 for necessary relief may be shown by the RECORD, I entreat the Senator's indulgence for a few additional moments. On June 30, 1932, the average return on all outstanding Government securities was 3.55 percent. On June 30, 1933—when the administration's spending program was under way-the return on Government securities, because of increased confidence in their value, had declined to 3.35 percent. On December 31, 1938, because of still greater confidence in the value of the Government's securities, the return on Government obligations averaged only 2.58 percent.

Today's Wall Street Journal—the country's greatest financial publication—shows that United States Treasury notes are now selling on the following return basis: The notes designated as "C40," which bear interest at the rate of 11/2 percent and become due December 15, 1940, yesterday sold for 102.24. The return on these notes at this price is 0.01 percent.

The securities designated as "A41," which bear 11/2 percent interest and become due March 15, 1941, sold for 102.25. The return on them at this price is 0.16 percent.

The highest rate of return on any of the Government securities listed under the heading United States Treasury notes is eighty-two one-hundredths of 1 percent. The facts and figures do not indicate that the Government's credit has been impaired or that the people believe it will be impaired by the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question Does the Senator think that the credit of the United States would continue as good as that regardless of how it may continue to borrow and spend?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, of course there is a limit beyond which spending cannot safely go. However, as long as spending is necessary to prevent starvation or other great suffering and the credit of the Government continues to improve in direct proportion to the degree in which we appropriate funds to provide for the unemployed, the danger line will not be reached. Indeed, it will not even be approached.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely rise to ask the Senator from Colorado a question in connection with the statement made by the Senator from West Virginia. Of course, we all agree that the credit of the United States is good and not impaired. Do not the figures which the Senator from West Virginia has given rather bear out the very thought the Senator from Colorado was expounding just a moment ago: that is, the unwillingness to invest in private industry and to take chances to make profits generally? Do not the figures sustain the Senator's position?

Mr. ADAMS. That is my theory. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I think that such a situation is a dangerous sign. It means that private industry is not borrowing; in other words, that there is no call for money. We have excess reserves piling up in the banks and in the Federal Reserve, beyond what they have ever been. Idle money is not a sign of good times. Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to. Mr. NEELY. In response to the observation of the able Senator from New Mexico, as well as the pertinent and always interesting remarks of the eminent Senator from Colorado, let me admit that I would concur in the opinions they have expressed, to the effect that the low return on Government bonds might indicate unwillingness on the part of the people to invest in private enterprise, were it not for the fact that not only Americans but Europeans are buying the securities of private corporations of this country on a return basis comparable to the return on our Government notes and bonds.

The return on investments in the securities of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., General Motors, Eastman Kodak, American Can, and all the other great corporations has steadily declined since March 1933 just as the return on Government bonds has declined. The explanation lies in the fact that under the Roosevelt administration the people once more have absolute confidence in their Government, and are consequently willing to invest or lend their money for the lowest compensation in the history of finance.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois. Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Colorado has generously, and in my judgment very wisely, announced to America that the credit of this country concededly exceeds that of any other country in the world. The Senator called attention to the situation of our loans and our indebtedness. Will not the able Senator in that connection add to the confidence of his country by saying that our indebtedness is to ourselves, neither to foreign countries nor to foreign financial institutions, but wholly to American citizens?

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, it is an advantageous thing to have the indebtedness, when it is paid, paid at home. The situation indicates just what we have been arguing, that there is a vast accumulation of idle money which cannot find profitable employment elsewhere in this country, and which is taking recourse to Government bonds at a minimum return for the sake of safety rather than return.

Mr. LEWIS. I fear the Senator did not quite comprehend my interrogation, which, no doubt, was due to my ill manner of stating it.

Mr. ADAMS. That never happens.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Colorado for his generous estimate of my abilities. However, let me say that I desire to have an additional expression from the Senator from Colorado as the result of his splendid and complete investigation of the financial status of this country, which owes indebtedness to the extent he has described, and whose credit is strong, as he has also set forth. Will he not add, as aiding the confidence of the American people in their country, that the indebtedness of America, as described by him, is an indebtedness to its own people and not an indebtedness to any foreign nation or to the financial institutions of any foreign country?

Mr. ADAMS. I assume that to be true. However, from the standpoint of the Federal Government as an organization, the same amount of money must be raised by taxation to pay the debts regardless of the parties, individuals, or localities to which it must be paid. Of course, the consequences to the holders of the bonds are quite different.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, there is as yet no question about the credit of the United States. However, the present President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, on March 10, 1933, warned us against an accumulated deficit spending up to that point of only $5,000,000,000 in the following language:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

If Mr. Roosevelt was entitled to assert that warning to the country on the basis of a $5,000,000,000 accumulated deficit in 1933, is not the Senator from Colorado at least entitled to suggest that we should be concerned in the presence of an accumulated deficit of $24,000,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I think I am entitled to make comments, but not based upon what somebody else may have said. I am not founding my conclusions upon what someone may have said, whether he be the President of the United States of anyone else. I have merely made my observations on the financial situation. I am among those who are disturbed.

Let me add another observation. My study of the depression which came in 1929, 1930 and 1931 leads me to the conclusion that the greatest contributing factor was the accumulation of individual and corporate indebtedness. Individuals were buying beyond their ability to pay. Installment purchases were running to a high point throughout the land. Corporations were expanding their business and issuing bonds. Stock was issued, and we had an inflated situation largely of private and corporate indebtedness.

The President of the United States in a recent message has pointed out that the aggregate indebtedness of the people and of the Nation has not increased. The people of the United States owe less money. The corporations owe less money. The banks are sounder, thinks the administration. However, I see a danger. Perhaps our credit would not be impaired by an indebtedness of fifty, sixty, seventy, or one hundred billion dollars. I do not know the point at which it would be impaired. No one knows the point. No one knows the time. However, there is a point at which and a time when credit is impaired.

I do not want to see my country and the Congress of the United States experimenting to find out where that point is. We have credit now. Let us encourage industry. Let us encourage the workman. Let us encourage the farmer. Let us spend every cent that is necessary to take care of the needy. The joint resolution as it comes from the House provides every nickel that is necessary and ought to be appropriated at this time for relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to ask the Senator if the committee did not—as I recall, unanimously—undertake to take politics out of relief as far as it could? I was surprised that my distinguished and able friend from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] should attempt to inject politics into the question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. When I quote President Roosevelt, if that is politics, make the most of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator is willing to do that. It is politics.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall not discuss politics. I have never done so since I have been in this body.

Mr. President, what I have said largely covers the outline of what I wanted to say. The subcommittee gave careful attention to the situation. We studied the House hearings. It is not the fact, as is suggested in some quarters, that the figures of the subcommittee is based merely upon conjecture and is without any basis. The subcommittee has great regard for the Appropriations Committee of the House. They are a hard-working, studious, intelligent, well-informed group. The House of Representatives, perhaps more easily swayed by pressure from outside than this body, has concurred by a substantial majority, in the figures in the joint resolution as it comes to us from the House.

The Senate subcommittee heard Colonel Harrington. It then studied the records and concluded, not without reason, not without thought, not without study of the statistics, that the appropriation of $725,000,000 is entirely adequate to meet the obligations all over the country, and that none of the perils or threats or dangers which have been prophesied will follow from keeping the appropriation at this point.

We have included three other provisions in the joint resolution. One prohibits politics in the W. P. A., although that is a trifle at this time; we have limited the number that may be removed from the rolls in order to still the apprehension and the fear lest people be thrown out in the streets in winter; and we have pointed out clearly, though it may not be necessary, to the President and to the people that if the appropriation is not adequate the Congress will be here and will be willing and ready to add such sum of money as may be needed.

It seems to me that there is a lack of real understanding of what the Appropriations Committee has tried to do. Throughout the country charges are being made that the joint resolution as reported represents an effort to starve people, to freeze people. It is an effort to do two things which must go together. One is to care for the needy in the land up to the extent that we should, and the other is not to be regardless of the financial consequences to our country.

Let me add one suggestion which indicates the attitude of the majority of the committee. We have been paying a security wage. That policy was determined by the administration. We are paying $52.50 on the average to those on relief. We are expending roughly $2 per month per man for administrative expenses. We have fixed $7 per month per man as a limit for material costs. I asked Colonel Harring-ton the other day this question, "Colonel, here you have a group of 3,000,000 or 2,900,000 to whom you are paying $52.50 a month; you have another group to whom you are paying nothing. Do you not think it would be reasonable to scale down a trifle the amount you are paying to one group in order to meet the necessities of the other group?" The colonel takes the position that that should not be done. He draws a sharp line and says that he is going to pay everybody on relief $52.50 on the average, and if a man does not get on relief he can starve.

As a practical matter, if there should be taken $1 per man off the money which is being spent for material, we could take care of 50,000 more people, and if $2 should be taken off the $7 being spent for material we could take care of 100,000 more people. Is there any reason why the Federal Government cannot say to the States and to the localities, "You should contribute"? In the last year what has been done in the matter of local contributions? It will be remembered that two sessions ago an effort was made to require the local communities to put up 25 percent. That effort was defeated on the floor of the Senate. It was defeated, why? Because it was said to us that the contributions of the local communities had already reached more than 23 percent, and there was not any occasion for the action then proposed. The local contributions did reach 23 percent. However, in some of the great States and large cities the contribution was much less than that. The greatest State in the Union last year contributed 11 percent, while other States were contributing up to 30 percent. But the local contributions of the local sponsors in the last year declined from 23 percent to 17 percent. If we foot that and ask the local communities to increase their contribution a little for materials, we could very easily meet some of these added obligations.

It seems to me to be a cruel and harsh rule simply to say that to nine people we will give $52.50 a month, the money only covering the nine, and the tenth man who is in equal need will get nothing unless the Congress appropriates another $52.50 a month for him; we will not divide it. Yet that is the attitude of the Works Progress Administration. They are unwilling to make any concession. They take the $61 figure as if it were as sacred as the laws of the Medes and Persians, as if it were the Ark of the Covenant. They fixed it. I wonder if they might not, in a period of distress, be willing to cut a dollar off it or even $2 and feed another 100,000 people? It seems to me that we have met with a very harsh bureaucratic attitude in this matter. I say to the Senate that, without that consideration, there is money enough in the bill, and, with that consideration, it is more than adequate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. BONE. The figures that were called to my attention at the time the report of the Senate Appropriations Committee was printed indicate that Colonel Harrington, drawing on what he referred to as United States Treasury Department sources for information, as of December 31, 1938, had $180,000,000 available for W. P. A. That, it seems to me, would be very easily absorbed by operations in the month of January. If the contemplated cut is made, I want to call the attention of the Senator to what might happen in my State. I am assuming that $180,000,000 are available; but suppose there is available another $180,000,000; that does not detract from the force and effect of this cut on the total employment in the United States. Take, for instance, my own State. My files are full of letters from mayors and other public officials there indicating a deplorable condition, and I think it is similar to that existing in practically every other State in the Union. The State of Washington is no exception; it is not sui generis; it is like most other Amercan States.

There were, as of December 31, 1938, 53,300 people on our relief rolls, the W. P. A. rolls, in the State. If this cut should be sustained-and I am assuming that it will be cushioned somewhat by the presence of additional money which the Senator has suggested—there will still be presented a rather ghastly picture at the end of June; 35,000 human beings will be stricken from the W. P. A. rolls in my State, leaving a little over 18,000 people on the rolls.

I do not want to burden the RECORD-

Mr. ADAMS. Where does the Senator get those figures? Has the Senator verified them?

Mr. BONE. They are from the report of the mayors who are very much interested in this matter, but, if the Senator desires me to do so, I can give him some other figures.

Mr. ADAMS. I am familiar with the tabulation the mayors presented.

Mr. BONE. I wish to call attention, then, to something a little more specific.

Mr. ADAMS. Before the Senator passes from that, I may say, in connection with the tabulation to which he has referred, that I do not think that the Senator's statement is altogether borne out by the facts. The pending measure does not cut down the amount that is going to be contributed to take care of the 53,000. The question is whether we shall appropriate $725,000,000 or $875,000,000. The difference is 17 percent, and yet the mayor of the Senator's city has figured that the proposed reduction would cause a drop in the number on the rolls from 53,000 to 18,000. That is away beyond anything that could naturally happen.

Mr. BONE. That figure results from keeping a larger number of men on the rolls in the months of February and March.

Mr. ADAMS. The largest cut anybody contemplates is 331/3 percent, and we expect those men to go back to work, and there certainly is going to be work in the State of Washington

Mr. BONE. Let me say to the Senator that in the United States Senate, in 1937 and again in 1938, I made an effort to secure more W. P. A. funds, as the Senator from Colorado knows. Upon at least one occasion I made that fight alone. I was astonished to find W. P. A. officials stating, as it was gently suggested to me by the Senator from Colorado, they had stated in their own statements before the committee that they had ample funds, when I was standing here protesting that they would not have enough money; but my protest was borne out afterward by cold, hard facts.

Now we have the W. P. A. asserting to us that they will not have enough money. I am glad they have gotten around to a recognition of what they are facing.

Mr. ADAMS. They are accepting the normal bureaucratic viewpoint.

Mr. BONE. I do not care why they say it or do it: I know they are dealing with human misery; and whether we like it or not, we have got to face it.

Mr. ADAMS. And we are appropriating, at the minimum, nearly two and a half billion dollars.

Mr. BONE. Well, we will not be so thin-skinned a little later when we get around to appropriating for the benefit of private shipbuilders over $100,000,000 for building a battleship which a few years ago cost twenty-six and a half million dollars. I hope no one will rise in this body and suggest that that is the standard of patriotism—that we give the Bethlehem Steel outfit, or someone else, $110,000,000 or $115,000,000 for a battleship that we used to build a few years ago for less than $30,000,000.

But let me call the Senator's attention to a telegram I have from the State administrator of W. P. A. in my State, who is a very able, honest, and intelligent official. He says:

The State department of social security is providing all the way from $3.40 to $5.60 per month per person for those persons why have been certified to W. P. A. and who have not been assigned. In addition, where possible, a small amount of surplus commodities and clothing is given.

That is a fine, cheerful picture for the fellow who has been certified but who can find no place in W. P. A. right now and cannot get a job. What is he going to do?

Mr. ADAMS. From $3 to $5 is being paid in the State of Washington?

Mr. BONE. Right now, with the funds available. what the State is able to do with the tax budget it has set up.

The telegram continues:

The employment of the W. P. A. in Washington State on December 1 was 53,500, and our employment for the month of January, 43,500. There are at the present time 16,872 people certified as in need and whom we have been unable to assign or whom we have released because of quota reduction. All of the certifications have been made since September 1, 1938. In addition, the State department has made no attempt since the fore part of December to make certifications, since they felt that, in view of the W. P. A. reduced employment, it would serve no purpose. * * * We see no immediate prospect of an increase in private employment. The result of the above is that there now is and will continue to be a great deal of hardship and suffering among people who are in need in the State of Washington unless additional funds are provided to give employment to these people. vided to give employment to these people.

I think I should be a poor representative of my State if I did not bring that condition to the attention of my brethren in the Senate, and make an effort, as a Member of this body, to secure adequate funds to take care of those people who, through no fault of their own, are out of work, and cannot find work. It is no answer to them to say that we cannot afford to appropriate the money. Economic necessity knows no law. They are not going to be thin-skinned in complaining, and I should not blame them. In fact, I should reproach them if they were thin-skinned about complaining.

The point I want again to stress is that I was shocked to find W. P. A. officials coming down here and telling the committee that they had ample funds, and then coming down later and painting a doleful picture about their in-ability to care for people. I had that flung in my teeth twice, and I do not like it. The officials ought to be perfectly candid, and tell us the condition that exists; but they have not always been candid, I suppose because they felt the pressure on them to save as much as possible. On the other hand, I felt in my heart that they would run into this problem when the flood trouble occurred down the Ohio Valley. Anyone with the faintest adumbration of intelligence knew there would be a difficult problem confronting the relief authorities in that connection, and yet we could not even get an additional amount of money here for that purpose. Later, however, we confronted a hideous ghost of hunger and misery and wretchedness, and apparently were unable at that time to do anything about it. We have our opportunity right now to make money available. The difference between the amounts of money suggested here is too small to quarrel or dispute about. I think it is unworthy of us to do it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I gather from the statement of the Senator from Washington that his State is providing from $3 to $5 per individual that the State is caring for, and that the authorities of the State are very much dissatisfied that we are putting up only $61 per person.

Mr. BONE. That is for some form of direct relief. I merely read the telegram from Mr. Abel, giving the Senator the benefit of that information.

Mr. ADAMS. The Legislature of the State of Washington is in session?

Mr. BONE. It is in session now.

Mr. ADAMS. Would it not be a good idea to telegraph them to make some added appropriation for their people?

Mr. BONE. I will say to the Senator that they are fully advised as to the needs there; but the State of Washington, like every other State in the Union, has had a very serious tax problem confronting it. That is one of the reasons why I supported here the measures that I did support relative to contributions by the local governments for W. P. A., because most of them just could not "take it"; that is all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether he thinks the United States Government has a serious tax problem confronting it.

Mr. BONE. To be sure, it has; of course it has; but these people are not responsible for the condition which has been thrust upon them. They are not the architects of their own misery. We had all the smart boys running business in this country, and they had a free hand for years. If there is anything in the economic system which they set up that would have protected these people, God knows they had years and years in which to entrench the thing to a point where it would not topple over and bring distress to these people.

I am not going to thresh all that old straw over again; but these people were catapulted into this condition. It is not of their creation; and, for one, I am going to do my part as a Senator by voting in this body to provide funds for these people until somehow they can attach themselves again to a private pay roll. I believe that if a man cannot get work, we ought not to expect him to starve in a land capable of producing the wealth that this country can produce. I do not think that is anything but good American doctrine.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, just one comment. In a State legislature within the past few days—it was not in the State of Washington—a resolution was introduced to urge the adoption of the larger amount for this controverted item; and the principal argument made on the floor was that "The thing for us to do is to get all we can from the Federal Government, and that will reduce the amount which the State will have to put up."

Propaganda has gone out from certain sources to the cities and to the States to send in messages and letters and put pressure upon Senators. I speak advisedly, because the mayor of my city received a request to telegraph me and tell me what I should do.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I intrude again on the Senator's time?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I presume every Member of this body has been made painfully aware, by experience in his own State, of the existence of vast tracts of land which have been taken over for nonpayment of taxes. I do not know what the law is in other States, but in my State a man does not have to pay taxes for 6 years. So, if he is hard up or out of work, he may refrain from paying taxes on his real estate, and the State cannot foreclose for 6 years; but it has lost that revenue in the interim. When the 6-year term is up foreclosure may ensue.

In my own State—and I know that is true in many other States—vast areas of land have been taken over for non-payment of taxes, and that source of tax revenue has been lost to the States. In my State and in many other States resort has been had to sales taxes to supplement waning and vanishing revenues from real-estate taxation. I know that there may have crept into State tax system some things that are reprehensible and that bring down the reproach of decent people; but in the main, by and large, the States have run into rather tough sledding. I know that is true of the Senator's State of Colorado, and it is true of almost every other State, and I have never heard Senators say that their own States were recreant. They realize that a serious tax problem confronts the little home owners in the various States.

God knows we have tried to encourage the little fellow in home owning. We do not want taxes screwed up to the ceiling on homes, but we have tried to encourage the little fellow in owning his home. It makes a better citizen of him; and we should not take his home from him by tax liens that are unbearable. God knows these liens are high enough as they are.

So, when the officials of the States tell us that they are at the end of their tether, I am inclined to believe that, in the main, that is true. I think the public officials of my State are a high-minded, purposeful, honorable body of men, and I know they have run into mighty tough sledding in their tax problems. I spent a good many years as counsel for a taxing body, and I know something of the problems they have to confront.

The Federal Government has the ability to touch sources of revenue that a State cannot touch; and, whether we want to do it or not—

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask what those sources of revenue

Mr. BONE. Oh, we can touch them now.

Mr. ADAMS. What sources of revenue are they?

Mr. BONE. The Federal income tax is a source of revenue.

Mr. ADAMS. The States levy income taxes of their own. Mr. BONE. To be sure; but it is a much simpler problem for us to set up a tax system here and make its proceeds available to aid the government of the country as a whole, than it is for individual States to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the States tax real estate, while the Federal Government has a very difficult problem in reaching real estate?

Mr. BONE. Then, are we to confront the fact that in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirtynine, in the midst of an economic machine that can supply human needs beyond the wildest dreams of 50 or 100 years ago, we have to admit that we are all bogged down by a frightful condition of poverty, and we cannot do anything about it, and we are rapidly drawing to a condition of inability to tax ourselves?

Mr. ADAMS. I have not made that statement. Mr. BONE. No; I know the Senator has not.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Washington said the amount in controversy is relatively small. It seems to me that if it is relatively small, it is as small on one side as it is on the other.

Mr. BONE. But I am not admitting that, because in my own rather awkward and unhappy experience in relief matters, twice I was assured that there were ample funds; and then I went home, as the Senator from Colorado went home and other Senators went home, and met this unending demand for relief from persons who, in my judgment, are clearly entitled to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if it is not a fact that the experience we are going through with the W. P. A. has been repeated and repeated and repeated.

The W. P. A. was originally established as an emergency activity. Its officials come up here and ask for an appropriation to carry them through the next fiscal year. Then, without any formula or any prescription by the Congress as to how the money shall be spent, how fast it shall be spent, or for what particular objects it shall be spent, they work out their own formula and spend as they please during the first months of the fiscal year.

Under the Constitution, in the absence of a special session, Congress always meets in January. Then the officials of the W. P. A. and the P. W. A. and these other activities turn up with requests for a huge emergency deficiency appropriation, and they say to everybody, "You cannot quibble about this amount. You cannot discuss it. You cannot question it. We will not even tell you how the money has been expended, by what formula it has been expended, or how much we are actually going to carry over. You have to pass this appropriation because it is now wintertime, and you are dealing with human misery. Unless you give us everything we ask for, unless you sign another blank check to permit us to carry on exactly as we please, you are going to throw thousands of persons off the pay roll in the dead of winter." Is not that the experience we have been having year after year?

Mr. ADAMS. I think so; and it has happened to be my lot to be sent up here as the messenger of the Appropriations Committee to present that view.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand the travail the Senator from Colorado has had. It seems to me that the time has come for Congress to act. I am going to vote for what the Committee on Appropriations has advanced here, but I think Congress ought to make a proper deficiency appropriation of, say, $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 or $350,000,000, and say, "Carry on for the next few months with this. Then come back to Congress for a second deficiency appropriation, if you need it." In the meantime, we will have set up some permanent formula and some permanent machinery for taking the W. P. A. out from under the whims of one man, and will subject it to the will of Congress, as every departmental activity of the Government ought to be.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to have unanimous consent that we proceed to consider committee amendments first.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before consent is granted, will the Senator agree that we shall begin with section 2? While I have no objection to the amendments in section 1, I think consideration of the amendments to section 1 ought to be left to the last, when all the amendments may be considered together with the amendment which I have already submitted to the Senate, but which has not been offered, to increase the appropriation to $875,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be very glad, if it is agreeable, then, that we proceed with committee amendments as proposed. The Senator's amendment would follow anyway, however, because his amendment is not a committee amendment, and it would come before us after the other amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are some committee amendments which refer to it.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator state just what he proposes?

Mr. McKELLAR. That we begin with the amendments in section 2, and consider the other amendments immediately afterward, fixing the amount.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May I inquire what the purpose of that suggestion is?

Mr. McKELLAR. The purpose is merely this, that the amendments in section 1 depend on the amount of the appropriation, and I should like to let them go over until that question is settled.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado

Mr. ADAMS. Let us get this procedural matter determined first.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. Gladly.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendments of the committee to which the Senator from Tennessee refers really are not dependent on the amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are not dependent, but they are so interrelated with it that I thought the whole of section 1 ought to go over.

Mr. ADAMS. Could we have a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed with the committee amendments and then decide, after that is agreed to, as to the order in which they may be taken up?

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well, but I should like to begin with section 2. The main difference between us is as to whether the amount should be $875,000,000 or $725,000,000, and we might as well determine that matter first.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator from Colorado will yield to the Senator from Tennessee, regardless of the amount, the Senator from Tennessee would not object to the provision of the amendment beginning on line 15, page 2, would he? He did not object in the committee. That is the first amendment, which merely provides that there shall be no reduction of more than 5 percent.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the very amendment which I should like to have go over until I get some more information about it, and if the Senator will let that go over, the rest of the amendments can be taken up and considered, because I am in favor of all of them. But I want these amendments to go over until after the amount is fixed.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amount should be increased, would the committee still feel that the 5-percent provision ought to be retained?

Mr. BYRNES. Regardless of the amount, I shall insist on that amendment. It would merely mean that the Congress would say that the number on the rolls should not be reduced more than 5 percent. The Senator from Kentucky would be in favor of that. The next provision is that if an emergency arose the President could submit a deficiency estimate, and the Senator from Kentucky and I would agree about that. The third provision is that there shall be an investigation of the rolls to determine whether or not there are persons on them not in actual need. No one has any objection to that. Those are the only three provisions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not so certain about the second provision referred to, that the President could come back for a deficiency appropriation. He could do that, of course, anyway. But heretofore the President has never been invited to do it, and I understood that provision to be inserted in connection with the fixing of the amount at $725,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what the result of the vote will be on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, but if the amount asked for should be finally adopted, I myself do not see any particular reason for holding out another invitation to the President to come back and ask for some more, which he can do anyway.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky says it is an invitation, but it is not exactly an invitation. It is a direction, that if the President, in accordance with the power that is vested in him anyway, shall submit a deficiency estimate, he shall at the same time submit the reason constituting the emergency justifying the estimate. That is the difference.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator, to which I am sure he will agree, that we proceed with the committee amendments, starting with line 17 on page 3, and leave the preceding amendments and the amendment to be offered by me, to remain as they are at present.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee, as a matter of fact.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not think the Senator would object.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not think the Senator from Tennessee had any objection to the provisions of that amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. We may want to change it somewhat.

Mr. BYRNES. In the committee he expressed no opposition to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true; but I am quite sure the Senator would not object to allowing this amendment, which is not of great importance, to go over.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am going to object to the request of the Senator from Tennessee unless some reason is shown why we should pass over the amendment beginning on line 15, page 2, until some other amendment is disposed of. It seems to me this is a sound proposition to make in the substantive law.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will bear with me, I think he can determine the reason in a moment. This amendment has in it the following provision:

Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President in submitting such estimate shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency.

I doubt whether that ought to go in, if the Senate votes, as I hope it will vote, for the $875,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will indulge me, I think that provision ought to be in the bill, and I think it ought to be in every appropriation bill. The President would have a right to do it, irrespective of the amount. He has the right to do it, but Congress has the right also to require him to submit a statement in connection with it, and I think that, irrespective of the amount, that provision should be included.

Mr. President, I submit a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the Senator from Colorado has asked unanimous consent that committee amendments be considered before other amendments are considered. That requires unanimous consent. If I understand the situation, objection to the request.—

Mr. McKELLAR. I withdraw my objection. Go ahead.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I had another request I desired to submit. We have certain rules which apply to general appropriation bills. They have been adopted from time to time with the idea of protecting appropriation bills from having attached to them riders containing general legislation.

We have before us now a measure which is not classified, perhaps, as a general appropriation bill, but it seems to me it should receive the same treatment, that it should not be open to amendments embodying legislation of a general character. I therefore ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of the pending bill the rules which apply to general appropriation bills may apply.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not contemplate offering any amendment to the appropriation measure now before us, but in view of the fact that it is of a very general nature, I shall feel constrained to object to the request made by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was gratified to hear the statement of my distinguished and my very greatly esteemed friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams], when he said, almost at the beginning of his remarks, that there was no proof whatsoever in the record to sustain the $725,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if I made such a statement I was very grievously in error. I certainly did not intend to make such a statement, for the reason that I do not regard that a feet a feet.

that as a fact.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator said that all the witnesses who testified had testified in favor of the $875,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but the evidence which they presented tends to prove that $725,000,000 is the proper figure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the Senator if he did not say what I have stated, and I am sorry he did not say it. I think he ought to have said it, because all the testimony was in favor of the $875,000,000, and no witness testified that in his or her opinion there should be a lesser amount than that under the circumstances.

Mr. President, let us see just exactly what our relief situation is, as shown by the evidence. On the last of December 1938 there were 3,081,000 persons on relief. On the 1st of December 3,350,000 were on relief. While that number was on relief on the 1st of December, 750,000 more had been certified and were eligible for relief, but had never been able to connect with the relief rolls. I hope Senators will listen to these figures. A number of orators are on the floor, and it is difficult to speak while they are speaking.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, Senators who are speaking to one another on the floor are not conscious that they are disturbing the Senator who has the floor. I invite the attention of the eminent chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. ASHURST] and the eminent Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] that the Senator who is now speaking is disturbed by the conversation going on between them.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, in order to oblige the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Virginia will go to the cloak-room.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not take any such attitude as my learned friend the Senator from Virginia takes. I stand corrected. I was violating the rules of the Senate. I am sorry I did. I shall not do so again. I was at the moment discussing with the Senator from Virginia the question of the nomination for a judgeship in Tennessee which just came in.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, where is that judgeship located?

Mr. ASHURST. In Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator was discussing it. Mr. ASHURST. In doing so I had no intention of disturbing the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President and Senators, bear with me for a few moments while I state the facts as they appear from the testimony adduced before the committee. On the 1st of December 3,350,000 persons were on relief. On that date there were also 750,000 more persons who had applied for relief and had been declared eligible, but had never been put on the relief roll, making 4,100,000 persons eligible for relief at that time. That figure had come down, and on January 1 there were 3,081,000 on relief. What will happen to those 4,100,000 persons on relief or who have applied for relief and who are eligible for relief if the Senate adheres to the figure of $725,000,000, and that amount is appropriated, as adopted by the other House and recommended by the Senate Appropriations Committee?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield in just a moment. Let me state my case, and then I shall be delighted to yield.

I will tell the Senate what will happen, and this is based on the testimony of Colonel Harrington. I do not agree with the Senator from Colorado in his criticism of Colonel Harrington. It seemed to me that Colonel Harrington was a very careful, prudent, and, I thought, a very truthful and very accurate man. Let us see what would happen according to his testimony. His testimony was that on the 1st of February there would be 3,000,000 persons on relief. Nothing is provided for the 750,000 who have applied and are eligible, but have not been given relief. Nothing is done for the others who have been affected by the reduction from 3,350,000 since the 1st of December. There would be 2,850,000 in March; in April, 2,350,000; in May, 1,650,000. In June, 1,050,000 persons will be on relief if the $725,000,000 figure is adhered to.

Colonel Harrington testified to these figures. They are perfectly plain. They are so simple that anyone can understand them. It costs $61 a month for each one on relief. Multiply that figure, and then divide in the manner that the law will direct if the pending measure shall become law, and on June 1 we will have reduced our relief rolls from 4,100,000, including those eligible for relief, but who have never received any, to 1,050,000 persons. In other words, we will reduce the number of our relief workers in this country by 75 percent. That is a long step to take in 6 months. I wish we could take it. Heaven knows I wish we did not have to appropriate one dollar for relief. But we have a situation staring us in the face. Are Senators willing to take three out of every four now on relief or eligible for relief off the relief rolls, as they will be doing when they vote for the $725,000,000 figure, and reduce the number of those on relief to one in four? That is precisely what the colonel's figures show will be the result. His figures are undenied. They cannot be denied.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is aware of the fact that the difference between the $875,000,000 and the $725,000,000, which is the amount recommended by the committee, is 17 percent. Yet the Senator would have it appear that there would be a reduction of 300 percent in the rolls. It seems to me the Senator can hardly figure a reduction greater than the percentage which the figures themselves would indicate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I never talk about percentages. I never did have a good understanding of percentages.

Mr. ADAMS. I gather that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have had to pay interest on money which I have borrowed, and I do not like to do that, and I do not know much about percentages. We are dealing with facts, not with percentages. What are the facts? The facts are that in this country today, whether we like it or not, and heaven knows we all dislike it, about 4,000,000 people are eligible for relief. The committee would cut off three out of four persons on relief by June. Is there any Senator in this body who says that in his judgment we can, without injury, discharge three out of four persons on relief now?

Mr. ADAMS. One Senator says there is no such intention, or nothing of that kind contemplated.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not make any difference what the Senator contemplates or what his intentions are. We are told that the road to a very celebrated community is paved with good intentions. But what are the facts? The facts are indisputable. They cannot be denied. In the neighborhood of 4,000,000 people are on the W. P. A. rolls or are eligible to go on the W. P. A. rolls, and we cannot take out three of every four by next June. I wish to heaven we could. I wish we could stop this relief business right now. But does any Senator want to stop it right now? I believe there are not very many who would be willing to stop it right now. I should like to vote to do that, but we cannot vote to stop relief now. The majority of the committee agreed to the proposal to continue relief when it was agreed that relief should not be lessened during the winter, and arranged that it shall go on substantially the same in January, and in February, and in March, while the weather is cold. We do not want to be charged with turning people off the rolls while it is cold, and I do not blame members of the committee for the action they took. But sometimes it is cold in April, and hunger in April is as bad as hunger in February or March.

Mr. President, the facts I have stated are incontrovertible. There is no way in the world for those facts to be disputed. We are going to cut this relief work by three-fourths if we carry out the terms of the measure as it now stands.

What is the reason for cutting off persons from the rolls in April, May, and June? The first reason assigned is that the farming season is on then, and that will take a good many persons off relief. It may take some. Another reason assigned is that a great many persons will be employed on P. W. A. projects, and to some extent that is true. A third reason is that many States will increase the old-age benefits and maternity benefits, and aid to dependent children benefits. I hope the States will pass such laws. But are we going to legislate here on a basis of that kind? we going to cut down W. P. A. rolls on the basis of what the States may do by way of legislation? I think if we do we will be going a long way, Senators. But even if all those things were true, it would not take up the 750,000 persons eligible for relief, but who are not now on the rolls. I say that because we have had experience. In the year 1936 not much more than one-half million persons were taken off the rolls. In 1937 about the same number were taken off. In 1938 the number was just about the same. Why should we think there would be more in the first 6 months of 1939? If we provided $875,000,000, we would not be taking care of those who would be entitled to relief under this measure.

Mr. President, let us take the 750,000 who are eligible for relief but are not on the rolls. I shall quote the Administrator. I want to say at this point that I have had considerable experience as a legislator, about the same experience that my good friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has had. I think he and I came to the House during the same session. For the past 28 years both he and I have been in one House of Congress or the other. I think it is safe to say that we shall get very little relief from the action of State legislatures on the relief question. I think we shall get some relief from agriculture, but it will not come anywhere near taking care of the 750,000 who are now trying to get on the rolls. All four of the classifications which were mentioned by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] will not bring the number up to 750,000 unless something very unusual happens between now and June.

What could happen to bring the number up to the desired point? If there should be a very unusual employment in private industry, it might be possible. We do not know the possible extent of such employment. No one can say. Why should we undertake to legislate on relief two or three times at this session?

I take the position that the report of the majority and the joint resolution of the majority, as it was brought to us, show that they do not believe $725,000,000 will be adequate. Why? They are so afraid of it that in the joint resolution itself they go to the trouble of inviting the President of the United States to declare another emergency. The President has declared this an emergency. He has shown the facts, he has presented the figures, and the committee has turned him down.

It is said that Colonel Harrington does not know what he is talking about. If I recollect aright the argument of my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. Adams], Colonel Harrington was so inaccurate that he could not be depended upon in this emergency. If we do not take the President's recommendation for this appropriation, how are we going to take it 2 months hence?

This is what the committee says in the joint resolution:

Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President in submitting such estimate shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency. That is precisely what the President has done in this matter. He has presented the facts, and there are no facts to the contrary.

Not a single, solitary witness testified in support of the figure "$725,000,000." I was present when the testimony was taken. While literally hundreds of witnesses testified, either directly before the committee or by communications sent to the committee, not one witness testified in support of the figure "$725,000,000." The mayors of almost every city in this country testified that $725,000,000 was not sufficient. I shall come to their testimony in a moment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator is so confident of the accuracy of the testimony of his witnesses, why does he not state that some of them wanted $1,090,000,000? Why not take that figure?

Mr. McKELLAR. How many testified to that figure?

Mr. GLASS. The mayor of New York testified to that figure. He represented the mayors of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the testimony before me. My recollection of what Mr. LaGuardia testified is that he was very much in favor of $875,000,000, and he really believed it ought to be increased to more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. That is exactly what I say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely, then, his testimony could be taken as the testimony of one of those who testified in support of the figure $875.000.000.

The mayor of Detroit held that it was highly imperative that $875,000,000 be appropriated.

I wish to call attention to the situation in Cleveland. I note that the distinguished junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Taft] is in the Chamber. I want to call his attention to some figures. The Senator does not come from Cleveland. He comes from Cincinnati, but he is interested in Cleveland. What are the facts with respect to Cleveland? In one city in the State of the junior Senator from Ohio, the city of Cleveland, 71,000 men and women are employed on W. P. A., and 16,500 are certified as eligible and cannot receive a cent because the money is not appropriated. I am wondering what the Senators from Ohio will do about aiding their citizens who need relief and who are not now on relief.

What is the situation in St. Louis? I do not see either of the Senators from Missouri present in the Chamber. In St. Louis, 15,741 are on direct relief; 3,886 cases are pending investigation, and 2,000 persons are certified and awaiting assignments, but are unable to obtain them.

Mayor Kelly did not give the figures as to Chicago, but he testified that there ought to be an increase in relief.

In Baltimore, 2,200 persons are certified for relief, but none of them has ever been put on relief.

In Pittsburgh the W. P. A. is laying off men in the face of the existing needs.

In Dallas 6,039 persons now have work, but 1,567 more are awaiting assignments.

In San Francisco the present relief load is greater than that of last year.

In Milwaukee 4,800 persons are certified for W. P. A. employment and are waiting for a chance to work.

In New Orleans 2,735 cases are reported for whom jobs are not available.

Cincinnati, the home town of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], reports that it is unable to carry the load of relief that it has.

In Newark 25,000 people had been certified, and only about half of them have been assigned.

In Indianapolis 1,273 families could not be assigned work. In Rochester the relief load was climbing steadily, but it was believed that it had not reached its peak.

Louisville reports 6,000 employed and 1,100 awaiting employment on W. P. A.

Portland, Oreg., reports that it is necessary to retain the present quota.

In Atlanta, Ga., 14,763 were employed on W. P. A. and 6,000 were eligible, but were not employed on W. P. A.

In Toledo the outlook for reduction is not encouraging.

In Denver the mayor did not know how they could face the reduction of W. P. A. employment rolls.

Columbus reported that there was no indication at the present writing that would lead to the belief that there would be any material reduction in the number of those who need relief.

St. Paul reports serious difficulty with relief problems.

In Memphis there were 5,700 on the W. P. A. and 2,000 more eligible and certified.

Dayton, Ohio, reports a very serious relief situation.

San Antonio, Tex., expects a serious situation to develop unless the present quotas are maintained.

In Omaha, Nebr., the number actually employed on W. P. A. is 9.375. The number certified but not working is 3.760.

In Grand Rapids more than 500 cases are awaiting assignment.

In Fort Worth a large number of those working have been laid off, and the city's financial situation is alarming.

Oklahoma City reports that the situation is worse than it was last year.

In New Haven it is desired to continue the W. P. A. rolls at the present level.

In Salt Lake City 700 needy heads of families have been deprived of employment because of lack of W. P. A. funds.

In Jacksonville, Fla., in the event of W. P. A. discontinuance, thousands would be without food, shelter, and clothing. Springfield, Mass., reports that without W. P. A. the city would face an almost impossible financial situation.

Des Moines, with a population of 155,000, has 41,000 persons on relief, or about 26 percent of its population.

In Miami, 4,389 were eligible in December and only 2,603 were employed.

In Spokane unemployment is as heavy as, if not heavier than, it was in 1933.

Trenton reports complete financial inability to meet the need.

In South Bend, Ind., the needy are increasing at the rate of 200 a day.

In Flint, Mich., 2,500 are eligible for W. P. A. employment and cannot obtain it.

Elizabeth, N. J., would be unable to get along without the continuance of relief.

In New Bedford the relief load is increasing. In Knoxville it is stated that it is imperative that W. P. A. be continued. In Reading no curtailment is possible if needs are to be met. Youngstown reports any reduction in W. P. A. employment would be disastrous to its community.

In Erie 900 employees have been dismissed in 2 months. Norfolk reports that no reductions are possible.

In Schenectady only 50 percent of the employables are on relief.

Lowell is opposed to any reduction. Similar reports come from Evansville, Duluth, Tampa, Waterbury, Somerville, East St. Louis, Rockford, Sacramento, Kenosha, Wis., Topeka, Atlantic City, Columbia, S. C., Racine, Wis., Fresno, Greensboro, Madison, Cedar Rapids, Macon, Amarillo, Jackson, Miss., Waco, Tex., Hazelton, Hagerstown, Long Beach. A group of Wisconsin cities report 14,000 were certified for W. P. A. jobs but were waiting assignment because the W. P. A. quota for Wisconsin was not large enough.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My understanding is that the full appropriation for which the Senator contends would only maintain existing rolls. I should judge from the statistics now presented by the Senator that the appropriation for which he contends would be wholly inadequate. Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not contend that. I contend that nobody can be accurate about it; nobody knows about it; but from the experience we have had during the last 3 or 4 years, as to those on the rolls and those who are eligible but not on the rolls, even assuming that there is going to be some decrease on account of farming operations in the spring, and because of those that go into industry, we know that there still will be others who will need relief, and that $875,000,000 will not more than take care of them. So what I propose to do is what the organization headed by Colonel Harrington thinks should be done. I believe that the figures presented by that organization are correct. If they were not correct, why did not somebody on the other side who is interested furnish testimony that they were not correct? If there is something sacred about the figures $725,000,000, why should we not have had some facts to show that that sum would be sufficient? Heaven knows, I prefer a smaller sum; Heaven knows, I would be willing to take as many off relief as we could take. But here is the proof, here is the experience of years on the part of this branch of our Government, and we cannot afford to go contrary to that experience without proof.

It is true that certain Senators on the committee have fixed the figure of $725,000,000. How they work it out nobody knows; they have not explained it. As the Senator from Michigan will remember, as he was here during the entire time, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] never did explain how it was to be done. It was shown if his figures were accepted, namely $725,000,000, we would take three-fourths of those who are now on relief, or who were on relief, off relief and have just one-fourth on relief. If that theory could be carried out, what a wonderful thing it would be. If by Congress passing an act reducing this appropriation we could rightfully and properly take off the rolls threefourths of those on relief, what a wonderful thing it would be. Who would not be in favor of it if it could be done? But that figure has nothing to back it except opinion, and that opinion is not very strong, for I call attention to the invitation contained in the joint resolution itself as reported by the committee:

Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President in submitting such estimate shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency.

That is an invitation to the President to do the very thing that the President has already done. He has declared the emergency; he has fixed the amount after the most careful preparation, after the most careful examination by those in charge of this activity, at $875,000,000. Why, without a fact to sustain it, should the Congress undertake to cut that down?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is not the clause which the Senator has just read a complete escape clause if the Senator from Colorado should prove to be wrong and the Senator from Tennessee should prove to be right?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all, for this reason: We have got something else to do besides looking after relief matters. Why, after all this preparation and examination, after all these facts and figures, should the President be required to send in another emergency recommendation in March?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it not a sufficient reason that upon the authority of the committee, or upon the authority of two-thirds of the committee, Colonel Harrington's figures are challenged as being inaccurate?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I do not think two-thirds of the committee would challenge Colonel Harrington's figures. Mr. VANDENBERG. What was the vote in the committee?

Mr. McKellar. I was surprised that Colonel Harrington's figures were challenged at all. But let us look at the challenge. The challenge applies to just one-third of the amount that was asked. This is a good place to bring that in now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Was not the figure $725,000,000 agreed upon by the House long before any question with reference to there being an incorrect figure upon the part of Colonel Harrington arose?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my information. I never heard of any challenge of Colonel Harrington's figures until this morning.

Mr. BORAH. My understanding is that the challenge to Colonel Harrington's figures arose after the vote of 17 to 7 was taken in the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. They may have been challenged by someone else, but, so far as I know—and I served on the subcommittee and on the full committee and I think I would have known about it—the challenge to Colonel Harrington's figures for the first time was made today; although he was asked questions which might justify such a challenge, according to my recollection, none was made.

Now let me say a great hullabaloo has been made about Colonel Harrington having made a mistake as to $56,000,000. The principal part of it, about forty-million-odd dollars, was supposed to be due to the fact that $60,000,000 allowed other Federal departments and agencies for relief work, which was put in the law last year, should be carried until next July. As Colonel Harrington testifies, it was not, and the very measure reported by the committee shows that it was not, because, as I pointed out this morning, it reads:

Provided further, That the limitation of $60,000,000-

That is the one that takes in 90,000 on relief under other departments—

That the limitation of $60,000,000 in section 3 of such act on the amount that may be allocated to other Federal departments, establishments, and agencies is hereby increased to $83,000,000.

That shows that the Senator from Colorado is absolutely mistaken when he says that the appropriation of last summer was a year's appropriation for administration by other departments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me, and the Senator from Tennessee will yield, let me say the Senator from Colorado never said any such thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say that. Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Colorado said that it was an appropriation for 8 months, and ran until the 1st of March, and that the money had been set aside, and was there now to pay 90,000 people until the 1st of March.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the correction, and, if I made a mistake, I am sorry.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President-

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the hearings while we are talking about the alleged mistake on the part of Colonel Harrington. Pages 49 and 50 of the Senate hearings, I believe, afford the key to this controversy as to the alleged mistake. We find that on page 50, speaking about the original appropriation of $1,425,000,000, the statement is made by Colonel Harrington:

There will be unpaid bills out of the $1,425,000,000 on February 7-

The question was not asked him what would be the amount of those bills on February 7; but now, going back to page 49—

Mr. ADAMS. May I help the Senator by saying that if he will look at page 34 I think he will find that Colonel Harrington stated there was about $50,000,000 that would be available at that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to read from pages 33 and 34 in just a moment, and show how utterly mistaken the Senator from Colorado is. Of course, he is acting in perfect good faith because everyone who knows the Senator from Colorado knows that he always acts in good faith, and I cheerfully agree that that is so, but he has made a mistake about it.

Mr. MILLER. There is no question about the good faith of the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir.

Mr. MILLER. It is simply a question-

Mr. McKELLAR. Of facts.

Mr. MILLER. I think they misunderstand the Budget report. The key is further pointed out at the bottom of page 49. The Budget report recommends $875,000,000, but in the break-down of that $875,000,000 they account for only $750,000,000 expended, leaving $125,000,000 to be carried over into the next fiscal year for which checks will be outstanding. There is the trouble about the whole controversy. I do not think Colonel Harrington is mistaken. I do not believe Senators can read this hearing and reach the conclusion that he is mistaken.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am absolutely sure he is not mistaken. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to advert to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas. The Budget to which the Senator refers has a very unusual thing in it. It has two columns; in one the amount to be expended is $725,000,000, and in the other the amount to be appropriated is $875,000,000. But in another item there is a total of $1,740,000,000 to be expended, and $1,740,000,000 to be appropriated; that is, in the one case, somehow, a mysterious distinction has been drawn between the amount to be appropriated and the amount to be expended.

At the beginning of the fiscal year there are certain obligations incurred during the preceding fiscal year, to be paid by checks drawn afterward, but to be paid out of the money appropriated for the preceding fiscal year. In this situation the question raised is that the colonel said he had enough money to last him until the 7th of February.

Mr. MILLER. That is true.

Mr. ADAMS. Now he asks for money to begin on the 1st of February. He says he needs the money a second time. Mr. MILLER. That is true; and that 7 days will be consumed in the payment of bills that will be due on February 7. He says so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me call attention to the fact that under the set-up the colonel has, that identical thing will be true on the 1st day of July.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose we do not appropriate another cent after July 1. If we do not appropriate another cent after July 1, what we appropriate will run us to the 7th of July.

Mr. ADAMS. No; the Senator is entirely in error about running until the 7th of July, because without another appropriation the officials cannot run a minute after the 1st of July.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take money to pay the debts.

Mr. ADAMS. No; they will not be paying debts in the first week in July. They will be paying debts in June.

Mr. MILLER. Suppose we appropriate $725,000,000 in this joint resolution. Colonel Harrington says the maximum he can expend for relief will be $625,000,000, meaning that he will have to carry over $100,000,000 to take care of the obligations that will accrue after July 1, 1939.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt for just one second?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. Here is a very obvious error of the Federal fiscal system. In the first part of the fiscal year money comes over to Colonel Harrington just as at the end of the fiscal year it goes over; so if he gets $725,000,000 he will have $725,000,000 to spend, and no less than that.

Mr. MILLER. I quite agree with that. He does get a sum of money; but he is figuring that that money will be required to be expended by February 7th.

Mr. ADAMS. No.

Mr. MILLER. You are charging him twice and not giving him credit for it.

Mr. ADAMS. No; that is not the fact. Colonel Harrington says he has money in hand to pay all the bills which will be incurred up until the 7th of February. He will not pay them, of course, on the 7th; but he has the money, and those items are on the books, charged against him. Then he comes here and asks that he be given money a second time to pay the bills incurred between the 1st and the 7th of February.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is wrong. Colonel Harrington does not say that he has the money to pay the bills incurred up until the 7th of February.

Mr. ADAMS. No; he does not say it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to read exactly what Colonel Harrington says; and it will be so plain, in my judgment, that anybody in the world can understand it. I read from page 33 of the hearings:

Estimated status

This is the headline. This is not testimony. This is the headline in the middle of the page:

ESTIMATED STATUS OF W. P. A. FUND AS OF FEBRUARY 7, 1939

Colonel Harrington. That is correct. According to the best estimates I can make at this time, we will be completely out of funds, assuming that we are going to pay our bills, our just bills, by the 7th of February. And there will be no reserves for pay rolls available on that date.

Senator Hale. Your debts will be paid at that time? Colonel Harrington. There will be some bills not paid, for which money will be available.

We can understand that.

Senator Hale. But you will have the money to pay for them? Colonel Harrington. We will have the money to pay for them; yes, sir.

Senator Byrnes, You testified before the House committee, and I suppose it is a correct statement, that you will order material, say, in December and those bills will not come in until January. Is that right?

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir. Senator Byrnes. Therefore you have to have at this time on hand an amount of money sufficient to take care of these contractual obligations?

Colonel HARRINGTON. That is correct. Senator BYRNES. You have got that? Colonel HARRINGTON. We have that.

Senator Hale. And you have just put that aside?

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir. Senator Byrnes. Heretofore we have been told that at the end of Senator Byrnnes. Heretofore we have been told that at the end of the fiscal year, for instance, you have to rely on a reserve to carry on—a reserve to carry pay roll for 10 days or 2 weeks?

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir.

Senator Byrnnes. What I think the committee is anxious to know now is when you say that your money will be exhausted February 7, you mean that it will be exhausted because you have set aside out of available funds an amount sufficient to take care of your actual obligations for material?

Could anything be clearer or plainer than that question? And Colonel Harrington answered it in the same clear way:

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir. Senator Byrnes. An amount sufficient to carry your pay roll up to what day?

Colonel Harrington. About to the 7th of February.

Senator Byrnes. And if you pay your pay roll on February 7, then your statement is that you will have no funds left except the funds which have been set aside to meet these contractual obligations that are outstanding; is that correct?

that are outstanding; is that correct?

Colonel Harrington. That is correct; yes, sir.
Senator Byrnes. And that amount outstanding you set aside to take care of outstanding obligations is about how much?
Colonel Harrington. Probably about $50,000,000, Senator Byrnes.
I will ask to be permitted to submit that figure for the record.
Senator Byrnes. I judge from your statement that you have not got the exact figure or anything approximating it and you will put it in the record.
Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir: the figure is $48,500,000.

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir; the figure is $48,500,000.
Senator Adams. Well, do you have what is estimated as your unexpended balances on the 1st of January?
Colonel Harrington. About $311,000,000 for work projects and administration including unobligated balances already transferred from the 1937 act.

Senator Typings. That is mostly for material?

Colonel Harrington. That is the unexpended balance, Senator. That is the amount of money that remained in the Treasury as of Senator Typings. Colonel, this seems like a foolish question-

I do not think the Senator from Maryland can be accused of asking foolish questions.

Colonel, this seems like a foolish question, but in order that I may clear it up, when the 7th of February comes you will have no more money for anything.

Colonel Harrington. That is correct.

Senator Typings. On the other hand, how much of the balances that are obligated, but not yet due, which you have to hold out until you get your bills; how much additional work will that make beyond the 7th of February?

Colonel Harrington. None. Senator Townsend. Less than 2 weeks.

Colonel HARRINGTON. There will be no money available after February 7 to employ anyone.

Senator Typings. You say now you have about three hundred and some million set aside for contractual obligations which have not yet reached the point where you would pay them?

Colonel Harrington. That was as of the 1st of January.

He corrects the Senator in that statement.

That was as of the 1st of January.

Senator Typings. Now, that amount will probably be constant until you get pretty close to the 1st of February, because as you pay off one others will be coming in.

Colonel Harrington. That amount is necessarily going like that [indicating down]. Senator Typings. Yes; but to what extent will that make for employment after the money has actually been paid by you on the 7th of February in the communities where it is being spent?

Colonel HARRINGTON. On indirect employment? Senator Typings. On indirect.

Colonel Harrington. The materials have already been produced and in most instances delivered.

Senator Typings. I see. That answers my question.
Senator Adams. Go ahead, Colonel.
Senator Typings. That is exclusive of any sponsor's contribution. Colonel HARRINGTON. Yes, sir.

So it seems to me it is just as plain as the nose on a man's face that it will take a week to close up the accounts, and no persons at all will be employed after the 7th of February if this appropriation is not made. I cannot see how any mistake could occur about it. It is perfectly plain. I cannot understand how the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] gets the $56,000,000 he is talking about.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the view which the committee took as to the necessity of this so-called "escape clause." Could not the President do, without the "escape clause," everything he can do with it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course; but this is what I think about it. I may be wrong, and, if I am, I hope Senators who disagreed with me on the committee will correct me. way I look at it is that if we should appropriate $725,000,000, just as the House did, the belief would go out to the country that we were taking off 2,000,000 employees during cold weather, and that proviso was put in for that reason. I am going to get to those figures in just a moment.

Mr. BORAH. I am speaking about the portion of the joint resolution which says that the President may make recommendations and state the reasons for the recommenda-

Mr. McKELLAR. I feel this way about it: The matter was not discussed at the time, as I recall; but I came to the conclusion that that clause was put in in order to salve the thing over. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator from Tennessee would be more explicit, if he can be, in reply to the question of the Senator from Idaho. As I understand the Senator's question, he wants to know the effect of this proviso or "escape clause," as it is called, giving the President authority to make certain other recommendations. What good is it. anyway? No matter which side of the matter we take, he may do all those things. Is not that true?

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the Senator was such a wonderful lawyer that he was asking me the question in a rhetorical way, not expecting me to answer it. The President has every right this provision would give him to make another recommendation, and the President will make that recommendation.

Mr. BORAH. He has made it.

Mr. McKELLAR. He has made it. He has declared the emergency and asked for $875,000,000 to meet it.

Mr. NORRIS. Then what is the use of inserting that proviso in the law at all?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I yield so that the Senator may ask those who inserted the provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McKellar. I yield.
Mr. Barkley. As I understand that clause—and I am not attempting to interpret it, certainly not for the committee-if the President should decideMr. BORAH. What he has already decided?

Mr. BARKLEY. If he should decide in March what he knows now, and should come to the Congress in March and ask for what he is asking now, he must give the reasons for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. He has given the reasons at this time. Mr. BARKLEY. And the same reasons would apply then that apply now, that he needs the money in order to keep these people at work. He could not give us any more information in March or April than that he has given now. He could not give any more cogent reasons in March or April than he is giving now, so it seems to me that if he finds in March that he knows what he knows now, and comes to the Congress in March and tells us what he is telling us now, there might be a suspicion that the reasons he offers in March might not be as good as they are now.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that in all fairness to the committee there was in the minds of the committee a feeling that this $725,000,000 would not be enough, and there was an invitation, an indication that they would be very glad to hear a further statement in regard to that when a further appropriation was asked. I take it that was the reason the provision was inserted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator from Colorado, in charge of the bill, and who made the majority report, what was the reason for inserting this clause inviting the President to make an estimate and a statement of the facts constituting such emergency in the event more money was

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me propound a question. Would the Senator have any objection to asking the President to give us a full statement of the facts when he asks for an additional appropriation?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever. Mr. ADAMS. That is all it requires.

Mr. McKELLAR. The President would have a right to do that. He has already done that very thing. I shall read from what the President stated about this emergency, and if he made such a declaration in connection with the pending joint resolution, why would the majority of the committee insert that clause, when the President has done the very thing they are asking him to do in this very joint resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. I think I can satisfy the Senator. Mr. McKELLAR. I am satisfied now, but some others are not satisfied.

Mr. ADAMS. We heard much discussion about the fact that a great many people would be thrown out on the streets in the wintertime; that is, that it was a hard, barbarous proposal.

Mr. McKELLAR. But we provided for it.

Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. We provided for it in the first part of the proviso.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, to calm the timid folks, we provided a limit, and stated that Congress has the power to make additional appropriations; and we are suggesting to the President, to the Congress, to the people of the country, that if conditions develop which we do not anticipate, the Congress will be in session and, upon request by the President with a statement of facts, additional appropriations will be made to meet the conditions which may develop.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it does not say that they will be made. That is not in this measure. That is peculiarly conspicuous by its absence.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator would not expect us to make the promise.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me read the Senator's language. That thought is conspicuous by its absence:

Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President, in sub-mitting such estimate, shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency.

There is not a word there about agreeing to further appropriations. The President is merely to submit the facts. He has done that very thing.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator would not expect us to say in the joint resolution that whatever amount the President should ask for "is hereby appropriated"?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I would not. I have found from experience that is not wise.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to answer the question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. As I drafted the language, I desire to answer the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very happy if the Senator will, and I hope the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Nebraska, who asked the question, will pay attention.

Mr. BYRNES. I certainly hope so, because I merely desire to call their attention to the fact that the language which they have discussed as being so unusual is identical with the language carried in existing law, which was supported and voted for by the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Idaho, and the Senator from Nebraska. I did not see anything unusual in writing into the pending measure the exact language of the existing law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator read the language? Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I will. The existing law provides:

Except that upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance, which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, the same may be waived or modified by the President, who shall fully set forth the reasons therefor at the time of any such action and communicate the same to Congress in connection with any estimates for additional appropriations to carry out the purposes of this title.

We merely provided the language, and I know the Senators will say it is the identical language, and that there is nothing unusual in asking them to vote into this measure what they voted for when the existing law was before us for action.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I merely desire to state briefly what my understanding of the matter is. This language was inserted because the committee, poring over different estimates and figures, did not regard the President's figures as accurate, but did regard the committee's figures as accurate as embodied in the joint resolution. But should it prove that the committee was wrong and the President was right, the President could come before Congress and get an additional appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Virginia has stated the facts as I understand them. That was the reason; they doubted that the President was accurate, and they wanted him to be more accurate in the future than he was in the past.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is a wholly different reason from the reason for the insertion of the provision in the existing law just read. In the first place, the language in the existing law was never called to the attention of the Senate, was never debated. This comes here now as a controverted question, and I am merely asking why the language was inserted in the joint resolution. The Senator from Virginia has stated it was inserted because the committee believed the President to be inaccurate in his figures, and that he should be given a chance to make them accurate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there was no controversy at all about this language. It was adopted unanimously. Neither the Senator from Tennessee nor any other Senator questioned it. The Senator from Idaho is in error in regarding this as a controverted question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator admit that the President has a perfect right to do this very thing without a line in this measure?

Mr. BYRNES. The President certainly has a perfect right, but he had the right last year, when the Senator voted to include the same provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no necessary analogy between the situation which resulted in inserting that language in the existing law, and the present situation.

We provided that if the President should discover later an emergency which was not then in sight, he could come in and do these things, but in this case he has already the emergency in his mind, and he has asked for the amount which he feels the emergency requires. He does not have to wait until March or May in order to present the facts which he thinks justify the appropriation for which he asks.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator is absolutely mistaken. The President did not write this language. The Congress appropriated a certain amount of money to carry on these activities to a certain date, and provided that if that appropriation did not last to that date, the President could submit an estimate for a deficiency, and should accompany that estimate with a statement of the emergency justifying it. In the pending measure the committee recommends the same thing, that the $725,000,000 is to carry on the work to June 30, and if prior to that time an emergency, in the opinion of the President, justifies his submitting an estimate, he must again accompany it with a statement of the facts constituting the emergency. It is the same thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. I still insist there is a difference in the situations, because the language to which the Senator refers was inserted in order to take care of an emergency which the President might later discover, but did not then foresee.

Mr. BYRNES. And that is the purpose of the provision in the pending joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. The President already foresees the emergency and has asked for the amount of money he thinks is necessary to take care of it.

Mr. BYRNES. The Congress would say by the joint resolution that it appropriates now to take care of the situation until June 30, and if the President later finds that an emergency exists, he can come to Congress and ask for a deficiency.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations was confronted with the fact that the Committee on Appropriations of the other branch of Congress had differed with the President's conjecture. It was nothing but a conjecture. All of this is conjecture. No one has ever been able to tell us for one moment how many unemployed people there are in the country. The administration will not take a census of them. They do not want to know. They want to magnify the number so that they can get all the money possible out of the Treasury. But the Senate committee was confronted with the fact that the House committee, and the House itself, by a decisive majority, had differed with the President's conjecture, and therefore we did our own conjecturing and our own figuring, and embodied the result in the joint resolution; and that is the reason why this provision is in the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, now, as to the emergency: On behalf of the minority, I submitted a report in which I stated that "if the majority would not take the President's recommendation as to the emergency of the present appropriation, it is exceedingly doubtful whether the majority" would take his recommendation as to any subsequent appropriation.

This is what the President gave as the reason for the emergency:

However, during the period prior to the adoption of this legislation, when employment was increasing, the increase in the number employed on the Works Progress Administration program did not keep pace with the need of employment, because the W. P. A. had funds to employ only part of those who were out of jobs.

Again, the President said:

The critical foreign situation has had an adverse effect upon American business and industrial employment in this country and has been an unexpected deflationary force affecting the prices of commodities entering into world markets, such as certain of our important commercial commodities. This has accentuated relief problems in important areas in the country. In addition, the hurricane devastated large areas in New England last summer, seriously dislocating industry and trade in the northeastern section of the country and adding to the relief burden in that area.

Mr. President, those were some of the views the President expressed as to why he asked for this appropriation of $875,-000,000. If I read the record correctly, there is not a scintilla of evidence given by any witness who appeared before the committee to prove that $725,000,000 would do the contemplated work.

Let us now consider for a moment the plan of the majority. Their plan is to have substantially the same number employed on relief in February and March as are employed in

The plan of the majority is to have 3,000,000 persons on the rolls during all of January. There are that many on the rolls now. There will be about 3,000,000 persons on the rolls in February and about 3,000,000 on the rolls in March. In April there will be 2,350,000. In May there will be 1,650,000. In June there will be 1,050,000 W. P. A. workers on relief.

Mr. President, it would be a grand thing if that plan could be carried out. Is there a Senator except the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams], who has already spoken, who thinks that we could reduce the number of those on relief and those eligible for relief from 4,100,000 persons in December to 1,050,000 persons in June, a period of 6 months? Does any Senator believe we could cut off three-fourths of the present number from the rolls?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That would be the more abundant life, God knows.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Michigan says that would be the more abundant life. It would take an abundant amount of food to feed the 3,000,000 who would be taken off the rolls. The Senator admits that. We all have to admit that. I wish our country would increase in prosperity to such an extent that that reduction could be made in 6 months, but I do not believe the most optimistic of those who want to cut down the relief rolls believe they can be cut down in any such fashion as that. If that be true, then why try to disarrange and break down the plan for activities in this matter? It is impossible to cut down the number of those who need relief. Senators, we are not going to be able to cut down the rolls 75 percent in 6 months. It is impossible to do so. Yet that is the plan of the majority of the committee.

If $725,000,000 is appropriated, and no more is hereafter appropriated, we are going to have three-fourths of those who are on relief or who are eligible for relief taken off of the rolls before June. I say it would be a wonderful thing, a grand thing to do that. I wish we could do it. But I do not see how it is possible to do it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, how many will still be on the rolls if the full appropriation requested were made?

Mr. McKellar. Under the full appropriation the number would be reduced to 2,700,000. If we could have a reduction of nearly 400,000—381,000 persons—in the next 5 months, we would be doing exceedingly well. Why do I say that? I do not have the exact figures before me, but in 1938, between the same dates, we did not do that well. In 1937 we did not do that well. In 1936 we did not do that well. Nor have we done that well at any time since the program of Federal relief has been undertaken and the W. P. A. has been put into operation. I do not see why we should believe we can so far surpass the record of the past. I think we can improve on it. I think the program proposed will provide a great improvement.

Mr. President, all the matters I have made reference to were taken into consideration by the W. P. A. in making their recommendations. They took into consideration that the farmers would be more busy in April and May than they are now. They took into consideration in preparing these figures that P. W. A. would begin to work by that time. They took into consideration that private industry would take up a good deal of the slack in unemployment. They took into consideration the fact that some States may undertake to pass additional laws dealing with unemployment, laws having to do with old-age pensions.

But the Senate committee has done something to add to the number. How? By a provision in this measure that those over 65 years can go back on the rolls. It is a very wise provision; I voted for it; but it adds to the list of those that have to be appropriated for. So under those circumstances it seems to me we cannot go as far as the committee has gone at this time.

I believe in the honesty and integrity of Colonel Harrington. I believe in his accuracy with respect to figures. I believe he is absolutely correct in his statement of the financial affairs of the W. P. A. I have not seen anything which would lead me to disbelieve them. I think the W. P. A. officials know more about the subject than we do. This is one question out of hundreds with which we have to deal; it is the only question with which they have to deal. They have been working on it all the time. They have been working on it for years. They know more about it than we do. I think we should follow their judgment. Those circumstances have led me to take the position which I have taken about the matter, that we ought to appropriate $875,000,000. I have prepared an amendment which is now on the desk, and I shall offer it at the proper time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he sits down?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose we pass the joint resolution in which we provide for $875,000,000. Then outside of those for whom relief is provided by the measure we have the estimated number of 725,000 persons who have made their applications, and have had their applications examined and approved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But those persons have not thus far been taken care of.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. So if we pass the bill carrying the largest amount, $875,000,000, we are still leaving outside of any help those seven-hundred-thousand-odd persons, which means, when we consider their dependents, a figure something very much greater.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The condition of some of those 725,000 persons is simply indescribable. I know that. If the $875,000,000 should prove larger than required for the purposes set forth in the measure, could the remainder not be used as direct relief for those who are in miserable condition?

Mr. McKellar. The bill as reported by the committee does not provide for direct relief. I will say this to the Senator. It is the hope of the W. P. A. that by reason of the slack in those on W. P. A. that will come from increased employment in industry, by the taking up of men and women on the farms, or by reason of any that are taken care of under old-age pension laws passed by the States, or any that are taken care of by general improvements in business conditions, they may work out the general plan of relief with this $875,000,000. That is the hope, and that is the purpose. But I, like the Senator from Idaho, doubt exceedingly whether $875,000,000 will accomplish that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. So far as the hope of the administration of the working out of relief to those particular people through the method suggested by the Senator is concerned, the relief is too long deferred.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is one other matter-

Mr. BORAH. These people need help right now. They need it tonight.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some of them do.

There is one other feature in the joint resolution. I do not know that I can lay my hands on it at the moment. Unfortunately, there are some who from the very beginning have made a habit of being on relief.

Mr. BORAH. So far as taking people off relief who ought to be off relief is concerned, we certainly all agree about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is provided for. There was no difference of opinion in the committee with respect to that

Mr. BORAH. Taking them off has been too long deferred, especially during election time, and they ought to be taken off. We can all agree upon that. I should like to ask the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] to draw an amendment which would take care of the situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has already been done.

Mr. BORAH. Then let us draw another amendment to provide some way by which the Administrator can take care of those who need work relief, or direct relief, and who will not get it under the provisions of the joint resolution as it is

Mr. McKELLAR. I may say to the Senator that there is a reason for that. If I may explain the reason, I understand that one of the reasons for the 750,000 persons not going on relief is that in certain instances, for example, a plumber is called for from civil life, and a man may not be qualified, and may not get on the rolls for that reason. If an agricultural worker is required, and only an industrial worker is available, the industrial worker cannot get on agricultural relief, and, conversely, the agricultural worker cannot get on industrial relief. That situation accounts in part for the 750.000.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Like the Senator, I think the matter ought to be taken care of, and ought to be taken care of in the pending legislation.

Mr. BORAH. It should be taken care of in the joint resolution. In the case of women and children, for example, it is not a question of carpenters, plumbers, and so forth. Such cases ought to be taken care of, and they ought to be taken care of by this joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. We cannot do it with $725,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. There is no reason for providing money for a portion of the people who are in distress, and not providing it for another portion who are equally in distress.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Tennessee has just said that the situation cannot be taken care of with $725,000,000. Can we do it with $875,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think so. I give as authority the Administration itself. It thinks so.

Mr. HATCH. In my State at this time 10,500 persons are receiving work relief. I do not know whether or not the Senator has the figures before him. I am quoting from memory. I am sure the figures are substantially correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the figures somewhere.

Mr. HATCH. In December we had 13,500 on the rolls and 3,000 were dropped. They were not taken into private employment, but the rolls were reduced by 3,000. Even in December there were 6,000 who had been certified as eligible to receive work relief who had no jobs. Adding that number to the 3,000 by which the rolls were reduced, we obtain approximately 9,000 who are now certified and eligible to receive relief and who have no jobs, as against approximately 10,000 who have employment.

If that percentage prevails throughout the country, I do not see how $875,000,000 will make much difference as compared to $725,000,000. The situation will not be met.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Administration has plans by which it believes it can work out the problem with $875,000,000. It cannot work it out with $725,000,000 and has so stated.

Mr. HATCH. Approximately 4,000,000 have been certified for relief all winter, and only 3,000,000 have been employed.

Mr. McKELLAR. About 3,000,000 have been certified for relief, and approximately 750,000 are not now receiving relief.

Take the case of the Senator's State: As of December 31, there were 11,800 on relief in his State.

Mr. HATCH. The number has been reduced.

Mr. McKELLAR. The number has been considerably reduced. If the joint resolution providing for $725,000,000 is enacted, the number will be reduced to 4,000 on the 1st of June. That will be the situation in the Senator's State.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see the Senator from Missouri on his feet. May I call his attention to the situation in Missouri? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Before the Senator does that, will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

The Senator says he relies entirely on the estimates of the Administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I do not say that I rely entirely on them; but I think they have very great weight, especially in the absence of any proof to the contrary. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it not a fact that the Administration came to Congress during the last session, when appropriations were being made for the current fiscal year, and estimated that a certain sum would be necessary to carry the work through the year?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not through the year, but until March.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Until March. The Administration now comes back with a request for a tremendous and very surprising deficiency appropriation, which, it is said, will be sufficient to carry on the work until the end of the fiscal year. Has the Senator any assurance that if we appropriate $875,000,000 we shall not be asked to make a second deficiency appropriation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt it. I do not believe so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On the basis of the figures of the relief administration itself, is it not true that after the scalingdown process has been completed there will be a greater number on the W. P. A. rolls on the 1st of June than there were on the 1st of January 1938 or the 1st of January 1937?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. Under the Administration plan of relief there are now 3,081,000 on relief, and on the 1st of June the number will be 2,700,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When does the Administration propose to let those persons off?

Mr. McKELLAR. The joint resolution provides that perennial relief workers shall not be further certified.

Mr. HATCH. What does the Senator mean by "perennial relief workers"?

Mr. McKELLAR. Those who have been on relief for so many years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like very much to see such a provision enacted. I do not understand that there is any such provision in the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no such provision in the joint resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If such a provision were put in the joint resolution, we should still have to rely for its enforcement upon the very persons who have violated that principle in the past.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not agree with the Senator. I do not believe there has been a violation of law.

I wish to say that in the State of Missouri, as of December 31, there were 109,100 on relief. If the joint resolution goes through, as recommended by the majority, providing $725,-000,000, the number will be cut to 37,200, or about one-third.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator vield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator understand that the relief rolls in Missouri will be reduced from 109,100 to 37,200?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what the statement indicates.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, that is a remarkable statement. I should like to have it further verified and exemplified.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator wish to look at the statement?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care about that. If that statement is true, relief in the State of Missouri is to be reduced more than two-thirds, which is entirely out of proportion to the amount of the reduction in the appropriation, which is 17 percent.

Mr. McKELLAR. When the Senator begins to talk about percentages, I plead ignorance.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator certainly does not mean to stand on the proposition that because the Congress reduces an appropriation 17 percent below the estimate, the actual relief extended is to be reduced more than two-thirds, which is the figure the Senator has read. If so, I suggest that there is very serious discrimination against Missouri, and I expect to go into that in great detail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. There is no discrimination against any State. According to the estimate of the W. P. A. under the joint resolution the reduction is limited to 5 percent for the first 2 months, February and March. We start with 3,000,-000 persons on the rolls, and in March the number is reduced to 2,850,000. With the reduced appropriation, the necessity of keeping the fund and the number in February and March practically as they are now makes it necessary to bring about a more precipitate reduction after the 1st of April. Every dollar of the $725,000,000 is accounted for in the estimates. So the number is first reduced from 3,000,000 to 2.850,000. The next jump is to 2,350,000. The next jump, in May, is to 1,650,000, and by June the number is down to 1,050,000. So, in the 5 months we shall have taken off the rolls practicaly 2,000,000 persons.

The way the figures work out, at $61 apiece, the entire $725,000,000 is taken up. In the table which has been prepared, showing the resulting reduction of employment under the W. P. A. in all the States, the proportion is no greater in Missouri than it is anywhere else. There is no discrimination against any State.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to contend that with an appropriation of $725,000,000 the relief rolls would be reduced two-thirds?

Mr. McKELLAR. Two-thirds.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And with an appropriation of $875,000,000 they would be kept at approximately the same figure?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not the same figure; no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like an explanation of how the Administrator proposes to make the $150,000,000 go as far as the Senator says it will.

Mr. BARKLEY. With the figure $875,000,000, the reduction would be gradual. A total reduction by the 1st of July of 300,000 persons is contemplated. With the figure of $725,-000,000, and the limitation of the reduction to 5 percent for February and March the number would be reduced to 1,050,-000, and there is no way to escape it. The Senator may take the figures himself, add up the number, and multiply by $61. The number becomes 1,050,000 on the 1st day of July. However, with the larger amount, starting in gradually and not having to make a precipitate reduction at any particular stage in the descent, we wind up on the 1st day of July-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. With more than we had to start with.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; with 2,700,000. In that connection, will say to the Senator-

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor and has yielded to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Something was said a while ago about the number of persons on the rolls on December 31, 1937. On December 31, 1937, the number was 1,629,000, and on January 1 it was 1,900,000. Then began an increase during the months up to December 31, when there were 3,081,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for one further question? Then I will not trespass further on his time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator from Kentucky have any figures as to how many people have been taken back into private employment during the last 6 months? Is any weight given to those figures in the figures which are now being advanced as to the number it is necessary to carry on the rolls during the winter?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that it is estimated that during the last 12 months almost a million unemployed have been taken back into private employment. It is also estimated that for every five men taken back into private employment only one is taken from W. P. A. rolls. So in any number who are taken back, whether it is a million or two million, the proportion is about four unemployed who are not on W. P. A. rolls to one who is on such rolls. So when a million are taken back into private employment only about two hundred thousand are taken off the rolls of W. P. A.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So that we have remained in the same situation as the frog in the well that jumped 1 foot and fell back 2 feet in an effort to get out of the well? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. No; because that famous frog jumped 1 foot and fell back 2 feet, while in this case we jump 2 feet and fall back only 1.

Mr. GLASS. But that frog went to hell, and that is where we are going. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that he went to hell, but I know he was in the well and never got out.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico. Mr. HATCH. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question, because I desire to have this matter clear in my mind if I can, and I find a great deal of difficulty in understanding the figures about which the Senator from Missouri has been talking. The conclusion is-and I want to be sure that I am right—that if we appropriate the full amount of $875,000,000 the rolls will be gradually reduced, beginning now; we will begin to let men off in February and March and throughout the whole period; but under the smaller appropriation of $725,000,000 there will be no reduction in February and March. Therefore, under the smaller appropriation which the committee has submitted, during the cold months, when, as we have heard, so much distress and suffering is likely to occur, more good will be done than will be done under the larger appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. The Senator does not understand the figures.

Mr. HATCH. I am frank to say I do not understand them. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Neither does anyone else.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me give the Senator the figures. There is no difference between the figures as to February and March under the two plans.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; then how can you begin gradually to reduce the rolls in February and not have any difference in the figures? They will remain the same, but they will be reduced. Is that correct? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all; but there is more money in the first proposition than there is in the second; and it will go further. Does the Senator not understand that?

Mr. HATCH. I understand that there is more money in an appropriation of $875,000,000 than there is in an appropriation of $725,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator understands that, he understands the whole proposition, for that is the whole thing.

Mr. HATCH. But that is not so as to the months of February and March.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks the views of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the views of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McKellar, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following minority views (to accompany H. J. Res. 83):

The minority of the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution H. J. Res. 83, the relief bill, disagrees with the majority on the all-important section of the bill which accepts the $725,000,000 as passed by the House instead of the $875,000,000 as recommended by the President and the Bureau of the Budget. The minority believes that the $875,000,000 figure ought to have been substituted for the $725,000,000.

FACTS VS. GUESSING

The minority submits that the $725,000,000 is more or less of a guess of the majority because of the very language of an amendment attached thereto. In part, that language is as follows:

"Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which, in the opinion of the President, would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President, in submitting such estimate, shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency."

Unquestionably, the majority felt that the sum was not sufficient or they would not have submitted this language.

The minority further submits that, if the majority would not take the President's recommendation as to the emergency of the present appropriation, it is exceedingly doubtful whether the ma-present appropriation, it is exceedingly doubtful whether the majority would accept any further reason of the President as to why an additional amount should be appropriated.

an additional amount should be appropriated.

In his message, the President said:
"However, during the period prior to the adoption of this legislation when employment was increasing, the increase in the number employed on the Works Progress Administration program did not keep pace with the need of employment, because the W. P. A. had funds to employ only part of those who were out of jobs."

Again, the President said:
"The critical foreign situation has had an adverse effect upon

"The critical foreign situation has had an adverse effect upon American business and industrial employment in this country and has been an unexpected deflationary force affecting the prices of has been an unexpected deflationary force affecting the prices of commodities entering into world markets, such as certain of our important commercial commodities. This has accentuated relief problems in important areas in the country. In addition, the hurricane devastated large areas in New England last summer, seriously dislocating industry and trade in the northeastern section of the country and adding to the relief burden in that area."

The President then points out that the relief rolls increased from 2,900,000 at the beginning of July 1938 to a peak of 3,350,000. He then said during the past few weeks the number has been declining, and
"On December 24, 1938, the total had fallen to 3,112,000, and it

'On December 24, 1938, the total had fallen to 3,112,000, and it is expected that the employment during the month of January will approximate 3,000,000."

The foregoing figures include employment provided with funds The foregoing figures include employment provided with funds transferred by the W. P. A. to other Federal agencies, an average of 90,000 persons are thus employed under conditions which are entirely similar to those obtaining in the W. P. A. program.

Under the President's recommendation based on the facts and not upon opinion, he felt that there should have been 3,000,000 workers in February and March and that this number would be diminished in April and May to an average of 2,700,000 in June.

The President also pointed out that the W. P. A. program is at present being conducted at a cost of $61 per worker per month, of which only $2 is overhead administrative expense.

which only $2 is overhead administrative expense.

As before stated, the President's recommendation is based upon fact and experience and upon the recommendations of those who have been working on this problem for years.

THE PLAN OF THE MAJORITY

Under the plan of the majority, the number on the rolls in February may be 3,000,000, or it may be 2,850,000, and the same is true of March, but after that the number will be reduced so precipitately that there will not be on the rolls more than about 1,050,000 at the end of June. Of course, the Congress can arbitrarily do that if it desires. It could take them all off the rolls on the 7th of February if they refused to appropriate any money, but it seems to us that it is beyond the scope of reason to believe that we ought to reduce the numbers on relief from 3,350,000 in November or December to less than a third of that number at the end of June. To cut relief by two-thirds in 6 months cannot be based upon any facts or figures shown in the record or known to any Senator or Congressman. The best that can be said of it is that it is an arbitrary reduction without regard to questions of that it is an arbitrary reduction without regard to questions of actual need.

The extent to which these reductions are arbitrary can be appreciated by the effect this reduction would have on W. P. A. employment in the States and cities. Of course, we do not know how the employment quotas will be adjusted among the States by the Administrator, but in the following tables we have assumed, for illustrative purposes, the same percentage reduction in each State from December 31 employment to June 30.

The proposal of $875,000,000 made by the President, the officials of the W. P. A., and the Bureau of the Budget is based upon experience and upon common knowledge; the figures were reached after careful investigation, after considering every phase of the after careful investigation, after considering every phase of the situation, and represented an orderly, well-thought-out program of reduction through fiscal year 1940. The figure of $725,000,000 submitted by the majority and by a majority of the House of Representatives is based on no experience or previous knowledge, upon no estimates, and it is admitted in the resolution as reported by the Senate committee itself that the majority is doubtful about it because it invites the President to make another recommendation. Organized labor and the mayors of the cities are unanimous in recommending $875,000,000 as against $725,000,000.

SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND NOT ON RELIEF

In addition to the numbers now on the W. P. A., Col. F. C. Harrington, the W. P. A. Administrator, says:

"We know there are about 750,000 persons in the United States that are certified and eligible for W. P. A. employment and we are not employing at this time" (p. 39).

In other words, the appropriations that we have already made and this appropriation bave not been able to take care of the certified In other words, the appropriations that we have already made and this appropriation have not been able to take care of the certified and eligible and needy persons who have asked for relief and who have been declared eligible for W. P. A. In addition to the more than 3,000,000 persons now on W. P. A. In other words, even the President's figures do not include this 750,000, but the majority says that you can absolutely disregard this 750,000 and absolutely disregard the 2,000,000 who will have to be dropped under their plan by the end of June. If conditions warrant such a situation on June 30 next, we shall indeed be happy. But who, in the face of our recent experiences with relief, can believe any such thing? The majority says that the number of those needing relief will be reduced in several ways:

1. That a great many will be preparing crops in the spring and

The majority says that the number of those needing relief will be reduced in several ways:

1. That a great many will be preparing crops in the spring and will not be needing relief. (This well-known fact was allowed for in the President's estimate of $875,000,000.)

2. That a great many others will be employed on P. W. A. projects. (This was also allowed for in the President's estimate.)

3. That many of the States will adopt or increase the benefits in connection with old-age pension and aid to dependent children provisions under the Social Security Act, and that unemployment compensation benefits will go into effect in many States, and that these actions will take up a great deal of the slack. Well, the States may do so. It is possible, of course, but to our minds it is exceedingly doubtful. (The joint resolution itself contains a provision "That no requirement of eligibility for employment under such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as amended, shall be effective which prohibits the employment of persons 65 years of age or over or women with dependent children." As a matter of fact, the W. P. A. has already taken action to drop such persons, and the number remaining on the rolls is negligible. As to unemployment compensation, the effects will not be noticeable in the W. P. A. for the next 6 months, because in order to be eligible for such benefits workers must have been employed in private industry during the past 6 months. This could thus affect only new persons coming on to the rolls. A person now on the W. P. A. who would be dropped from the rolls under a $725,000,000 appropriation obviously would not be eligible for unemployment compensation benefits.) benefits.)

4. That there will be an increase in private employment, and God grant that this may be so, but if there is an unusual increase in all four of these activities it could not justify firing 2,000,000 workers from the W. P. A. which must be done for the $725,000,000 to be adequate.

All of these factors were taken into account in the President's recommendation of $875,000,000. In fact, Colonel Harrington testified that-

"This recommendation was based on the assumption that the recovery which has occurred since July 1938 will continue at an increased rate. In fact, a further increase of 1,500,000 in private employment between December and June will be necessary to bring about the contemplated reduction of 400,000 in W. P. A. employment of the private of workers during the contemplated reduction of 400,000 in W. P. A. employment of the private of the priv ployment, if arbitrary discharges of workers during the winter period of most severe need are to be avoided.

"This estimated increase of 1,500,000 workers in private employment includes those who obtain jobs working for private contractors in connection with the Public Works Administration program and also those who find work in the factories as the result of the indirect employment of the Public Works Administration

"On the basis of past experience, that estimate appears to be on the optimistic side.

"I want to make it perfectly clear that this estimated increase of 1,500,000 workers in private industry will be drawn from the entire group of the 11,500,000 unemployed and that at best W. F. A. group of the 11,500,000 unemployed and that at best W. P. A. workers cannot expect to get more than their proportionate share of these jobs. In December the 3,100,000 persons working on W. P. A. jobs represented 27 percent of an estimated 11,500,000 unemployed at that time. If W. P. A. workers obtain 27 percent of the 1,500,000 jobs, this would mean a reduction of about 400,000 in W. P. A. employment between December 1938 and June 1939" (p. 40, hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate).

We may later vote large sums to build battleships, airplanes, and provide other armaments. We might well question whether that type of expenditure, even from a national-defense standpoint, is of more value than preserving the underlying strength of the Nation—the strength, health, and morale of its citizens. As the President said in his message to Congress on January 4, 1939:

"Under modern conditions what we mean by 'adequate defense'—a policy subscribed to by all—must be divided into three elements. s. First, we must have armed forces and defenses strong to ward off sudden attack against strategic positions and key facilities essential to ensure sustained resistance and ultimate victory. Secondly, we must have the organization and location of those key facilities so that they may be immediately utilized and rapidly expanded to meet all needs without danger of serious interruption by enemy attack * * *.

"If these first two essentials are reasonably provided for, we must be able confidently to invoke the third element, the underlying strength of citizenship—the self-confidence, the ability, the imagination, and the devotion that give the staying power to see things through magnation, and the devotion that give the staying power to see things through.

"A strong and united nation may be destroyed if it is unprepared against sudden attack. But even a nation well armed and well organized from a strictly military standpoint may, after a period of time, meet defeat if it is unnerved by self-distrust, endangered by class prejudice, by dissension between capital and labor, by false economy, and by other unsolved social problems at home."

The minority think that it is quite as important, if not more important, to conserve our manpower rather than to build additional airplanes, additional battleships, and to add enormously to our Army at this time.

Army at this time.

The Senate majority disagrees with the House in its reduction for February and March and requires substantially the same amount to be spent in February and March as was expended in January. So far so good. But when it comes to April, May, and June, there is only $363,000,000 left for those 3 months as against $362,000,000 for February and March. This amounts to a cut from about 3,000,000 persons to 1,050,000 in 5 months. In other words, for those now obtaining relief, there is a cut of two-thirds in 5 months.

Is it possible this Senate is going to take the view that we can cut off two-thirds of the W. P. A. work in 5 months? Is it sensible? Is it wise? Is it defensible? Is it humane? We say it is not any of these things!

Respectfully submitted.

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not intend at this time to do more than make reference to the subject that has been discussed within the last few minutes. First, as to the amendment pending and the provisions of the amendment to remove from the rolls those who are not actually in need, the Senator from Idaho has referred to the wisdom of some such effort being made. I wish to call to the attention of the Senator from Idaho and the Members of the Senate the result of an investigation made last April by the special committee appointed to investigate unemployment and relief. We sent investigators to five cities, namely, Atlanta, Baltimore, New York, Omaha, and Pittsburgh. We endeavored to select cities in different sections of the country in order to get a cross section. We wanted to ascertain something about those who are on the rolls, how long they had been there.

In the five cities mentioned there were on the Works Progress Administration rolls at the time of the investigation 26,736 workers classified as skilled workers. Of this number, 7,982 were interviewed. Of the number interviewed, 5,049, or 63 percent, when asked the question, stated that they had other employment. Of the total number interviewed, 6,454, or 81 percent, had been on the Works Progress Administration pay rolls constantly since January 1937

Of the 5,049 workers who admitted outside earnings, 4,312, or 85 percent, had such other employment during the same month for which they had already received pay from the Works Progress

A little less than one-fourth (1,036 of 4,312, or 24 percent) were found to be working in outside employment at the same occupations at which they were employed by Works Progress Administration and at lower hourly rate of pay than they were paid by

W. P. A.

Of the 4,312 workers who had outside earnings during the same month of their employment by Works Progress Administration, 2,389 gave the names of their employers. A number of these employers were interviewed, namely, 1,330. In the great majority of cases the amount of the outside earnings was much in excess of the amount stated by the worker himself.

That shows the necessity for an investigation such as is directed by the amendment now pending. If the investigation is made, as the Administrator promises, he will remove a sufficient number who really are not in need as will make it possible to give employment to many who have been certified. It does not follow that because a man has been employed constantly since January 1937 that he is not in need, but it does follow in the vast majority of cases that he should be better able to take care of himself. Coming right home here to the District of Columbia, a carpenter will be employed at an hourly wage of $1.75 an hour. The security wage is $73 per month. When he has worked 42 hours he has made his security wage. That is five 8-hour days. He cannot work any more for the remainder of the month; he is laid off; he can go fishing, he can frolic, or he can go to other work. He can, for instance, go to Chevy Chase and when he is asked to build a garage for someone he can receive employment at a lower hourly wage and put some union workman out of business.

He will take a job away from the man who has never been on relief. If such an investigation is made, it will be possible under the $725,000,000 appropriation to put many on the rolls.

The Director told the subcommittee that in New York State 21 percent had been on the rolls since the beginning of the program. That is what he found by the sampling process. It is not an absolutely correct process, but by taking sample cases of workmen they find out how long they have been on the rolls, and 21 percent have been on the rolls ever since this program was started. If we go into this matter, we will find it possible to make places for many on W. P. A. projects.

Now, about the figures. It will be remembered the Senator asked me a few moments ago why it was that whenever we had a relief bill we had so many sets of figures. I will admit that seems inevitable. One difficulty is that my good friend from Tennessee, whose table is in the minority report, does not figure exactly as the majority of the committee figured. If Senators will look on page 7 of his report, the report from which he has been reading, they will find that he gives what he says, or somebody says, would be done under the appropriation of $725,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is what the Administrator says would

Mr. BYRNES. That is what I should like to know. If these figures are from the Administrator, that is exactly what I want to know because I never like to say unkind things about any department official. He is not here to answer for himself, and it is not fair. But if the Administrator presented these figures to the Senator, as he says, then the Senate ought to know exactly what the Administrator has done. Who says that this $725,000,000 would be allotted in this way? The Administrator? How would he allot it? He says he will allot $183,000,000 for the month of February. The Senator from Colorado has heretofore explained that the Administrator has said-and no one will question that the Administrator has said—he has sufficient money to pay all his expenses up to February 7. I know he has more, but he says he has sufficient to keep going up to that date. Then, if he has enough up to that date, what excuse has he for sending to the Senate a table saying that the $725,000,000, which the other House provided and which is the amount recommended by the committee, would be apportioned so as to spend $183,000,000 for 3,000,000 workers for the whole month of February? He has already got, he says, enough for the first 7 days and that leaves only 21 days; that is, 3 weeks. I will state what it would cost, not as the Administrator would have it figured, but as the committee would figure it.

From February 7 to March 1 is 3 weeks, and that is the time we have to provide for. How many persons are there? Three million. How much will it cost? Sixty-one dollars per man per month. For 3 weeks this amounts to $137,-250,000.

From March 1 to April 1, reduce it by the 5 percent allowed in the joint resolution, and we have 2,850,000 persons. At $61 a month it amounts to $173,850,000.

From April 1 to May 1 we have 2,500,000 persons. At $61 a month it amounts to $152,500,000.

From May 1 to June 1 we have 2,300,000 persons at $61 per man per month which amounts to $140,300,000.

From June 1 to July 1 we have 2,000,000 men. At $61 a month it is $122,000,000, making a total of $726,900,000.

That makes up the total of $726,900,000 without ever reducing the number of men on the roll below the figure of 2,000,000.

How does Colonel Harrington arrive at this result? If you look at the figures, I will tell you the difference. The Senator from Tennessee has not called attention to it. He said they were not his figures; but what has happened is that the Administrator sent this statement up here:

He says the employment at the end of each month will be 3,000,000. He charges up 3,000,000 for the whole 28 days of February.

Then the next month he says the employment will be 2,850,000. He says there will be an average employment of 2,925,000. Instead of calculating 2,850,000 at $61 a month, he calculates 2,925,000 at $61 a month. Consequently, he uses up nearly $179,000,000. He puts in an average every month. He submitted innumerable statements to the Appropriations Committee, and never before this occasion has such a statement been submitted to us.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is perfectly obvious how the Administrator arrives at that figure. He starts out on March 1 with 3,000,000 men, and on the 15th with 2,925,000 men, and on the 31st with 2,850,000 men; so the average would be the number on the 15th.

Mr. BYRNES. That is what I have said. Never before has the Administrator averaged them; but when he wants to present a figure to reduce the total number under the $725,000,000 down to 1,000,000 persons, he puts in an average. Why should he do it? If he followed that plan, he would do what he has no right to do. I certainly will never have the same opinion of him if he does it. He can do it the way the committee suggests—reduce them on the 1st of the month instead of at the end of the month—and he will never get below 2,000,000 men. He will never have occasion to do it. But, Mr. President, I know that whenever a man becomes interested and wants to make out a bad case, he will show a terrible case.

No such figures were submitted to the House. When did it occur to the Administrator that he would have to reduce the figures to this amount? Not until the last 48 hours. No man can explain his telling us, in House and Senate, that he had enough money to pay all of his expenses to February 7 and then coming in here and saying, "Yes; but if you do not give me more than $725,000,000 I shall not have a cent to February 7, and I shall have to include all that in my figure."

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. I cannot understand why some member of the committee did not ask the colonel himself to explain this discrepancy when I understand he was before the committee four or five times. Will the Senator from South Carolina enlighten me on that subject?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as to this figure there was no discrepancy. It was apparent. Here is a statement submitted now in a minority report, and I see it for the first time, saying that persons are going to be counted who have already been accounted for. No member of the committee would ever dream that when the Administrator said he had money to February 7, he was then asking for money to carry him from February 1. We naturally assumed in our figures that he meant just what he said time and again. He has money to carry him up to February 7, according to his own statement; according to our belief, additional money; but that is a more controversial matter. There is no controversy about his having this money. It is a difference of $45,000,000, and it makes all the difference in the world in the number of persons who are to be taken care of.

As to the other statement, I will say to the Senator that I do not know about others, but when a gentleman appears before the committee with a statement as to balances I ask him questions endeavoring to find out his statement as to what he has on hand. I did that in this instance, time and again, as the testimony which has been read here today shows, in an honest effort to find out the unexpended balances and the available funds. It may be that I am wrong, but I have never gotten anywhere by engaging in arguments with witnesses before the committee. I helped the colonel to present his views on the unexpended balance; but let me tell you about that.

The colonel said there were $313,000,000 available January 1. It is simple mathematics to say, if that is the fact—and it is—and we have 3,000,000 men, and have to calculate their cost at $60 a month, not more than $180,000,000 can be spent out of the $313,000,000 up to February 1. Then he has to go from February 1 to February 7, and that is going to cost $45,000,000, and when we take those figures, according to any calculation at all, he has $133,000,000 less $45,000,000.

In order to explain the matter it is suggested that he has outstanding bills. I have said time and again, and say now, that the W. P. A. has no authority to contract obligations for anything except to pay men on the rolls and to pay material costs. The number of men on the rolls is fixed, and under the law the material costs may not exceed $7 a month per man, which is $21,000,000 if we have 3,000,000 men.

That involves no criticism of the integrity of Colonel Harrington. I have been on the Appropriations Committee in the House and Senate for years and years, and he would not be the first man who appeared before us who has made a mistake. He will not be the last man who will make mistakes in presenting figures. Time and again we have found out upon investigation that the witnesses were wrong; but I do find one thing, that when they are wrong they generally are wrong on the side of safety for the department. Whether it be the Army, the Navy, or any other department, when it comes to figures they are always cautious enough to look after the department. But there is no question about this $45,000,000 when a man has the money to February 7.

Something was asked about the unemployed. Let me call attention to that matter.

I have the statistics issued this afternoon by the Labor Department, with the latest figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics as to the employed. We have no statistics about the unemployed that are of value. The only statistics of any value are those of the Biggers census. The Biggers census, with its check, was a matter of estimate in many ways.

The Labor Department go at the matter as the National Industrial Conference Board and other organizations have gone at it. They obtain the number of employed from every possible source, and then they take the number of gainfully employed persons according to the last census, that of 1930; they deduct the number of employed that they have from that figure, and that is how they get their figure. This afternoon the Labor Department say that the figure of employed for December is 32,945,000. In January 1938 the number employed, according to them, was 32,177,000. That is, there were approximately 800,000 more employed as of the 15th of January 1939 than there were last January.

The interesting thing here is that 800,000 more persons are employed now than were employed last January. Last January General Motors discharged 30,000 men in one order. Chrysler followed. The other automobile companies and the motor-accessories companies did likewise. We had the most serious situation confronting us that we could recall since 1933. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Hatch] will remember how we investigated it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. MURRAY. Is the Senator sure we are not going to confront that situation again? In the case of one industry in this country, in Montana, I have just received information that one of the largest mines there has shut down and thrown 975 men out of work out there; and smelters also are shutting down.

It seems to me that a Senator is at a great disadvantage if he does not serve on the committee which handles these bills. When the bills come on the floor, what is said sounds like Greek to most of us. I only know that there are about 10,000,000 or 11,000,000 unemployed men in this country, and that if this appropriation is going to be cut as is proposed in the joint resolution now before the Senate we are going to see again this year the same thing that we had in 1937 and 1938.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am sure my friend does not mean that if we do not add $150,000,000 to this appropriation we are going to have the unfortunate condition of January 1938. This administration started a pump-priming program last April. We authorized the expenditure of a billion and a half dollars, and we put an unlimited amount into W. P. A. We made innumerable appropriations for the pump-priming program that we said was absolutely relieving unemployment; and the proof that we are right and that the Senator is wrong is that this afternoon the figures of the number employed show that under the program of this administration unemployment is decreasing instead of increasing.

Mr. HATCH rose.

Mr. BYRNES. There is an increase this month over last month. There is an improvement. Some town, some industry, may be affected, but in the whole picture, the situation has improved. No man can be sure of everything, but of this we can be certain, that if by the spending of Government money unemployment can be stopped, then Congress has done its part to stop it, for between now and June 30 we will spend more money than has ever been spent by the Government in time of peace in the history of this Nation. There is no decrease in public expenditures. The spending will continue less because a billion and a half dollars of P. W. A. money will not get moving until the next 30 days. They cannot build until warmer weather. A thousand contracts over this Nation are about to be started upon and the money spent under them will go out between now and June 30.

Appropriations have been requested to increase armaments, and other measures will come before us asking for money. If spending by Government is going to stop the unemployment, it will not rest on the conscience of the Senator from Montana or the Senator from South Carolina. The good Lord above, as well as the taxpayer here below, will know that we have done our part.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from South Carolina has fully covered the question I was about to ask him when he started, because I wanted to develop the increased program which is to go into effect in the next few months, about which we all know, and for which provision has been made.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me answer the Senator in this way. Under the distribution of this $725,000,000 which the majority of the committee approves, we would reduce—and the Administrator would have to abide by this—not more than 5 percent from March 1 to April 1. That would bring the number down to 2,850,000. Then we would reduce the number by 350,000, the largest reduction.

Is it not wise to make that reduction? What is the testimony? Colonel Harrington says that 50 percent of the increase from June to December occurred in Southern States, in agricultural sections, hurt because of the drop in cotton prices. When April comes, those people are needed back upon the farm. If we are going to pay $26 to agricultural workers to work not more than 120 hours a month, how in the world will the farmers of this Nation ever get labor in April, when farm operations are resumed? Today these people are on W. P. A. With warmer weather, when building operations start, when contractors get to work on these P. W. A. contracts throughout the country, they will need workers. Where will they get workers? In many instances they will have to come from W. P. A. employees, and we provide for a reduction of only 325,000 at that time. Is that not enough? The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], one of the ablest men I have known in my long service here, made the statement before the committee that in his State of Arizona in one county, because they had a very capable director, 2,000 agricultural workers last year were sent back to the farm, 2,000 in one county. If only 100 persons in every agricultural county were sent back to the farm we would have approximately the reduction provided for without a reduction elsewhere.

It is all right when they are on the farms in January and December to give them employment, but when April comes, we cannot go to the farmer who is getting ready to plant his wheat and cotton, and ask him to compete with the W. P. A. paying $26 in the South and West for 120 hours a month. We have to have some cooperation on the part of the Government to give the farmers of the Nation a chance to compete.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, can the Senator give us any statistics showing what proportion of the 3,000,000 men now on the rolls have moved from the farms into town or, without moving, have obtained employment under the W. P. A.?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I do not recall any such statistics. The only statement made about that was the one to which I have referred, the statement of the director that from June to December—I think those were the months—50 percent of the increase was due to putting agricultural workers upon the rolls.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, without any authoritative figures, I would suppose that in view of the large industrial unemployment throughout the country, in the larger towns and cities, it would be a small proportion of the entire number of 3,000,000 who would be moving in after the crop season was over and had gotten employment in the W. P. A.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator is wrong and the director is right about that, according to the figures. The figures indicated that there had been a considerable increase in the agricultural States up to November 23, when for some reason there appears a decrease.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has referred to the rearmament program, which he estimates will result in the employment of a considerable number of people.

Mr. BYRNES. I think a slight increase.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what I was about to call attention to. The President recommended the expenditure of five hundred and some million dollars over a period of 2 years beginning July 1, $210,000,000 of which was to be available for expenditure in the fiscal year 1940 and around $300,000,000 in 1941. So that would not have any appreciable effect on employment in the near future.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have always thought that that could not be considered as likely to have any appreciable effect on employment. My statement was in answer to the question about the public spending.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, to the extent to which the money is expended, to the extent to which people are employed, it certainly will be calculated to improve conditions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that program of expenditure will not begin until July 1.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is proposed to make the appropriations immediately available.

Mr. BARKLEY. The appropriations have not even been brought in. The committees have not reported. No one knows when the money will be available.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is part of the general program, as the Senator well understands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but it is not to take effect immediately. Besides that, the appropriation itself, coming, as it no doubt will, in a general appropriation bill or deficiency bill, after the authorization has been passed, as a matter of law, will be bound to come later on in the session, so that it could not have any effect immediately.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield for a further suggestion along that line?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Already a huge amount has been authorized at the last session of Congress and the session before which may be appropriated at any time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but the money has to be appropriated first. It has not been.

Mr. BYRNES. It has not been; but certainly, if the Senator from Kentucky is right, it is the first information I have had that it was not our intention to make the appropriations at this session of Congress, and to make the money immediately available.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not saying it is not to be made immediately available whenever the appropriation is passed, but in the very nature of things the authorization must come in first and pass both Houses and become a law; then the appropriations will follow; and assuming that $200,000,000 of that money should be available even to cover the last of this year, from the time the appropriation is passed, during the rest of 1939 and all of 1940, including about $210,000,000, as I recall, the point I am making is that there could not be any appreciable reemployment of people, even between now and July 1, under those circumstances, under the rearmament program.

Mr. BYRNES. I am not going to agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the rearmament program is not going to help the country to some extent in the matter of employment. To the extent that the money is spent, it will help, and that is all. If it is not the purpose to spend it now, then we might as well let it alone until the regular annual supply bill comes in. If it is the intention to spend it now, an additional estimate will be submitted whenever an authorization is passed, and that, of course, is a matter as to which we are uncertain. Only to the extent that the money is made available will it have effect.

Beginning January 1, 23 States started the operation of unemployment-insurance programs. I am not willing to say that before June 30 we will not have some good effect from the appropriations for unemployment insurance. It has helped in other States of the Nation; it is bound to help in all where it is in operation. It is said that many of these people are on W. P. A. and could not be affected by that. According to the statement of the director, each week there are some employees who lose their jobs and who come hunting jobs with W. P. A. To the extent that unemployment insurance is paid to them and they accept it, they cannot take jobs on W. P. A. Unemployment insurance is to be operative in 23 States where it did not operate up to January 1. Therefore, I am not so pessimistic about the condition.

I just know that when we speak about increasing this amount I look back to January 1938, when we had the worst conditions, when industries were closing down, with unemployment insurance in only half the States. We have had another W. P. A. program since that time, we have had a pump-priming program, and people are going back to work. All that we hope, with the appropriation of $725,000,000, is that from July 1, in the middle of the summer, with no snow on the ground, with no automobile industry shutdown, with the farmers clamoring for workers, we will have on the rolls 2,000,000, and 2,000,000 will be more than we had last January, in the dead of winter, under the most adverse conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 15, after the numerals "1939", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That prior to April 1 there shall be no administrative reduction of more than 5 percent in the number of employees upon Works Progress projects and that the funds available for the remainder of the fiscal year shall be apportioned in the discretion of the Administrator: Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President in submitting such estimate shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency: Provided further, That the Administrator shall immediately cause to be made an investigation of the rolls of employees on work projects and eliminate from such rolls those not in actual need.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think really that amendment ought not to be voted on now. I ask that it go over, for the very reason that has already been mentioned, that the vital part of this whole thing is to decide the amount of money to be appropriated. I do not know what the result will be, but if the larger amount should be appropriated I imagine that the Administrator would work out a gradual process of reduction. He might reduce more than 5 percent or he might reduce less. But I am wondering whether in advance of fixing the amount we ought to say that during the 2 months he could reduce only 5 percent, if the situation should develop so that he could reduce 6 percent. I see no harm in postponing the vote on this amendment until the other amendment to be offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] is voted on.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Kentucky if he would not be willing to have the Administrator reduce the number more than 5 percent?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but the Senator will also admit that if the committee had reported $875,000,000 as the amount of the appropriation it would not have been necessary to put the language of the amendment in the measure.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think there may be a misunderstanding there. Regardless of the amount, I am going to ask the Senate to vote on the question of preventing a reduction of more than 5 percent. I believe that Congress should have something to say about a matter of that kind, and Congress can say that there should not be a reduction of more than 5 percent. There was no controversy about that in the committee, and the statement of the Administrator was

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator says there was no controversy about it in the committee. That amendment was put in the measure after the committee had decided to limit the appropriation to $725,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. No: as a matter of fact it was not. Because that was an amendment proposed by the subcommittee, it was voted on first, and the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Tennessee was voted on later.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may not be a vital matter, but it seems to me

Mr. BYRNES. It is not a vital matter, and the Administrator would not object to retaining 2,000,000 people and not reducing the number more than 5 percent.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, if I remember correctly, at the meeting of the committee there was a discussion of this matter, and I asked the question how this provision was consistent with another provision in the joint resolution in the way of an amendment which provided that there should be a "purge," so-called, of the rolls. If that purge should turn out as some of the critics of the W. P. A. think it will, and there should be more than 10 percent who ought to be dropped, the language under consideration will prevent the dropping of them, will it not?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator has used the word "purge." It has not been so pleasant to use on the floor of late. [Laughter.] If the director determines to start immediately, my judgment is that the director could not hope to make as thorough an investigation as he should make if the statements I have heard made are true. I should hope that in 3 or 4 months he would be able to reduce the number by at least 5 percent. I would be of the opinion that we could not expect him to make a "purge"-using the Senator's word again-in the States without making a reduction of 5 percent. It would never bother me if he would reduce more than that.

Mr. GREEN. I do not anticipate that any such investigation will result as the critics of the W. P. A. hope it will.

Mr. BYRNES. Then there would be no harm.

Mr. GREEN. There would be no harm. All I am pointing out is the inconsistency in the two amendments offered by the majority of the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. The majority of the committee did not have any idea that the investigation could possibly get under way at so early a date that the Administrator would be at all embarrassed in complying with the direction of the

Mr. GREEN. Yes. There is another phase of that matter which ought to be considered, and that is that any such extensive examination as is provided for will cost an additional sum of money over what the present administration must expend.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course that has been given consideration. We have considered it from time to time. In the various States there are white-collar projects on which people are employed, and it will give to them an opportunity to be used as relief workers in those jobs. I could think of no better investment of public money at this time than to try to remove from the rolls those who are not in need, when there are so many in need who really should be on the rolls.

Mr. GREEN. I quite agree with the objective, but does it not mean also an increased expense, and is that a reason for cutting down the appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES. It means increased expense only in that we must employ people, and if we do not employ them at this very praiseworthy objective they might be employed at something not so praiseworthy.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield at that point, I will say that I had contemplated moving that the Senate take a recess at a quarter to 5, because I must attend a conference that will take me off the floor at that time. In view of that situation I wonder if we could not let all the amendments go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is my purpose to move an executive session at this time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it is understood that if the Senate proceeds to have an executive session at this time and then recess, I shall have the floor when the Senate resumes tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. The executive session will be very brief

Mr. BYRNES. Very well.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a statement of my own. I do not want to delay the Senate by reading it, but it has reference to the W. P. A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

POLITICS OR COINCIDENCE?—STATEMENT OF RUSH D. HOLT

If the W. P. A. pay rolls went up just before one election, it could be called a coincidence but when the W. P. A. pay rolls go up before every election, go down after every election, it just cannot be a coincidence. It is politics.

However, I am willing to present the facts and let the people draw their own conclusions

I have prepared a number of tables on this subject and a few of them follow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O merciful God, our Father, let Thy ear be attentive to the voice of our supplication. We thank Thee for Thyself and for as much of the revelation as we can understand. We pray Thee that Thou wilt make Thyself known by all the tokens which are needful and by all the trials which are helpful and by all the discipline which cleanses. Heavenly Father, may we listen to the inner voice, heed its divine command, and set our ambition on fine achievements for our people. Make manifest unto us the high worth of the entire truth, entire honor, and entire fidelity. Unite us to Thee by those nobler dispositions and spiritual qualities that we may arise above the lower ranges of human life. Breathe Thy holy blessings upon our President, our Speaker, and the Congress assembled, and may the spirit of brotherhood prevail among us. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Alfred Renton Bryant Bridges, alias Harry Renton Bridges, alias Harry Dorgan, alias Canfield, alias Rossi, an alien, a native of Australia and a British subject, was admitted to the United States at the port of San Francisco on April 12, 1920, and thereafter filed two declarations of intention to become a citizen of the United States, which he allowed to expire; that the said Harry Bridges, as usually known, did, in the year 1934, become an active labor leader and agitator in the State of California and on the west coast of the United States, and did then and at all times subsequent thereto believe in, advise, advocate, or teach, or was a member of or affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group, to wit, the Communist Party, that believed in, advised, advocated, or taught the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or all forms of law, or the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, or sabotage; that during the year 1934, and on numerous occasions thereafter, complaints were made to Frances Perkins, as Secretary of Labor, directing her made to Frances Perkins, as Secretary of Labor, directing her attention to the presence of the said alien, Harry Bridges, within the United States and advising her of the subversive activities of said alien within the United States, of his membership in the Communist Party, and of his affiliation with widely known Communists during the maritime strike in San Francisco, Calif., and of the fact that there was evidence the said alien, Harry Bridges, believed in, advised, advocated, or taught, or was a member of or affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group that believed in, advised, advocated, or taught, the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law, or the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, or sabotage; and requests were made of Frances Perkins, as Secretary of Labor, to deport from the United States the said Harry Bridges as an alien engaged in illegal and subversive activities; and that said an alien engaged in illegal and subversive activities; and that said Frances Perkins, as Secretary of Labor, did thereafter fail, neglect, and refuse, for a period of approximately 4 years, to issue a warrant of arrest for the said alien, Harry Bridges, and did conspire with James L. Houghteling and Gerard D. Reilly ever since their said appointments as Commissioner and Solicitor to violate the laws the United States and to defraud the United States; and that the said Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerard D. Reilly have committed many overt acts to effect the objects of said

Reilly have committed many overt acts to effect the objects of said conspiracy, as shall be hereinafter shown.

On January 22, 1938, Frances Perkins addressed a letter to Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg, of Michigan, in which she said:

"Since the maritime strike in 1934 the Department has received so many inquiries about Mr. Bridges that about a year ago I asked the Immigration and Naturalization Service to prepare a memorardum containing a complete history of his record."

randum containing a complete history of his record. * *

"This was the status of the case until this fall, when certain persons filed new complaints against him in the Seattle district office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. These complainants were questioned under oath, and their depositions (at plainants were questioned under cath, and their depositions (at that time there were four) were forwarded to the central office with recommendation that a warrant of arrest be issued. This, you will note, was not a recommendation for deportation as under the immigration rules such recommendation can be made only after a hearing at which time the alien is present with his counsel and given a chance to cross-examine the witnesses against him.

"As is the administrative practice of the Department, the matter was then referred to the Solicitor with a view to determining whether these depositions contain sufficient evidence to justify a whether these depositions contain sufficient evidence to justify a formal hearing on charges that Mr. Bridges was deportable.

'It was the Solicitor's view that, while this evidence, is established, indicated that Mr. Bridges might come within the act of 1918, as amended by the act of 1920, the Department should investigate the case with a view to determining whether these deponents were trustworthy persons and whether any other witnesses. ponents were trustworthy persons and whether any other witnesses were available who might corroborate them. Pursuant to the instructions of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, the Solicitor then proceeded immediately to the west coast, received some new information, and brought to the attention of the field officers some other aspects of the case which should be examined. Upon his return he also questioned Mr. Bridges, who was then in the East, in the New York office of the Immigration and Naturaliza-tion Service to obtain a deposition from him.

"As a result of this supplemental information several new avenues of investigation were open, which are still being explored and which have resulted in the discovery of additional witnesses who have submitted depositions. This phase of the investigation has been nearly completed and may soon culminate in a formal hearing.

"Because of this, I do not feel at liberty to divulge this preliminary testimony at this stage of the case, as the same considerations which prevent testimony taken before a grand jury from being revealed prior to trial apply with equal force in this instance."

That the application for a warrant of arrest of Harry Bridges was made on September 22, 1937, by R. J. Norene, divisional director, and R. P. Bonham, district director, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, of Seattle, Wash.; and that the application for said warrant of arrest included nine grounds, the ninth ground being "that he (Bridges) believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States."

uranization service as a follows:

"Submitted herewith please find application for warrant of arrest, with most unusual supporting evidence, in the matter of Harry Renton Bridges. The testimony of ——, who has been for a long time closely associated with Bridges and intimately affiliated with the Communist Party and active in their plans, acting under orders of _____, is of great importance and compels belief in and the presentation of this application to the Department. * * * "I believe it is proper that I acquaint the central office with the fact that when I interviewed Mr. Bridges sometime ago on another matter he boasted that he had seen the central office file relating matter he boasted that he had seen the central office file relating to himself and also that they had an excellent 'intelligence' organization of their own that kept them well informed of what was going on. Several of the witnesses in behalf of the Government are fearful of their lives, if ahead of the hearing the fact of their having to testify becomes known to the alien or the Communists. There will be no leak at this end and may I not, in order that their lives may not be unduly endangered, adjure the central office and the Department to observe the greatest precautions to safeguard inviolate this record."

This application for a warrant, and the covering letter of September 23, 1937, were not acted upon by the Department of Labor for several months. In the meantime said documents disappeared from the files of the Department of Labor. On February 5, 1938, the office copies of the Seattle district were forwarded by R. P. Bonham to Gerard D. Reilly, Solicitor of the Department of Labor, with the following letter:

"In reply to your urgent telegram I am forwarding herewith by

"In reply to your urgent telegram I am forwarding herewith by air mail our office copy of our original application, setting forth appropriate grounds therefor for the arrest of Harry Renton Bridges, alias, etc., together with my covering letter of September 23, 1937."

On February 8, 1938, Frances Perkins wrote to Harry Bridges, as "I have your letter of February 3, 1938, stating that you have been informed that the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor has under consideration the holding of a hearing to determine whether or not you should be deported, and requesting that if it is decided that a hearing is to be held, you should be furnished with a detailed statement or a bill of particulars of the charges made against you.

"With reference to your statement that the demand for hearings was based on trumped-up charges and evidence obtained through pressure upon you, I can only say that if this is true you will be given ample opportunity to bring this out at a hearing before the Department takes any final action. Should the Department proceed with hearings it does not mean that it has adopted the view that the evidence which the complaining witnesses are submitting is

On February 9, 1938, Grafton S. Wilcox, managing editor of the New York Herald Tribune, wrote to Gerard D. Reilly, the Solicitor of the Labor Department, from which the following is quoted:

"Coincident with the introduction of the Copeland resolution, a member of the (Commerce) committee today confirmed the statement attributed to Gerard D. Reilly, Solicitor, Labor Department, that the Department was in possession of sufficient information about Harry Bridges, Pacific coast maritime leader for the C. I. O., to make out a prima facie case for his deportation as an alien. The Reilly statement does not appear in the published transcript of the hearings, but occurred 'off the record.' The stenographic report shows that an interval of 'off the record' testimony occurred toward the end of the hearing, while Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, Republican, of Michigan, was examining witnesses."

Mr. Wilcox further says:

Mr. Wilcox lurcher says:

"I also have talked to our bureau in Washington this afternoon concerning the matter, and Mr. Warner, the head of the bureau, said that yesterday Senator Copeland, chairman of the Commerce Committee, when asked about the Herald Tribune story of Tuesday morning, said that you had said 'off the record,' though in the presence of the committee, that you thought Mr. Bridges was deportable."

In a current teletype from one Warner, a bureau chief of the New York Herald Tribune, relating to Reilly's statement before the Commerce Committee of the Senate, is found the following:

the Commerce Committee of the Senate, is found the following:

"In regard to the Bridges' story I would like to say that Senator Copeland yesterday told a group of about eight reporters that the story in the Herald Tribune had been substantially correct, and that Mr. Reilly had told the committee that the Department had 'a case' which should result in the deportation of Bridges * * *. Mr. Reilly today, in a telephone conversation, said that he had told the committee that a 'prima facie case could be made out against Bridges' by that he said he meant only that it was case which was not subject to demurrer and which, if the other side did not produce more credible testimony, should result in conviction and deportation. I asked if this was not an ordinary hazard of trial and he said that in this case there was no documentary proof but only a question of his witnesses against their witnesses.

"On the matter of his going out to the west coast to see if the

"On the matter of his going out to the west coast to see if the four signers of affidavits were trustworthy persons, he did not deny that part of his mission had been that, but did say that he had not said anything to the committee about having found them so. I am willing to admit that I have no corroboration for this other than the very obvious fact that if they had turned out not to be trustworthy persons the matter would doubtless have dropped right there.

"He (Reilly) did not ask for a retraction or anything of the sort in our conversation. I am sending him a copy of this memo-randum. Warner, bureau chief."

On February 11, 1938, Harry Bridges sent the following wire to

Frances Perkins:

"Copeland obvious attempt to prejudice my case requires immediate hearing re my deposition. Because of prejudicial statements emanating from Washington it is important that such hearing be held also in Washington. Please advise time and place of hearing and particulars on charges. (Signed) Harry Bridges."

The foregoing wire was answered on February 12, 1938, by James L. Houghteling, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization Service as follows:

During the month of February 1938, Harry Bridges sought an opportunity to appear as a witness before the Commerce Committee, of which Senator Royal S. Copeland was chairman, and the following letters were passed between Senator Copeland and Gerard D. Reilly, Solicitor of the Labor Department. On March 1, 1938, Mr. Reilly wrote to Senator Copeland, as follows:

"I appreciate the dilemma which you and Senator Vandenberg pointed out to me in that your committee has no desire to interfere with the quasi judicial process now pending in the Department, and yet wishes to afford to any representative of the labor and management interests involved complete opportunity to be heard on the merits of S. 3078. In view of that I can see no reason for the committee refraining from its normal procedure in hearing any pertinent legislative history with respect to the pending bill."

And on the same day Senator Copeland wrote to Mr. Reilly as "You will recall that 10 days ago Senator Vandenbert and I explained to you our situation in regard to Harry Bridges' desire to be heard by our committee. It was our understanding that his deportation hearing would be ordered within a week. In that event it was deemed inadvisable to have him testify with the possibility of exciting public opinion one way or the other. We wish to have your advice. Since the committee meets tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. an early answer is much desired.

Under date of March 5, 1938, there is a letter from Leon R. Fouch, acting district director of the Baltimore district, marked "Confidential," addressed to the Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, D. C., as follows:

"Referring to central office file No. 55973/217, and to warrant of arrest issued in respect of Alfred Renton Bryant Bridges, alias Harry Renton Bridges, alias Harry Dorgan, alias Canfield, alias Rossi, it is desired to state that the alien, accompanied by his attorney, Mr. Lee Pressman, appeared at this office today, and the warrant of arrest was served on him and endorsed to show such service. In accordance with the authorization contained in the warrant of arrest, the alien was released on his own recognizance with the understanding that he would present himself at San Francisco, Calif., on April 25, 1938, for a hearing.

"Lee Pressman and Aubrey Grossman filed their appearance in writing and the alien submitted a communication setting forth that these two persons were authorized to appear for and represent him in the proceedings, and above communications are attached hereto. The warrant of arrest is returned herewith and has been endorsed to show service and that the hearing is to be commenced in San Francisco, Calif., on April 25, 1938."

On March 7, 1938, there is a letter from James L. Houghteling, commissioner, to Leon R. Fouch, acting district director at Baltimore, Md., acknowledging receipt of Mr. Fouch's letter of March 5, in which he says:

"Many thanks for your satisfactory handling of this matter and prompt."

"Many thanks for your satisfactory handling of this matter and

"Many thanks for your settlement of Harry Bridges shows, enfrom treport."

The original warrant for the arrest of Harry Bridges shows, endorsed on the face thereof, the following:

"Pending further proceedings, the alien may be released from custody upon his own recognizance."

And on the back of the original of said warrant is the following endorsement:

"Service on alien at the office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service at Baltimore, Md., at 10:10 a. m., March 5, 1938. Hearing to be commenced in San Francisco, Calif., April 25, 1938. Charles R. Frank, immigrant inspector."

Thereafter, on March 23, 1938. Frances Perkins advised the Attorney General of the United States that formal deportation hearings with regard to Harry Bridges, of San Francisco, would begin in that city on April 25 and very likely be continued in Portland and Seattle and possibly Los Angeles on later dates, and stated therein that: stated therein that:

stated therein that:

"Several persons who have filed affidavits about the case with the Immigration and Naturalization Service have said that they feared for their personal safety if they were compelled to testify fearlessly. In order to assure protection for these people during the pendence of the hearing I would appreciate if you would notify the United States marshals in these cities to assist the local immigration officers to the extent that will seem desirable on days when particular witnesses are to appear."

On March 29, 1938, R. P. Bonham, district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Seattle, wrote a letter to T. B. Shoemaker, Deputy Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization at Washington, D. C., in which Mr. Bonham says:

"Protests have reached me against the holding in San Francisco or elsewhere of public hearings in the Bridges case, and confidential information has also reached me, which appears to be very reliable, to the effect that the same group of Communists that handled the propaganda and intimidation program in the Earl King et al. murder case has been detailed for the same purposes in the Bridges case. I cannot believe that this Service will consider the same purposes in the Bridges case. a hearing open indiscriminately to mass picketing, etc., etc. Such a proceeding would involve communistic demonstrations, in-timidation of witnesses, and prevent any orderly, dignified pro-ceeding. The Service would be bitterly critized for permitting such a disorderly farce. Will you please promptly inform me by air mail on this point?"

As evidence of the existence and virility of the Communist organizations on the existence and virility of the community or the community organizations on the west coast, and of their interest in Harry Bridges and the manner in which they deal with witnesses appearing against them, there is quoted a letter from Arthur J. Phelan. inspector in charge of the Legal Division at San Francisco, under date of April 11, 1938, as follows:

"Supplementing my report of April 8 relative to the case of Harry "Supplementing my report of April 8 relative to the case of Harry Bridges, the informant mentioned in the paragraph beginning at the end of page 15 thereof today refused to give any statement at this time, as he stated that Bridges had already told his 'beef squad' to get in a lot of practice, because after his hearing is over there will be a lot of 'work' for them to do on the witnesses who appear against him; that he expects to beat the case against him, and if he doesn't he will be able to delay his deportation for a couple of years and there will be a great deal of fireworks.

"This informant states that he was once beaten up by the radical element and sent to the hospital; that on another occasion when he appeared as a witness in a Communist deportation case he was taken up to the office of the attorney for the alien by the secretary of the Communist Party and was there manhandled, and that while he was working on W. P. A. the Workers' Alliance succeeded in having him dropped because of his having testified against Communists. His present disposition is to refuse to get involved in the

Mr. Bonham, who has been for many years employed in the Immigration and Naturalization Service and thoroughly versed concerning the dangers incident to witnesses appearing for the Government in the Bridges case, wrote Mr. Houghteling under date of April 14,

"It is my opinion and that of others with whom I have talked that the safest place to have the hearing for our witnesses would be Angel Island; they have a special launch that we could utilize, if necessary, for the safety of our witnesses. We have already arranged tentatively for quarters in Portland in the United States Courthouse Building, where our own officers are located, for the hearing there. Inspector Farrelly has informally advised me that he can secure police aid in protecting our witnesses in San Francisco. As I facetiously remarked in a personal letter to Mr. Shoemaker, if the Department of Justice were handling the case they would probably have no less than 40 men detailed on the matter."

The foregoing exhibits are submitted as evidence that the Government witnesses against Bridges were fearful of their lives, and ernment witnesses against Bridges were fearful of their lives, and that the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor and Frances Perkins were intimidated by the threats of violence of Bridges and his communistic friends on the west coast.

As evidence of the arrogance of Harry Bridges, his impertinence and want of respect for the officials of the Department of Labor, the following excerpts are submitted from the examination of Bridges by Gerard D. Reilly, Solicitor, Department of Labor, in New York City on October 18, 1937:

"Q. Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you will give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?—A. I

"Q. In the course of your activities with regard to organizing marine workers, have you become acquainted with a group known as the 'top fraction of the Communist Party'?—A. (By Mr. Cohen, Bridges' attorney.) I object to that as immaterial as to whether he knows a group known as the 'top fraction of the Communist Party.' It is not a proper subject of this inquiry.—A. (By Mr. Bridges.) I decline to answer on advice of counsel.

"Q. Did any of the three men (Lawrence Ross, Pop Hanoff, and Walter Lambert) I have mentioned ever give you any advice on a policy which you followed?—A. I have met and discussed labor policies and union affairs with Mme. Perkins, John L. Lewis, Dan McGrady and his assistants, Mayor Rossi, Governor Merriam, John Ryan—you can go on indefinitely.

There were present at this examination of Harry Bridges by Gerard D. Reilly, Sidney E. Cohen, of New York City, counsel for Harry Bridges, and Robert Lomberg, stenographer.

This examination of Bridges was nearly a month after the Bonham application for a warrant of arrest of Bridges, and 2½ months before said warrant was issued.

After the attempt to examine Bridges by Mr. Reilly in New York City, and with the probability of deportation proceedings imminent against Bridges, many letters and telegrams were received by Frances Perkins, typical of which are the following:

"Maryland's Civil Liberties Committee strongly protests against reported intention of Department of Labor to issue warrant for deportation of Harry Bridges on unsupported charges that he is a radical agitator. We consider this contemplated move wholly an radical agitator. We consider this contemplated move wholly an unwarranted attack upon constitutional rights of American labor."

The foregoing telegram was from Mauritz Hallgren, chairman, and Elizabeth Gilman, secretary, 513 Park Avenue, Baltimore, Md. On January 28, 1938, this telegram was answered by Gerard D. Reilly, solicitor, Department of Labor, as follows:

"Your committee need have no fear that the Department proposes to deport Mr. Harry Bridges or anyone else on unsupported charges. You may be sure that such procedure would be as repugnant to the Secretary of Labor as it would be to the Civil Libertles Committee of Maryland."

On February 8, 1938, Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, received

On February 8, 1938, Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, received the following wire:

"Wisconsin Workers' Alliance demands that President Bridges of the Timber Workers' Union be admitted to citizenship of this United States at once. We believe that no one should be denied citizenship because of his activities in labor circles.—Thomas Lapean, Secretary."

On February 2, 1938, the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, of Bellingham, Wash., sent a resolution to Frances Perkins, attacking the record of Mr. R. P. Bonham, head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service of that district, and asking the Secretary of Labor to "thoroughly investigate the conduct of the Immigration Service in said district and take such steps and make such changes in personnel as will secure to all steps and make such changes in personnel as will secure to all legal residents their lawful rights and constitutional guaranties."

The foregoing letters and telegrams are introduced as illustrative of the pressure brought on the Department of Labor to save Bridges from deportation, and this pressure may also be evidence of the instantaneous reaction of Frances Perkins, James L. Hough-telling, and Gerard D. Reilly when the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, at New Orleans, La., on April 6, 1938, de-cided the much-publicized Strecker case. In this case a decision of Wayne G. Borah, district judge, denying a writ of habeas corpus to said alien, was reversed in an opinion by Circuit Judge Hutcheson

As shall hereinafter be shown:
The decision of the fifth circuit in the Strecker case was based

As shall hereinafter be shown:

The decision of the fifth circuit in the Strecker case was based upon the conclusion of the court that insufficient evidence had been offered by the Government as to the character of the Communist Party; in other words, that the Government had failed to show that the Communist Party was an organization that taught the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. The circuit court, on June 7, 1938, amended its order in the Strecker case to read as follows:

"The judgment of reversal is amended to read 'Reversed, with directions to try the issues de novo as suggested in Ex parte Fierstein (41 Fed. (2d), p. 54)."

It followed, therefore, that at a retrial before the district court an opportunity would have been given to the Government to introduce additional evidence showing the character of the Communist Party. Certain stock exhibits which had been usually offered by the Government in such deportation cases to show the character of the Communist Party, and which for some unknown reason were not offered in evidence before the district court in the Strecker case, were available and had previously been accepted by many Federal courts as proof that the Communist Party was an organization that taught the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence.

Prior to perfecting the appeal in the Strecker case and on May 11, 1938, James L. Houghteling wrote a confidential letter to R. P. Bonham, district director, at Seattle, Wash, in which he stated:

"From the books which you have heretofore forwarded to Mr. Shoemaker, excerpts have been taken tending to show that the Communist Party believes in the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence."

Nevertheless, Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerard D. Reilly refused this opportunity to submit the usual stock exhibits in the Strecker case, and postponed the Bridges deportation

D. Reilly refused this opportunity to submit the usual stock exhibits in the Strecker case, and postponed the Bridges deportation hearing until an appeal could be perfected to the Supreme Court of the United States on an admittedly defective record in the Strecker case.

Strecker case.

Shortly after the conspirators herein agreed to postpone the Bridges case, James L. Houghteling, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization Service, addressed the national executive committee of the American Legion at Indianapolis, Ind. In his statement as reported by the national commander of the American Legion, in his testimony before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, Mr. Houghteling said:

American Activities, Mr. Houghteling said:

"Therefore, gentlemen, I am up here to say that any criticism of the Immigration Service since the 1st day of September, when I took office, is a criticism which I have got to answer for. I am responsible and anything you gentlemen have to criticize in the administration of the Immigration and Naturalization Service is on my shoulders. We proposed to have hearings on Harry Bridges. The hearings were set for the 25th of April. Harry Bridges was served with a warrant of arrest in Baltimore on the 5th day of March, and he is now released on his own recognizance and subject to hearing on his own deportability. We were sending two of our to hearing on his own deportability. We were sending two of our men out from the Department and they were being joined by men from the coast who have been conducting preliminary hear-ings, the hearings on Harry Bridges' deportability. The travel orders were issued when we received the findings of the court in the case of Strecker v. Kessler in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which held that the membership in the Communist Party, standing alone, was not sufficient to deport. * * We have deported 100 aliens in the last 3 or 4 years for membership in the Communist Party. We were not sustained. We immediately took counsel among ourselves as to whether to go ahead and develop our testimony against Bridges in the face of that decision. We counseled with the Department of Justice and with our own legal department, and it was our considered opinion that we would do better to ask the Supreme Court to review that case and to withhold until we got a review which might better define what we must prove to make a good case of deportation against a man who is accused of being a member of the Communist Party, and until the Supreme Court might hand down a clarifying decision to determine what we ought to do to prove it. From some conversation I had in this hall before to prove it. From some conversation I had in this hall before I came up here, I judge that our decision is not being received very favorably by some members of the Legion who have given some study to the problem."

Although Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerard D.

Although Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerard D. Reilly had an opportunity to retry the Strecker case in the United States District Court, and there to offer the usual stock exhibits and to present the strongest possible case to the United States Supreme Court in the event of another reversal by the Circuit Court of Appeals, they chose rather to appeal an admittedruit complete record to the Supreme Court of the United States. To further the objects of their conspiracy, they chose rather to use such pending appeal as an excuse to defer further proceedings against Bridges and other aliens who stood charged with membership in the Communist Party.

As proof of the foregoing averments I cite the full text of a letter written by Chairman Martin Dies, of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities to the Solicitor General, Department of Justice, as shown in volume 3, pages 2075 to 2083 of the hearings of said committee:

of said committee:

OCTOBER 29, 1938.

ROBERT H. JACKSON, Esq., Solicitor General, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. JACKSON: This is to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 26, 1938, in which you invite me to assist you in presenting the Strecker case to the Supreme Court.

From my study of the record in this case I think that the Depart ment of Justice certainly needs some assistance. I am confident that you are not acquainted with many important facts in this case, which clearly demonstrate that Mme. Perkins, Secretary of Labor, is endeavoring to use you and the Department of Justice to "pull her chestnuts out of the fire." My reasons for holding this opinion are

(1) That the Department of Justice was induced to appeal this case from the decision of the circuit court of appeals when that court only ordered that it should be remanded for a new trial.

That the Department of Justice, in perfecting its appeal from the fifth circuit, was led to agree to a stipulation of facts ignoring an important finding by Turner W. Battle, Assistant to the Secretary of Labor, in the deportation warrant of Strecker.

of Labor, in the deportation warrant of Strecker.

(3) That this agreed stipulation of facts restricted the issues before the Supreme Court to a single question, to wit, was membership in the Communist Party in 1932 for a short while sufficient in itself to justify the deportation of Strecker? And the agreed stipulation ignored the evidence in the record which sustained a finding by Turner W. Battle, Assistant to the Secretary of Labor, that Strecker believed in and taught the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States, which allegation was and is, under the act, sufficient in and of itself to justify the deportation of Strecker, if supported by any evidence.

(4) That the records of the Labor Department clearly show that Mme. Frances Perkins misrepresented to our committee the facts and the law upon the basis of which she claims to have deferred further proceedings against Harry Bridges, and misrepresented the effect which the decision in the Strecker case had upon the deportation proceedings against Harry Bridges.

(5) That the Labor Department files reveal a strong bias on the part of Mme. Frances Perkins and the Department of Labor in favor of Harry Bridges, and an effort on their part to protect, rather than to deport, him.

(6) That as head of the Labor Department, Mme. Frances Perkins is endeavoring to throw the Strecker case in order to save Harry Bridges, a Communist and alien labor leader, in violation of the laws of the United States, the decisions of our Federal courts, and her oath of office.

As proof of the statements heretofore made I submit the follow ing excerpts from the records of the Department of Labor in the Harry Bridges case from the record on appeal in the Strecker case. In support of my first charge on page 118 of the record on appeal in the case of Joseph George Strecker there appears the following extract from the minutes of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals under date of June 7, 1938:

"The judgment of reversal is amended to read: 'Reversed, with directions to try the issues de novo as suggested in Ex Parte Fierstein (41 Fed. (2d), p. 54)'."

In other words, when the Department of Justice was induced to appeal this case from the decision of the circuit court of appeals it was not a final judgment in favor of Strecker, but was simply an order of the fifth circuit remanding the case to the district court for a new trial. It is obvious from the decision of Judge Hutchefor a new trial. It is obvious from the decision of Judge Hutcheson, which appears in the record at page 110, that—"The evidence, and the only evidence relied on for the finding and order, is that during the Presidential campaign of 1932, when one Foster was running as the white, and one Ford as the colored candidate of the Communist Party of America, for President of the United States, appellant, in November 1932, became a member of the Communist Party and accepted certain literature of the Communist Party for distribution. * * * None of the literature which he was supposed to have circulated in 1932 was introduced, but his book of membership in the Communist Party in ture which he was supposed to have circulated in 1932 was introduced, but his book of membership in the Communist Party in the United States was. Not a word in his membership book advocated, incited, or even suggested that the Government of the United States should be overthrown by force or violence. * * The record contained also, offered by the Bureau, extract from a copy of the Communist dated April 1934, 'eighth convention issue, a magazine of the theory and practices of Marxism and Leninism, published monthly by the Communist Party in the United States of America.' Not a single extract from this magazine referred to the Government of the United States of America directly or indirectly."

the Government of the United States of America directly or indirectly."

In other words, the finding against the Government in the Strecker case by the fifth circuit was due to the fact that inadequate evidence was offered as to the character of the Communist Party, and proof was not introduced in evidence that the Communist Party believed in, advised, advocated, or taught the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States.

In view of the foregoing, the letter of Gerard D. Reilly, solicitor of labor, dated April 16, 1938, and addressed to the Attorney General of the United States, is proof that the Department of Labor knew that the usual evidence introduced in deportation cases was omitted at the hearing of Strecker and therefore was not a part of the record in this case, although such proof had been commonly used in other cases involving deportation of persons belonging to the Communist Party.

In Mr. Reilly's letter to the Attorney General of the United States he said:

he said:

he said:

"In the instant case, however, the Government introduced as documentary exhibits both the membership book of the alien which contained some statements of Communist theory and a copy of the April 1934 issue of a periodical entitled "The Communist: A Magazine of the Theory and Practice of Marxism-Leninism.' Selected excerpts from this magazine were also read into the record. While it is true that, since the manifesto of the Communist International and the constitution of the Communist Party of America—apparently the stock exhibits considered by other circuit courts of apparently the stock exhibits considered by other circuit courts of appeal—were not introduced, the argument might be advanced that the articles in this magazine are not necessarily the official teachings of the Communist Party, there is no doubt that the magazine was written or printed matter circulated and published by the party, since the masthead states that it is published monthly by the Communist Party of the United States of America."

In other words, there is positive and absolute proof in Mr. Reilly's letter to the Attorney General of the United States that certain stock exhibits, proving the character of the Communist Party, were omitted in the proof against Strecker, and that such exhibits had previously been used in other cases.

It follows that when the Department of Justice appealed the It follows that when the Department of Justice appealed the Strecker decision it turned down an opportunity to retry the case and introduce the usual evidence customarily offered to prove the official teachings of the Communist Party. Nevertheless, at the instance and request of the Solicitor of Labor, the aforesaid Gerard D. Reilly, the Department of Justice chose rather to appeal a doubtful case when it might, by a new trial, have presented the complete facts to the court, which would have avoided the necessity of an appeal to the Supreme Court.

In support of the second statement which I have heretofore made, I desire to call your attention to the fact that in September 1938 you filed a petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States in which you stated that the quesion presented to the Supreme Court is "whether the court erred in falling to sustain an order of deportation against respondent, an alien who in 1932 became a member of the Communist Party of the United States."

You have stated that the "specification of errors to be urged" in the Supreme Court are:

the Supreme Court are:

"(1) In holding that an alien who in 1932 became a member of the Communist Party is not by reason of that fact subject to deportation under the act of October 18, 1918, as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (U. S. C., title 3, sec. 137); (2) in holding that the evidence before the Secretary of Labor concerning the principles of the Communist Party was insufficient to sustain the order of deportation; (3) in remanding the case for a trial de novo in the district court; (4) in falling to affirm the judgment of the district court in the Strecker case."

the Strecker case."

The agreed statement contained in your petition for a writ of certiorari (p. 5) omits the finding of Turner W. Battle, Assistant to the Secretary of Labor, in the deportation warrant that Strecker should be deported "in that he believes in and teaches the overshould be deported "in that he believes in and teaches the over-throw by force and violence of the Government of the United States" (although this point was urged by the United States attor-ney in his petition for rehearing) and includes only the fact that "after his entry he was found (R. 114-115) to have become a mem-ber of one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of the act, as amended, to wit, an alien who is a member of or affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, or teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.'

In other words, in your agreed statement in the petition for a writ of certicrari you have omitted an important finding by the Assistant to the Secretary of Labor in the deportation warrant and Assistant to the Secretary of Labor in the deportation warrant and apparently sought to narrow the issues on appeal to the question of membership in the Communist Party of the United States.

In doing this you were undoubtedly guided by the statement contained in the letter of Mr. Reilly, heretofore referred to, addressed to the Attorney General of the United States, under date of April 16, 1938, wherein he stated: "That portion of the court's decision relating to the first count in the warrant, namely, that the alien's own statements of his political and economic beliefs did not indicate that he himself believed, taught, or advocated the overthrow of the United States by force and violence is of little significance except to the peculiar facts of the case. It should be pointed out, however, that irrespective of an alien's personal views, the statute makes deportable aliens who are members of organizations that believe, advise, advocate, and teach the overthrow by tions that believe, advise, advocate, and teach the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States, or force and violence of the Government of the United States, or organizations which circulate literature to the same effect. * * It is this phase of the opinion which makes the holding an important one and raises the question of a conflict with the rules of decision in other circuit courts of appeal. While it is true, as the appellate court noted, that the statute itself makes no mention of the Communist Party, it has been a settled practice in the Immigration and Naturalization Service for many years to regard that party as an organization coming within the language of the statute, and until this decision the various circuit courts of appeal which have passed on the question have generally found that where membership in the Communist Party was established, that fact alone was sufficient evidence to support a deportation order, at least if there was evidence in the record of the official literature published and circulated by the party. (The necessity for this last published and circulated by the party. (The necessity for this last requirement was stressed in Ex parte Fierstein, 41 Fed. (2d) 53, C. C. A. 9, 1930.)"

C. C. A. 9, 1930.)"

It appears from the foregoing quotation that you were induced by the Solicitor of the Department of Labor to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on a question which he himself admits was not properly presented to the Court, and that you have omitted from urging (as did the United States attorney in his petition for rehearing) the fact that competent and material evidence was introduced showing that Strecker believed in and taught the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

In support of the third statement which I have made, your petithe United States.

In support of the third statement which I have made, your petition omits the finding of Turner W. Battle, assistant to the Secretary of Labor, in the deportation warrant, to the effect that Strecker should be deported "in that he believes in and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States," and thus obviously attempts to restrict the Supreme Court to a consideration of the single question, to wit: Was membership in the Communist Party in 1932 in and of itself sufficient to testify the deportation of Strecker?

bership in the Communist Party in 1932 in and of itself sufficient to justify the deportation of Strecker?

Although the record on appeal contains ample evidence to support the finding of Turner W. Battle that Strecker did believe in and teach the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States, you have failed to make this an equal issue before the Supreme Court of the United States are equal issue before the Supreme Court of the United States should hold that Strecker's membership in the Communist Party in 1932 did not in and of itself constitute sufficient ground for his deportation, still, if the Supreme Court should find (assuming that that question was properly presented) that Strecker was one who believed in and taught the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States, then the Supreme Court would have to reverse the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit and sustain Judge Borah in refusing Strecker's application for a writ of habeas corpus, which would automatically result in the deportation of Strecker.

As proof of the statements which I have just made, I quote here-

As proof of the statements which I have just made, I quote herewith excerpts from the testimony of Joseph George Strecker at a hearing conducted at Hot Springs, Ark., on October 25, 1933, before Immigration Inspector Carroll D. A tailor from Little Rock handed me some of this literature and I handed it to somebody else, but I do not know the name of the person or persons to whom I handed it.

"Q. Is it not true that at one time you had a considerable quantity of communistic literature in your home?—A. I have received letters from New York urging me to buy gold bonds of the Communist Government in Russia.

"Q. Have you ever bought any of these bonds?—A. Yes; I have bought 2,200 rubles' worth of the Soviet Union Socialist Republic, for which I paid in American money the sum of $1,588.

"Q. When did you make this purchase?—A. About 2 months ago. It was represented to me that the United States Government's money would soon be worthless, or at best very cheap, and I thought it wise for my own protection to put my money into bonds of the present Russian Soviet Government. These bonds are paying interest in gold dollars, American money.

"Q. Do you now deny on your oath that you are a Communist at heart?—A. I do not consider myself a Communist because I am not heart?—A. I do not consider myself a Communist because I am not paying dues to the Communist Party. I do not know whether we shall ever have a communistic system in the United States. I have read Marx's books and Marx states that sooner or later there will be a "red" government in every country in the world. I am trying to protect myself and that is why I bought the bonds of the Russian Government. I do not know what is going to happen; I do not know how long I am going to live. If I knew when I was going to die, I would get me about four women and have a hell of a time before I die. If communism comes in this country, I will not be against it because I have to go with the people, and whatever the people want I will have to go along with them * *."

In support of my fourth proposition that Mme. Frances Perkins has misrepresented to our committee facts and the law upon the basis of which she claims to have deferred further proceedings against Harry Bridges, I direct your attention to her letter to me of August 30, 1938, in which she said:

"You are incorrect in saying that the facts in the two cases—the Strecker case and the Bridges case—are dissimilar. As a matter of fact, they are identical except for the fact that Strecker admitted that he was a Communist and that he distributed Communist literature, where Bridges has not so admitted. In other words, the case in regard to Strecker was much stronger."

Such a statement is preposterus. There were never two cases

Such a statement is preposterous. There were never two cases identical; and her contention that the Strecker case is a stronger identical; and her contention that the Strecker case is a stronger case than the one which the Department has against Bridges is not only not sustained by her own records but is contradicted by them. To illustrate: On April 20, 1938, James L. Houghteling, Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor, at Washington, D. C., received the following wire from R. P. Bonham, district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service at Seattle, Wash., in which wire Mr. Bonham said to Mr. Houghteling: "Bedio news appointed with contributions Bridges hearing until said to Mr. Houghteling:

"Radio news announces your continuance Bridges hearing until Supreme Court decides New Orleans case. Hope this is incorrect as difficult protect our witnesses indefinitely. I have examined entire record testimony and the court decisions said case. Service failed introduce adequate proof party teaches violence. We have ample such evidence, both in current official party documents and on part of witnesses. New Orleans case weak and devoid proper proof; therefore, not hurtful or controlling our case. Hope same will not be regarded as precedent or of sufficient consequence postponing pending case. Please wire instructions.

"BONHAM."

"Bonham."

On the confirmation of the above telegram which was forwarded by Mr. Bonham to Mr. Houghteling appears this further statement by Mr. Bonham:

"Drar Mr. Houghteling: The Strecker case is very weak, consisting more of inference than evidence. The court's decision is based, I think, upon the proposition that we can't deport just because an alien is proved to be a member of the Communist Party, but that we must also prove that said organization teaches or prints or displays matter advocating violent overthrow of our Government. Case rests only on the absence of such facts or proof and not upon any fundamental question. The case was remanded for further proceedings. What could that mean except. Government. Case rests only on the absence of such facts or proof and not upon any fundamental question. The case was remanded for further proceedings. What could that mean except for evidence of vicient revolution doctrines of the said organization? An appeal will not cure the situation, in my judgment, but rather complicate it.

"Sincerely,

"R. P. BONHAM."

Mr. Bonham is a veteran in the Immigration and Naturalization

Mr. Bonham is a veteran in the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Labor Department, and has been described in a letter by Mr. Houghteling to Edward W. Cahill, district commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, under date of April 21, 1938, as "keenly devoted to his duty as he sees it." Further, Mr. Bonham, in a letter under date of May 9, 1938, to Mr. Houghteling, said: "I have always been able to introduce these books to prove the charge that the alien belongs to an organization that printed and published, etc., literature advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. The courts have, without exception, dismissed writs challenging this procedure in cases which I have conducted. The witnesses we had assembled for the Bridges hearing had among them some former functionaries of the party who were well informed and who would have testified to the Communist Party of the United States of America being the American section of the Comintern (Communist International) and to the definite commitment to force and violence in bringing about the overthrow of mitment to force and violence in bringing about the overthrow of our Government."

Mme. Frances Perkins' experience and judgment on immigra tion and naturalization matters are of no value, as against the experience and judgment of District Director Bonham, who has devoted many years exclusively to immigration and naturalization matters and has been responsible for the preparation of the case

against Harry Bridges.

A second illustration of the misrepresentation of Mme. Frances Perkins is found in her letter, as follows: "This Department has recommended that this decision (Strecker) be appealed to the Supreme Court since it was recognized at once, not only by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and the Solicitor of this Department but by officials of the Department of Justice with whom they conferred, that unless this holding were reversed by the highest court, that the charges brought against Bridges, even if proved, had no legal significance whatsoever."

This statement of Mme. Frances Perkins is contrary to the statement previously quoted from the letter of the Solicitor of the Department of Labor to the Attorney General of the United States. wherein he said: "Until this decision the various circuit courts of appeals which have passed on the question have generally found appeals which have passed on the question have generally found that where membership in the Communist Party was established, that where membership in the Communist Party was established, that fact alone was sufficient evidence to support a deportation order—at least if there was evidence in the record of the official literature published and circulated by the party."

Mme. Frances Perkins' statement, that unless the Strecker case were reversed in the Supreme Court "the charges brought against Bridges, even if proved, had no legal significance whatsoever," is so ridiculous as hardly to require answering. Numerous decisions holding contrary to the Strecker decision have been rendered by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, which would have jurisdiction of the Bridges case; and yet, Mme. Frances Perkins, in her letter would represent that a decision of the fifth circuit, in New Orleans, La., unless it was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States would be authoritative against many decisions holding to the contrary in the ninth circuit. The Department of Justice knows, the Solicitor of the Labor Department knows, and Mme. Frances Perkins ought to know that a circuit court of appeals which has passed upon a subject is bound by its own decisions and not by the decisions of some other circuit. Such a misrepresentation by the Secretary of Labor is inexcusable. inexcusable.

inexcusable.

Furthermore, the records in the Department of Labor contain a teletype copy of a story which was sent by Mr. Beall to the managing editor of the New York Herald Tribune, as follows:

"In regard to the Bridges story I would like to say that Senator Copeland yesterday told a group of about eight reporters that the story in the Herald Tribune had been substantially correct, and that Mr. Reilly had told the committee that the Department had story in the Herald Tribune had been substantially correct, and that Mr. Reilly had told the committee that the Department had a case which should result in the deportation of Bridges."

The above statement has never been denied by Mr. Reilly, although the statement did not appear on the published transcript of the hearing before the Senators, but occurred "off the record."

In support of my fifth statement, as you probably know, the ordinary allen against whom a complaint has been made is immediately arrested by the Department of Labor, incarcerated, and hearings are conducted, without delay, by inspectors of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, to ascertain whether or not he is an alien who is deportable under the law, while in the case of Harry Bridges, months and years have transpired since the first complaints were filed against him.

As evidence of the favored position occupied by Harry Bridges, although he has been under investigation for many years, the Department of Labor has never as yet had a hearing to develop the facts with respect to him and has refused and ignored repeated requests of individuals, patriotic organizations, and even its own district director to proceed with the Bridges deportation hearings. Furthermore, the Labor Department's files clearly indicate that Harry Bridges is treated very differently from the ordinary alien who is illegally in the United States, as evidenced by a letter from R. P. Bonham, under date of September 23, 1937, to Edward J. Shaughnessy, Assistant Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, in which Mr. Bonham said: "I believe it proper that I acquaint the central office with the fact that when I interviewed Mr. Bridges some time ago on another matter he boasted that he had seen the central office with the fact that when I interviewed Mr. Bridges some time ago on another matter he boasted that he had seen the central office with the fact that when I interviewed Mr. Bridges some time ago on another matter he boasted that I acquaint the central office with the fact that when I interviewed Mr. Bridges some time ago on another matter he boasted that he had seen the central office file relating to himself and also that 'they' had an excellent 'intelligence' organization of their own that kept them well informed of what was going on. Several of the witnesses in behalf of the Government are fearful of their lives if ahead of the hearing the fact of their having to testify becomes known to the allen or Communists. There will be no leak at this end and may I not, in order that their lives may not be unduly endangered, adjure the central office and the Department to observe the greatest precautions to safeguard inviolate this record?" Several this record?"

As further evidence of the favored position occupied by Harry Bridges with the Department of Labor, in the memorandum of Mr. Houghteling to the Secretary of Labor under the date of April 14, 1938, Mr. Houghteling suggests as one reason for postponing the Bridges hearing the following: "If we go ahead with the hearing scheduled for the 25th and the Supreme Court should later affirm the action of the circuit court of appeals in the Strecker case, the Department might be charged with 'smearing' Harry Bridges unnecessarily."

This fear on the part of the Department of Labor lest it might "smear" this alien Communist, who has been illegally within the United States since 1920, is evidence of more than bias in his Onted States since 1920, is evidence of more than bias in his favor.

As further evidence of the favored position enjoyed by Harry Bridges and the consideration shown to him by the Department of Labor, it appears from the records of this Department that a Mr. Pressman, apparently the legal adviser of Harry Bridges, requested the Department by letter on April 12, 1938, for a "so-called bill of particulars as to the reasons underlying the institution of proceedings against Mr. Bridges." Commenting on this request, in a memorandum for the Solicitor, dated April 14, 1938, T. B. Shoemaker, Deputy Commissioner, said: "The basic thought is that the Department would be less likely to be criticized from any sources if it adhered strictly to the long-established practice in warrant proceedings and did not depart therefrom for this or any other particular case." In longhand on the margin of this letter, is found the following statement: "I do not entirely agree but matter can be postponed until case is set down for hearing again. G. D. R." (G. D. R. are the initials of Mr. Reilly.)

Further light is thrown on the attitude of prominent officials of the Department of Labor in the letter from Edward W. Cahill, district commissioner of immigration and naturalization at San Francisco, Calif., to James L. Houghteling, Commissioner, wherein the following significant language was used: "Before we bury this cisco, Calif., to James L. Houghteling, Commissioner, wherein the following significant language was used: "Before we bury this case (Bridges case), may I just present this sequence of facts?" On the same day, April 21, 1938, Mr. Houghteling, writing to Mr. Cahill, said: "Because of the reproof which I was obliged to administer therein to Mr. Bonham's excessive zeal and bad judgment in putting into the record his telegram prejudging the action of the central office, I request that you destroy this copy after reading it; you may, however, show it to Mr. Haff, whom I wish to keep in touch with the developments in this situation. Because Raphael Bonham is so keenly devoted to his duty as he sees it, I should not want a knowledge of this gentle reprimand to go beyond yourself and Mr. Haff."

and Mr. Haff."

Finally, on February 8, 1938, Mme. Frances Perkins wrote to Harry Bridges a personal letter in which she said: "Should the Department proceed with hearings, it does not mean that it has adopted the view that the evidence which the complaining witnesses have submitted is necessarily trustworthy."

The reasonable presumption from the foregoing is that there was a disposition on the part of some of the higher officials of the Department of Labor, including the Solicitor and Secretary Perkins, to accord special consideration to Harry Bridges.

Finally, although it was recommended by R. P. Bonham, district director, and by R. J. Norene, divisional director, in an application director, and by R. J. Norene, divisional director, in an application for a warrant for the arrest of Harry Bridges dated on September 22, 1937, that an averment be included in the Harry Bridges war-22, 1937, that an averment be included in the Harry Bridges warrant that he believed in, advised, advocated, and taught the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States, this averment was omitted from the warrant of arrest that was issued by the Department of Labor. This omission by the Department of Labor, in the face of the recommendation of its district and divisional directors, can only be interpreted as an intentional effort to so limit the charges against Harry Bridges that it may be possible for him to escape deportation.

In proof of the sixth averment, I direct your attention to the following chain of events which I have previously established, through documentary evidence: 1. That the Department of Labor following chain of events which I have previously established, through documentary evidence: 1. That the Department of Labor induced the Department of Justice to appeal a case imperfectly presented before the district court, in that certain exhibits were omitted as evidence; when the Department of Labor was only required under the decision of the circuit court to have retried the issues and submitted this additional proof. 2. That this appeal has been perfected, unnecessarily, by the Department of Justice, at the request of the Department of Labor, to delay the deportation proceedings against Harry Bridges; and with the hope that an adverse decision by the Supreme Court in the Strecker case might destroy the pending case against Harry Bridges. 3. That the documentary evidence heretofore submitted shows an overwhelming bias on the part of the Department of Labor in favor of Harry Bridges. 4. Finally, my examination of the petition for a writ of certiorari filed by the Department of Justice in this case convinces me that this petition for a writ of certiorari was prepared in the office of Mme. Perkins by her Solicitor, Mr. Reilly, and that the fine hand of Miss Perkins is revealed not only in the taking of an important issue in that appeal that was taken.

Understand, Mr. Solicitor General, this is not an attack upon you but is an effort to show the deception which has been perpetrated upon the Department of Justice.

you but is an effort to show the deception which has been perpetrated upon the Department of Justice.

In view of the foregoing, if it is still your desire that I should appear before the Supreme Court or that our committee should file a brief therein, I will try if possible to do so, either personally, as suggested by you, or in lieu thereof, endeavor to furnish you with the assistance of eminent counsel, to assist you in the presentation of this case.

I have an abiding faith in the wisdom, courage, and patriotism of the Supreme Court when all of the facts are before them

In volume 4 of the hearings before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities there will appear the testimony of Capt, John J. Keegan, chief of detectives of the Portland, Oreg., police department, who testified that he had held that position for 4 years and had been a police officer for 27 years; that as said chief of detectives he had had occasion to conduct investigations of alleged un-American and subversive activities in Portland and along the Pacific coast, and that as a result of said investigations—

"We found that Harry Bridges, leader of the longshoremen's union on the Pacific coast, was an alien and a member of the Communist Party of the United States of America, and also that Harold Pritchett was a Canadian subject and also a member of the Communist Party. He is president of the Timbermen and Saw Mill Workers' Union International"; and that these two men have been active in and around the Portland area as well as in other areas on the Pacific coast; and that while "they are working under the guise of labor leaders," they are in reality "both members of the Communist Party"; and that, based upon his investigation and the affidavits which he is in a position to furnish to the committee, he would say that their real purpose "in my belief it is to undermine the Government and overthrow it by force and violence when the the Government and overthrow it by force and violence when the proper time comes.

proper time comes."

This statement by Captain Keegan is based upon investigations that have been conducted by the Portland (Oreg.) detective bureau ever since 1918; and there are 20 witnesses available to testify with reference to the activities of Bridges and Pritchett, as well as other Communist leaders on the west coast; and—

"They will give you definite proof of operations of the whole Communist party on the Pacific coast."

Captain Keegan further testified:

"In my opinion, the Communist movement on the west coast is getting to be a very dangerous, I might say, condition, as far as our Government is concerned."

Captain Keegan further testified that other members of his force could elaborate more fully from personal knowledge on the subject of subversive activities:

"Yes, Detective Walter B. O'Dale, who was in the Intelligence Service during the war and conducted the same kind of investiga-tion, and we have had him on our staff since the war, exclusively on that work."

Captain Keegan further testified that he had in his possession affidavits or documents to substantiate the statements which he had made with reference to the activities of Harry Bridges and Harold

From an affidavit of John L. Leach, Captain Keegan read the

"I further state that in June of 1936 I was a regular and official delegate of the Communist Party to its ninth annual convention, held in Manhattan Opera House, in New York City, * * * and that as such delegate I discussed with my codelegates of California the nomination of Harry Bridges as a member of the central committee of the Communist Party, United States of America; * * was successful in seeing his name put in nomination and later elected to said central committee, * * the State central committee of California of the Communist Party."

Further quoting from this affidavit, Leach says:

"I was a candidate for the California sixty-seventh assembly district on the ticket of the Communist Party, and that in 1936 I was the Communist Party congressional candidate in the Seventeenth California District." "I further state that in June of 1936 I was a regular and official Captain Keegan then read into the record of the committee the entire affidavit of John L. Leach.

John E. Ferguson testified before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, and his testimony will appear in volume 4 of the hearings of that committee, and in substance is as follows:

"That he is a member of the Communist Party; that he joined that party in June or August 1936 in Portland, Oreg.; and that he was called to San Francisco to commence negotiations for a union with which he was connected, and while there attended all top-fraction meetings of the Communist Party, water-front section, in the city of San Francisco; that he joined the Communist Party to save his job; that it was either join the party or be thrown out as the business agent for the Pacific Coast Marine Firemen, Oilers, Water Tenders, and Wipers' Association; that he knows Harry Bridges well and has known him since 1935, and that Harry Bridges is a Communist and that he sat in top-fraction meetings with Harry Bridges in the city of San Francisco on dates too numerous to menis a Communist and that he sat in top-fraction meetings with Harry Bridges in the city of San Francisco on dates too numerous to mention, and that the Communist Party on the Pacific coast has been active in trade-union movements during the past few years, 'so active, Mr. Chairman, that through the Communist Party and their program they have been able to rape some of the stanchest trade-unions we have had on the coast.'"

Mr. Ferruson testified further:

Mr. Ferguson testified further:
"That he had attended a meeting in San Francisco with Harry Bridges and others in August 1936 and remembers the date 'because at that particular time the Communist Party defenders were drawn together to arrange for the defense of King, Connor, and Ramsay,' who were charged with the murder of George Alberts at the Encinal Terminal in Alameda. Alberts was the chief engineer of the Point

This witness further testified:

This witness further testified:

"That these Communists met and discussed details for the defense of the three men charged with the murder of George Alberts, and that subsequently four men were convicted of this murder, to wit, Earl King, E. G. Ramsay, Frank Connor, and George White, and that Earl King was a Communist and secretary of the Pacific Coast Marine Firemen, Ollers, Water Tenders, and Wipers' Association; and that he attended a meeting about a week prior to King's arrest, with other Communists, in a restaurant on Market Street in San Francisco, where they discussed the advisability of Earl King. arrest, with other Communists, in a restaurant on Market Street in San Francisco, where they discussed the advisability of Earl King 'scramming,' as they knew that the King-Ramsay-Connor case was about to 'break'; and that at this meeting there were present the witness and also Earl King, Henry Schmidt, and William Schneiderman; and that this meeting was the meeting of the top fraction, 'which puts forth and carries out the program of district organizer No. 2 of the Marine Federation of the Pacific. * * * The fraction organizer was William Sundheim.'"

He further testified that at the meeting that was held in San Francisco, with reference to the King-Ramsay-Connor defense committee, that the nature of the defense from a publicity standpoint

Francisco, with reference to the King-Ramsay-Connor defense committee, that the nature of the defense from a publicity standpoint was "an attempt to ridicule Earl Warren, who was prosecuting attorney, and to bring out to the public that they were not guilty of this alleged murder, but that the shipowners were concentrating all of their efforts on breaking the attempt or forthcoming strike, by having our men put in jail."

Ferguson also testified that they hired a publicity agent for the purpose of painting these men as martyrs to the labor cause and to ridicule the prosecuting attorney and that "they spent $16,000.

to ridicule the prosecuting attorney, and that "they spent $16,000 on publicity alone," which was secured "by assessing the members of the various trade-union movements," and that these organiza-of the various trade-union movements," and that these organizations contributed from their treasuries:

"Oh, yes; we donated on several occasions. The first time, and it is a matter of record in the minutes, we gave $3,000, 2 days after they had been arrested at one meeting of the Pacific Coast Marine Firemen, Oilers, Water Tenders, and Wipers' Association. We also volunteered a $5 assessment, which had everyone paid it would have amounted to over $40,000, as we had a membership of the part of $0.000 at that time."

upward of 8,000 at that time."

Ferguson also testified that the defense of these men was handled "practically entirely through the medium of the Communist Party" and that it is a part of the strategy of the Communist Party in the trade-union movement to get hold of the funds of different trade unions, and that "they are very successful in getting hold" of these funds.

In further proof of his averments with respect to the slush fund raised by the Communist Party, and the use made of the same to defeat the ends of justice, he offered two pamphlets which were financed and put out by the Communist Party and which were marked as "Exhibits Nos. 1 and 2 Ferguson." One of these pamphlets was entitled "The King-Ramsay-Connor Frame-up, Earl Warren's Murder Case," and the other pamphlet was entitled "Not Guilty, the Ship Murder Frame-up."

Ferguson also testified that he had attended top fraction meetings with Roy Hudson during the seamen's strike of 1937 and that Roy Hudson played "a very important part. He gave orders which Eridges, myself, William Sundheim, and the other Communist members obeyed."

Ferguson further testified that he had attended "at least five In further proof of his averments with respect to the slush fund members obeyed."

Ferguson further testified that he had attended "at least five Communist meetings with Harry Bridges." And with reference to said meetings he further testified: "I want to state that in top fraction meetings of the Marine Firemen, Oilers, Water Tenders and Wipers' Association no one but a Communist could get through those doors."

Ferguson testified that the attorneys for King, who was a Communist and charged with the murder of George Alberts, were George Anderson and Aubrey Grossman, and that they live in San Francisco and are members of the Communist Party. (The Department of Labor records, with respect to the arrest of Harry Bridges on March 5, 1938, show that Aubrey Grossman is one of his attorneys of record.) neys of record.)

Ferguson further testified that he had sat on numerous occasions in top-fraction Communist meetings with Aubrey Grossman.

Ferguson then testified how the Communists got control of the Ferguson then testified how the Communists got control of the negotiating committee during the seamen's strike in 1936 and 1937, how at first the coastwise negotiating committee was composed of three conservatives, that is, non-Communists, and of two Communists members, and how the Communists got control of this negotiating committee by putting out propaganda that Ben Drysdale, a conservative member of said committee, "had been seen talking to the shipowners and in his place" there was "elected one of the most prominent Communists on the Pacific coast," which gave control in the negotiating committee to the Communist Party, and through the maneuvers of the Communist Party the strike was prolonged at least 45 days longer than it should have been, and this was done through the propaganda machine that the Communist Party used at least 45 days longer than it should have been, and this was done through the propaganda machine that the Communist Party used to misconstrue the facts and the issues.

Ferguson further testified that at the same time that his union was on strike the International Longshoremen's Association of the Pacific Coast was also on strike, and that Harry Bridges was on the negotiating committee of that union, representing Pacific coast longshoremen.

Ferguson read into the record a letter dated February 9, 1937, from Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, congratulating him "as a member of the negotiating committee, on the part which you have played in bringing to a close the maritime strike," which letter was introduced in evidence as "Exhibit No. 3 Ferguson."

Ferguson further testified that-

"Just prior to the beginning of December in 1936, at a meeting "Just prior to the beginning of December in 1936, at a meeting of the top fraction of the Communist Party, which I attended, Harry Bridges, who was present among others, * * said: That strike, at all costs, must be prolonged; that that was the party line; and under no consideration was arbitration to be considered in any way, shape, or form.'"

That the foregoing testimony introduced before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities by Captain Keegan and Mr. Ferguson, and much more evidence of equal merit, was in the possession of or available to the said Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerald D. Reilly, for their use in deportation proceedings against Harry Bridges prior to April 1938, when they deferred the Bridges hearing.

proceedings against Harry Bridges prior to April 1938, when they deferred the Bridges hearing.

That for several months prior to April 1938 Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerard D. Reilly knew of the perjury committed by Harry Bridges in the execution of his first papers in San Francisco in 1928, and of other acts by Harry Bridges, involving moral turpitude, as evidenced by records in the files of the Department of Labor, including a letter dated June 22, 1935, from Thomas V. Donoghue, immigration inspector, to the district director of Immigration and Naturalization Service at San Francisco, Calif.; a letter from Immigration Inspector, M. C. Pommerane, addressed to Divisional Director of Immigration and Naturalization Service at Portland, Oreg., dated November 30, 1937; a letter from Assistant District Director Paul Armstrong to James L. Houghteling, dated March 1, 1938; and a letter from James L. Houghteling to Senator Royal S. Copeland, under date of March 10, 1938.

Whereas it appears from the foregoing that Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor; James L. Houghteling, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor; and Gerard D. Reilly, Solicitor, Department of Labor, as civil officers of the United States, were and are guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office in manner and form as follows, to wit: That they did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously conspire, confederate, and agree together, from on or about September 1, 1937, to and including the date of the filing of this resolution, to commit offenses against the United States, and to defraud the United States, by failing, neglecting, and refusing to enforce the immigration laws of the United States, including, to wit, section 137, title 8, United States Code, and section 156, title 8, United States Code, Houghteling, and Gerard D. Reilly have unlawfully conspired to defer and to defeat the deportation of the aforesaid alien, and have conspired together to release said alien after his arrest on his own recognizance without requiring a bond of not less than $500; and that said Frances Perkins, James L. Houghteling, and Gerard D. The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House and upon that I desire to say just a word. A great many suggestions have been made as to what should be done with this resolution, but I think this would be the orderly procedure so that the facts may be developed. The resolution will come out of that committee or remain in it according to the testimony adduced.

I therefore move the previous question on my motion to refer, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter addressed by me to Colonel Fechner, of the C. C. C.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am sorry to be obliged to object to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia, but until the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton] is printed, I must do so. I want also to call attention to the fact that last night, when I was temporarily absent from the floor, permission was given to one Member of the House to reprint two speeches he made in a previous Congress, and no one, not even the gentleman from California, who has a passion for conservation of the cash of the Treasury, objected. So I object to this request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unwilling to submit that request without the consent of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman], who has a special order today. If it is agreeable to the gentleman from Texas the Chair will submit the request.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record on the subject of the Federal judiciary.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object, Mr. Speaker.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Military Affairs Committee may conduct hearings during sessions of the House during the remainder of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD and Mr. HOOK objected.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman] is recognized for 45 minutes.

H. R. 1, FEDERAL TAX ON INTERSTATE CHAIN STORES—$100,000,000 LOBBY FOR SMEAR CAMPAIGN—WILL KIDNAPING AND MURDER BE RESORTED TO?—DELIBERATE ATTEMPT BEING MADE BY BIG MON-EYED INTERESTS TO INTIMIDATE ALL PUBLIC OFFICIALS—SERKO-WICH & JENCKES, TATTLER TUCKER AND "DR." POKEBERRY POPE EXPOSED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record and in connection therewith to insert certain excerpts and other printed matter and explanations thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman explain the nature of his proposed extension?

Mr. PATMAN. It will be something that will be material and relevant to the statements that I expect to make. I assure the gentleman there will be no extraneous remarks by outsiders unless they should consist of some excerpt that I think is material. I believe the gentleman has enough confidence in my judgment to trust me in that respect.

Mr. MAPES. I have complete confidence in the gentleman from Texas, but in view of the policy which seems to be adopted here, I ask the gentleman if the excerpts which he proposes to insert contain any clippings from newspapers or magazines?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not contemplate introducing anything like that.

Mr. MAPES. Nothing from newspapers or magazines?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I have nothing like that in mind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

H. R. 1

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 1 is a bill known as a bill to tax interstate chain stores. This bill will be insisted upon at this session of Congress. I know that the passage or the defeat of any measure depends upon public sentiment of the people of this Nation. If public sentiment supports a bill, it has a chance of passage and will be passed. If it does not support a bill, that bill does not have a chance. Public sentiment controls this country and its lawmaking body on all major legislation.

I do not concede that the Federal chain-store tax bill is the only major problem before Congress today. But it dovetails into other major problems on which I am working, and it has a great bearing on them. I refer to adequate security for the aged, parity income for farmers, discriminatory freight rates, a fair monetary system, uncontrolled and uninfluenced by those who are selfishly interested.

The American people are honest, fair, and intelligent. If they have the benefit of correct information on both sides of a public question, the majority of them will agree on what should be done, and by direct communication, compel their lawmaking Representatives to carry out their will.

Public sentiment controls this country to such an extent that I do not know of a Member of Congress who is not eager to carry out the wishes of a majority of his constituents.

More than 100 Members of Congress in the House of Representatives have already informed constituents that they will vote for this bill.

BILL MISREPRESENTED

This bill has been very much misrepresented. In the first place, it has been advertised by those opposing it as a bill to destroy the chain-store systems of this country. That is absolutely untrue. In the first place, it exempts from any tax nine stores. Then the tax on a large number of stores in one State is not unreasonably high, and I assure you that a concern under this bill could operate a comparatively large number of stores in one State without a prohibitive tax being levied against it, though I frankly admit that if the concern attempts to spread out all over the Nation and take all of the privileges and opportunities of the people all over the Nation, eventually, giving the concern time to liquidate, a prohibitive tax will be placed upon the stores outside of the State.

WHY A TAX BILL

The question will be asked if we are trying to restrict them to one State, why we do not introduce a bill to that effect. That was very seriously considered and a bill to that effect was prepared, but the best lawyers of the Nation said there was doubt as to its constitutionality.

There is one safe constitutional approach to this problem, and only one, and that is to use the taxing power of Congress as a vehicle to accomplish a worthy objective, and in doing it we have many precedents. After the War between the States, when the State banks were issuing currency and the Congress of the United States wanted to stop it, why did not the Congress pass a law saying that a State bank could not issue currency? The answer is that it would have been unconstitutional; but the Congress used the taxing power as a vehicle and placed a 10-percent tax on that currency, which resulted in destroying a number of State banks, but it accomplished the very worthy objective of saving the currency system of this Nation. Why do we place a tax upon the ownership and the transfer of machine guns? Is it for the purpose of raising revenue? No; admittedly not for that purpose. It is for the purpose of keeping up with the ownership and the transfer of those machine guns so that the Government can more effectively deal with the criminal class in this country. There are two cases-and I could name a number of others-where the taxing power of Congress is used as a vehicle to accomplish a worthy and desirable purpose. So in approaching this problem from the angle of taxes we are not breaking any precedent. It has been used by both parties, the Republicans and the Democrats, in the past in the Congress of the United States and for the same

ONLY 1 PERCENT OF CHAIN COMPANIES SERIOUSLY AFFECTED

There are about 1,500 chain-store companies in this country. The average number of stores to each company is 35. This bill will levy a tax so small upon 35 stores that no company will have cause to seriously object to it, and they will not object to it. Where do all these objections come from, you ask? They come from the 1 percent of the chain-store companies-1 percent, 15 or 20-that are attempting to gain control of retail distribution in this country. That is where the opposition comes from, and they are the ones that you hear from in these inspired letters, where the chain-store operator has eight forms for the purpose of getting people to write a letter. One of these forms is used and the letter written on stationery furnished gratis by the company, and the manager turns them in to the chain office unsealed. Then they are examined, and if found satisfactory they are sealed up and stamped and sent to the Congressmen in Washington-inspired propaganda from 1 percent of the chain stores that will be affected by the terms of this bill.

ONE COMPANY DOING 10 PERCENT OF FOOD BUSINESS

We have one concern in America that is doing 10 percent of the retail food business. Ten such concerns would do all of the food business in America. The effect of this large purchasing power has been disastrous, not only to the farmer, who has been the principal sufferer, but also to the consumer as well. The Federal Trade Commission has pointed this out to Congress on numerous occasions.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Which is the organization that is doing 10 percent of the business?

Mr. PATMAN. It is the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. that is doing 10 percent of the retail grocery business of America.

If nine other concerns like that one were doing as much, all the food business in America would be under their charge or under their control.

I would not like to yield any further right now. I will yield to any Member before I finish these remarks.

But in regard to the food business, the farmer has been hurt for this reason: They have ganged up on the farmers and they have forced them to sell for very low prices. They brag about this to their city consumers. They say in effect, "We have such buying power that we can make the farmers sell to us for whatever prices we offer. If they do not, we will go out of the market and destroy the market."

Some city consumers like that, but many of the city consumers have vision. They can see what this will lead to. If it destroys the farmers' buying power, the farmers are the best customers of the people who live in the cities, so that the buying power of these farmers being destroyed, the people who live in the cities are also injured by such tactics as that.

MIDDLEMEN WERE TO BE ELIMINATED

When chains first came in, the argument was made that the wholesale houses would be eliminated and that traveling men would be eliminated. The wholesalers have not been eliminated. The interstate chains have set up their own wholesale houses. There is no saving there. Not a single distributive expense has been eliminated by the chains. The result was 295,000 traveling men were turned off one year, in 1929. Of course, that upset our employment problem in this country. More have been turned off each year since. If that is in the interest of the country, I have not a word to say, but let us see if it is in the interest of the country. Did it reduce the spread between the producer and the consumer? No.

Take your own United States Government figures and you will discover that the spread the last 10 years during chain domination is greater than it was during the preceding 10 years of competitive business. The spread has become greater, and in 1932, when the chains made from 20 to 30 percent profit on their investment—that hard year that we all know about—the retail dollar was reduced to the farmer to the amount of 33 cents. He had been getting 60 cents out of every retail dollar before chain domination, but in 1932 it was reduced to 33 cents, and it is not much more than that today.

WHERE DO CHAIN PROFITS GO?

So in taking these hundreds of thousands of traveling men off the road and in creating a greater unemployment problem, it seems to me it has not helped the producer—we know it has not; it has not helped the consumer. Where does that money go? It goes to a few Wall Street bankers in New York and to a few charming American ladies who go overseas and marry some count for a husband. That is where the money goes. It is taken away from the local communities and placed in the hands of a few people and used by a few people. Much of it goes to foreign countries. It is not placed back into circulation, because they do not need any of the comforts and necessities of life that they are not already buying. So it creates a very serious and damaging problem.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AT STAKE

The Works Progress Administration has reported that every decade at least 2,000,000 young men and women must leave the farms and go into the cities, that the farms cannot take care of them. What are those 2,000,000 young folks going to do? If you have the chain-store system operating from one end of the country to the other, they have charge of all these local communities. The local print shop is out. The local lawyer is gone. They do not need him. In addition to that, the insurance agents are gone. He cannot go into the grocery business or the drug business. What are those 2,000,000 young people going to do? If you prevent them from having the opportunity of going into business for themselves, what are you going to do with them? That is just the young people. It is a serious question.

WHAT ABOUT CONSUMER?

Now, what about the consumer? The consumer is the father or mother of those young people. The consumer is also thinking about what will happen to him when he gets to be 45 or even 40 or 35 years of age. Private industry will not employ him. What can he do? In times gone by he could go into business for himself—into the insurance business or the printing business, or many different kinds of business, but he cannot do it now. So you might just as well make arrangements to either curb the greed of a few people who are trying to get control of retail distribution and all the privileges and opportunities of this Nation, or arrange to put many of them on some kind of relief roll when they get to be 21 years of age-certainly when they get to be 35, when they cannot get employment in private industry. It is a very serious question.

INTERESTED IN PROBLEM NUMBER OF YEARS

Now, I have been interested in this problem of chain stores for a number of years. In fact, 10 years ago I made speeches upon this subject, pointing out some of the things I have pointed out today. The Robinson-Patman bill was proposed. It was not price fixing. It included everybody. It was not anti-chain. We thought that bill would do the work, but we discovered, after we gave the independent merchants a better chance and opportunity in their buying power, which they should have had, the chains could still use the profits they make in a town where they already have a monopoly to squeeze out and destroy the independent merchants in another town until they got control in that town. So the Robinson-Patman Act failed to correct that abuse. Something else had to be done. So in 1938 I proposed this bill for the purpose of placing this tax on interstate chain stores.

THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

The Robinson-Patman Act comes up in any discussion involving independent merchants. Let me tell you briefly about that bill. It was offered in June 1935. I introduced it in the House and Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, introduced it in the Senate on the same day, I think, or about the same time.

It became a law on June 19, 1936. After that bill was passed there was much confusion in the country. You remember it. Some of them said: "Why, this changes the practices of 75 years. Why, you have done here in one short act what it took Congress 20 years to do in the Interstate Commerce Act. You have not approached this step by step like it was approached in the Interstate Commerce Act. What is this all about? How does it apply to my concern when it says 'commerce among the States.' What is commerce under the act? What does 'proportionately equal terms' mean in that law? What does 'quantity limits' mean? And what does 'advertising allowances,' 'facilities granted to all alike'-what does that mean? What does the triple damage clause mean? What does the criminal provision mean that provides for a jail sentence and a fine up to $10,000? What does 'using brokerage as a bribe' mean?'

LAW NEEDS CLARIFICATION CONTENDED

All these questions came up, and people wanted that law explained. The Federal Trade Commissioners held conferences every day into the night with groups, explaining that law. Some of them and their employees made speeches to different groups explaining the law. Chambers of commerce secretaries who understood this law were called upon to go out and explain it to people who wanted to abide by it. Senator Robinson was called upon. He said he would go when he could. I was called upon, and about that time it was suggested that a national tour should be made for the purpose of explaining to people all over the country what was meant by this law that had upset the bad practices of the trade for 75 years.

I was approached by a speakers' bureau, so was Senator Robinson. Senator Robinson could not go on a national tour. I talked with him. He advised me to go. He did make some speeches himself when he could conveniently. and he made good speeches. He explained the law as well as it could be explained. Businessmen said his explanation of it was very helpful to them.

NATIONAL SPEAKING TOUR

I had never been on speaking tours for speakers' bureaus, I did not know about this business of being a Congressman and making speeches and receiving an honorarium in excess of actual expenses. In 1930 James E. Van Zandt, a good friend of mine who is now a Member of this House, from Altoona, Pa., under the auspices of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and I made a trip through the Middle West in support of the bill to pay the veterans. We spoke four or five times a day during Christmas week. That was just a short tour but included many cities. The bill to pay 50 percent of the so-called bonus passed in 60 days after this trip. Then in 1932, 1933, 1934, and 1935 I made two national tours myself in behalf of a bill I was deeply interested in to pay the remainder due the veterans of the World War on their adjusted-service certificates, and which I felt would be helpful to the people of this country. This bill was H. R. 1 in two different Congresses. Those tours were made at my own expense—two of them. It cost me $10,000 of my own funds to make these two national speaking tours. Part of this money was borrowed and paid back later. I reached every State in the Nation on these two national speaking tours. and the law providing for full payment was enacted in January 1936. But this matter of making speeches for a speakers' bureau was a new thing to me. I did not know anything about it. I knew that oftentimes great speakers would come to our home town-Chautauqua speakers, lyceum speakersbut I never dreamed that the time would ever come when I would be called upon to speak under the auspices of such an organization as that all over the country.

A speakers' bureau—the Thomas Brady Speakers' Bureau in New York-communicated with me. They told me they had many invitations for me to make speeches. I said that I had received lots of invitations myself. They said, "Well, why not let us fix up a national tour?"

I said, "I do not know much about this. I want to look into it."

So I wrote to three able men, three men as great, and able, and as big as there are in the United States today. They are three of the most prominent, public, political men in America today, men in whom I have confidence and the people of this Nation have confidence. I will not read their names because I do not have their permission. I do not believe they would object, but I shall not take that liberty since I have not spoken to them about it. One of them wrote to me and said:

DEAR MR. PATMAN: I have your letter of September 30, concerning Mr. Thomas Brady, of New York.

I have from time to time delivered addresses for Mr. Brady at different sorts of public gatherings and have found him to be most courteous and reliable in every way. During recent years the depression has cut down very materially the number as well as the compensation of addresses, but I still deliver an address now and then for Mr. Brady, and I can recommend him as probably as reliable a speakers' bureau as I know anything about.

Hoping your relations with him will be mutually satisfactory,

I am,

Sincerely yours.

The second one wrote me:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATMAN: Thomas Brady, who for many years handled speaking engagements for me with entire satisfaction to me and to himself, has advised me of an interview he has had with you. I am sure that if you are interested in a lecture tour you will find no better man to assist you than Thomas Brady. With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours.

Another one:

My Dear Mr. Patman: Your letter of September 30 received.
Mr. Thomas Brady has, for the past 15 years, been my exclusive manager of my speaking engagements.
Mr. Brady is a gentleman of strict integrity, large ability, and entirely trustworthy; he is fair and militantly honest. He is the most reliable impressario in America today, and he is not interested, directly or indirectly in, or concerned with, promoting or defeating any legislation.
With assurances of high esteem,
Sincerely yours.

Sincerely yours.

After making that investigation I felt that it was all right. So I took the invitations I had and delivered them to this speakers' bureau and said: "Now, you take yours, and instead of my going to Chicago a number of times, and New York a number of times to accept all the many invitations from these places and other places, get them all together, coordinate them so I can make one speech in each place, just make one national tour." That is what was contemplated when it was gotten up. It was then decided that the independent merchants and different organizations in a number of places wanted to sponsor certain meetings. The speakers' bureau permitted them to do so. Then the time came before the national itinerary was completed when McKesson & Robbins public relations representative said: "We would like to sponsor some of these meetings. We understand many of them will be held in cities where we are vitally interested. We have business representatives there." I was conferred with about it.

I said, "Sure; it is all right with me. I do not care who sponsors the meetings, just so we have only one meeting at a Now, those meetings would have been held regardless of the particular ones who sponsored them, because various invitations from sundry organizations had come in from all these places where the meetings were held.

Here is the way I reasoned the matter. I was to talk about a law that had already been passed. I have as much right to discuss a law at a public meeting as to go into a courthouse and discuss a law. Many Members of Congress are lawyers. They practice law. They have a right to, and nobody criticizes them for it. I did not talk about anything else. The speaking tour was arranged for October, November, and December 1936 and at a number of the meetings McKesson & Robbins' local representatives had charge of the arrangements. In connection with that, Mr. Speaker, I am going to place in the RECORD a copy of the speech I made at these meetings, and this is exactly the same speech, so far as all material points are concerned, that I made all over the country, with the exception of the questions and answers at the end. At the end of every speech on the Robinson-Patman Act I yielded for questions. They asked me questions from the floor, and those questions were different at the various places, and, of course, the answers had to conform. That is the only difference. I will put the speech in the RECORD. I may say further that every speech I made was taken down in shorthand or by stenotype and every word I said on that trip is a matter of record, most of it in print. Every word in every one of these speeches has been read by my opponents.

COPY OF ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

I insert herewith a copy of the Robinson-Patman Act. It will be noticed that it is not a price-fixing bill; that there is not a word in it that compels anyone to use a wholesaler or a middleman. There is not a word in it that prevents a seller, whether he is a manufacturer or wholesaler, from selling direct to consumers.

COPY OF ADDRESS MADE ON NATIONAL SPEAKING TOUR IN 1936

The following is a stenographic copy of an address made on the national speaking tour in 1936. The other addresses were not substantially different except the questions and answers at the end. The questions at each meeting were different.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, as explained by the chairman, I am here to talk to you about the Robinson-Patman law. Never before in the history of this country has such a major controversial law been enacted in such a short length of time. There troversial law been enacted in such a short length of time. There is a reason for that. Usually it takes years and years to sell the country on a good cause. It happens sometimes that circumstances and conditions will cause this information to spread more quickly than at other times, and the people getting the truth, demanded that legislation be passed.

In 1935, in the early part of the year, the Speaker of the House, the Honorable Joseph Byrns from Tennessee, appointed me chairman of a committee to investigate certain lobbying activities of the American Retail Federation. I told him I would accept with the understanding that the committee be instructed to investigate large-scale buying and selling at the same time. That was agreed upon and I undertook to do what was necessary in the course of the investigation. We discovered in this certain trade practices that were destructive to public and consumers' interests. After these practices were discovered I wanted to introduce a bill which I wanted to become a law that would cure these abuses.

After these practices were discovered I wanted to introduce a bill which I wanted to become a law that would cure these abuses.

Many bills were submitted to me and we took one as a basis, which was submitted by the United States Wholesale Grocers Association. There are two wholesale grocers' associations, the National American Wholesale Grocers Association and the United States Wholesale Grocers Association and the United States Wholesale Grocers Association was because the lawyer who drew that bill, I believed, was the best informed on the subject. His name is H. B. Teagarden. He was for 6 years assistant to the Attorney General of the United States. He had charge of all antitrust matters. He represented the Government when the packers' consent-decree cases were disposed of, and he knew more about these matters than anyone to my knowledge, and for that reason I was glad to have him work with me on the bill.

We didn't take his bill in its entirety. We made changes. I consulted with the Attorney General, with the Federal Trade Commission, with other people that were interested. We drew the very best bill we could.

best bill we could.

I introduced the bill in the House. My good friend Senator Joseph T. Robinson introduced it in the Senate.

Joseph T. Robinson introduced it in the Senate.

Senator Robinson not only introduced the bill but was enthusiastically for it. He succeeded in getting it passed in the Senate very quickly. We were afraid there would be a filibuster there, so we just asked him to get any kind of bill he could get through and we would try to pass the bill we wanted in the House. In that way the bill was started.

This law is far reaching. It is confusing to some, but to people who want to carry out its purposes and intent I don't think it is so confusing. I know that certain problems will come up that will give you trouble. It is that way when any general law is passed. You can't write rules and regulations into law. You must write a general law and then you must fit every particular situation to that law.

If you were to start out in an automobile from New York City to San Francisco, you would pass through cities and States and to San Francisco, you would pass through cities and States and other jurisdictions having possibly 15,000 different laws. You wouldn't be disturbed on that account. You would not be afraid wouldn't be disturbed on that account. You would not be arraid of being arrested, because you would know you were going to do what was right. I feel that the one who honestly and conscientiously wants to carry out this law in sympathy with its purposes and provisions, I don't think that person is going to have any trouble adjusting his business to this law in a way that he will not be afraid of being brought before the court for any violation whatsoever.

In 1890 the Sherman law was passed, which was rendered ineffective.

In 1914 the Clayton Act was passed. Some say it is full of loop-holes and technicalities. Some say it has been ineffective and it hasn't helped business like it should and was intended. That is

This Robinson-Patman bill, however, is an amendment to the Clayton Act. Some lawyers say it is unconstitutional. That is said about any law. I would like to have you name some law that hasn't been called unconstitutional. That is usually urged against

The Interstate Commerce Act was passed more than 40 years ago. When that law was before Congress to stop chiseling on freight rates, they said it was "crackpot" legislation. There were a number who said "it is unconstitutional; it will not work." They said that about that law, and they will say it about this law. They are wrong. In the first place, the Constitution of the United States, article 1, section 3, says that Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce among the States. That is a grant of power. As you know, the Federal Constitution is a grant of power. Congress can only do what is granted. A State constitution is different. A State legislature can do anything that is not prohibited by its State constitution or Federal Constitution.

In this case we have that grant of power and Congress has exer-

In this case we have that grant of power and Congress has exercised that power through the Clayton Act.

The Interstate Commerce Act has stood up. Not one lawyer has come before the Supreme Court of the United States and seriously contended that it is unconstitutional. It is so plainly constitutional that a lawyer could not conscientiously contend that it is not.

The Clayton Act has stood the tests of the courts for 22 years. That is just an amendment to the Clayton Act. I believe this law

Section 26 of the Clayton Act says that if any part of the law is declared unconstitutional it will not affect the other parts. We get the benefit of section 26 of the Clayton Act in the Robinson-Patman Act.

Many people will say it will not be enforced. Let us see. The Interstate Commerce Act has been enforced.

PRINCIPAL PURPOSES OF ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

One correspondent told me in a letter that it will take half of the people in a country to enforce the law against the other half. In this law there is an incentive for one to help enforce it. The incentive in this law is to protect your own business as you should, incentive in this law is to protect your own business as you should, and in doing that you are going to use a law that grants you protection. This law has been passed because people in Congress believe that it is the duty of the Government to protect the weak against the strong. It is not for big business or against big business. It is not for chains or against chains, except if they should be guilty of practices which this law prohibits. This bill is to treat all alike, both large and small. It is not to give special price benefits or privileges to a few. It is to treat all fairly and equally, and to give equal rights, privileges, and benefits to all alike. It is not intended to subsidize small merchants. The inefficient small merchants will not be protected by this bill. It is not a shelter or an umbrella over them. The small merchant will have to succeed in the best way he can. It is not intended to have to succeed in the best way he can. It is not intended to give him special privileges and benefits. It is intended to give him equal rights and privileges in order that he may have the proper opportunity to succeed. We do not want to reward the small merchant. We do not want to do anything that will retard cleverness and greater efficiency. This law is not for that purpose.

WHAT WORD "COMMERCE" IN ACT MEANS

WHAT WORD "COMMERCE" IN ACT MEANS

Let us take the bill itself. Most of you have copies, as quite a number has been distributed here. Take for instance, this law says it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce. What does the word "commerce" mean? In another section of the Clayton Act, this being a part of the Clayton Act, this word "commerce" is defined as interstate commerce. That is only among the States. A business that is wholly within a State and whose customers, if it is a manufacturer, are wholly within that State and this manufacturer ships only to his customers, and none of it is shipped for resale out of the State, his business is not affected by this bill. However, I believe that 90 to 95 percent of the business will be affected by this law.

Take for instance the retail druggist, and this law will apply to him. There are very few wholesale establishments in America, according to my view, that are intrastate commerce and not affected by this law. Interstate commerce is the only commerce we can deal with.

UNLAWFUL TO DISCRIMINATE IN PRICE

UNLAWFUL TO DISCRIMINATE IN PRICE

This law says it shall be unlawful to discriminate in price be-tween different purchases of commodities of like grade and quality. If you are a manufacturer, you can't discriminate between your customers. The word "brands," one witness before the comcustomers. The word "brands," one witness before the committee insisted that we use, and like words. I opposed this. That would destroy our bill. It makes no difference what the brand is, if it is the same quality you can't discriminate. There can be no discrimination, if the quality is the same or similar, no matter what the brand is. Where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States, you can't discriminate in price where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Substantially, this was in the old law. The next part, however, was not in the old law. It is the meat of this bill. "Or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with the customers of either of them." I don't believe you could write language that would include more. write language that would include more.

Remember, if that discrimination injures a competitor, it is a violation of this law.

DIFFERENTIALS MAY BE GRANTED UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS

The act further states that nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for difference in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchases sold or delivered. Down to that section you had to charge the same price regardless of quantity. Where there is a different quantity involved, provided there is a difference in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery, you cannot grant a differential more than that. The differences that were discovered were that certain mass buyers, not all of them, some of them, had through intimidation and common racketeering forced manufacturers to give them such a low price that it was way below cost, and these manufacturers had to charge the independents a higher price in order to make up for that loss. In that way they could not continue long. not continue long.

not continue long.

This act is intended to prevent discrimination. There may be a difference in price only if there is a difference in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery.

If you are a manufacturer selling from your storeroom and a customer buys a hundred units and another buys a thousand, I presume the cost of the manufacture has been the same; in that case you couldn't discriminate. If there is a different method of sale and delivery and if you can save money, you can give him, if he is a large buyer, the benefit of the savings you have effected that way, but you cannot give him the benefit of any more.

QUANTITY LIMITS MAY BE FIXED

There is another provision in the act—that the Federal Trade Commission may, after due investigation after notice to all interested parties, fix and establish quantity limits, and revise the same as it finds necessary, as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce; and the foregoing shall then not be construed to permit differentials based on differences in quantities greater than those so fixed and established. A good friend of mine in Texarkana, Tex., is responsible for this. He told me for years we should have some kind of law to adopt this policy. This provision was written by reason of his suggestion.

was written by reason of his suggestion.

It comes about this way. More than 40 years ago there was a protest in this country against a few shippers getting a lower freight rate. The people didn't like that. They elected a Congress to prevent favoritism in freight rates.

A PRECEDENT FOR QUANTITY-LIMIT PROVISION

Judge Cooley, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, wrote the rule that the carload shall be the quantity limit; that wrote the rule that the carload shall be the quantity limit; that whoever ships a carload shall pay the same per car as on a trainload. The large shippers came in and they wanted to get the rule changed. Judge Cooley heard them and they told him that they could ship a trainload of freight from Chicago to New York going straight through without any stops at a cost which would be about 50 percent less per car, than if they handled each car separately. Judge Cooley said, "I don't take issue with you on that. I presume it is the truth, but if we permit a trainload or a large number to be shipped for a 25-percent or 50-percent reduction, only a few would be able to get the benefit of it. Those few large ones would destroy the smaller dealers. We are not going to permit it to be done."

The Supreme Court has not reversed the decision. It is dictum I will confess, but in a number of cases the Supreme Court has expressed itself on that question and said that it is not right for a few people to be granted such low freight rates that will permit expressed itself on that question and said that it is not right for a few people to be granted such low freight rates that will permit them to destroy the smaller dealers of the country. It is permissible and it is a duty upon the Federal Trade Commission that if in a certain line of business the Federal Trade Commission believes that a certain few are getting such low prices by reason of the large quantities, although there is a saving in manufacturing cost, to fix a quantity limit, as those few can by use of the great power, destroy the smaller dealers of the country and the Federal Trade Commission has a right to come in and stop it and fix a quantity limit. It depends upon the commodity, but the Federal Trade Commission will have the right to stop that definite monopolistic trend.

MAY SELECT OWN CUSTOMERS

The act further states that nothing contained herein shall pre-The act further states that nothing contained herein shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade. That is existing law. I wouldn't deprive any manufacturer of the right to select his customers. This law doesn't deprive him of that right. It recognizes it. The law says you must treat all customers fairly and equally. You do not have a right to cheat them. You must treat them all the same. That a right to cheat them. is what this law is for.

PRICE CHANGES NOT PREVENTED

Furthermore, that nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

You have a right to change your prices, just so long as you do not use that price change to favor some customer, and for the purpose of discriminating against other customers. You can change your price every 10 minutes, but if the jury should decide that you are doing that as a subterfuge for the purpose of favoring some customer and for the purpose of discriminating against other customers, you would be guilty of violating this law.

ADVERTISING ALLOWANCES

These other sections in the act mean this: In regard to advertising allowances, this bill doesn't prevent advertising allowances; it permits advertising allowances, provided all customers are given these same allowances on proportionately equal terms; that is, a manufacturer could advertise a certain product in his own name and say "See your local dealer," or he could list the names of all local dealers. We could grant an advertising allowance to each, so long as he treated them all fairly and equally and would compet them to use the money for that purpose. Under the old rule they were not compelled to use it for that purpose. One firm collected $6,000,000 one year for advertising and didn't use it, or we don't know, as there is no way to check. There was no accounting required. They could use it for profits. Under this law, if an advertising allowance is granted, it must be used for that purpose and every customer must be treated fairly and equally.

BROKERAGE CANNOT BE USED AS A BRIBE

It was discovered in this investigation that brokerage was often used as a bribe to bribe the other party to the transaction. That is not decent business. It is not fair business. It is not right. This Robinson-Patman Act will prevent that.

The "co-ops" cannot be the buyers and receive brokerage, too, and they are denied the brokerage under this law. At the same time the other benefits that they receive, I believe, are more than sufficient to offset their losses by reason of the loss of brokerage under this law. under this law.

BUYER GUILTY AS THE SELLER

Another provision of this law—and it is a very important one—that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section. That is to make the buyer guilty and place some responsibility upon him. He is just as guilty as a seller, and this law can be used against him, just as it can be used against a seller. Why should one want some special benefit over his competitor anyway? Why shouldn't he be satisfied with an even break? By his cleverness he will get ahead. What better vehicle for success do you need but that no one should induce anyone else to break the law and discriminate against his neighbor, who is his competitor across the street? across the street?

BORAH-VAN NUYS SECTION OF ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

Section 3 of the law is what is known as the Borah-Van Nuys section.

When this bill was in the Senate a motion was made to substitute it for the Robinson-Patman law. It failed but was accepted as an amendment. When the bill came to the House an effort was made there to substitute it for our bill. We successfully resisted the effort. The Robinson-Patman bill passed the House by an overwhelming vote, 290 for and only 16 against it. There was only one "no" heard in the Senate. It shows we must have the right side. We must have the side of justice and right or we would never have obtained such a large majority in both Houses in favor of this legislation.

in favor of this legislation.

would never have obtained such a large majority in both Houses in favor of this legislation.

The Borah-Van Nuys provision was not substituted but was inserted by the conferees as another section. It doesn't add anything to our bill particularly. It is certainly harmless from the Robinson-Patman bill standpoint. It doesn't add to it or detract from it. So, rather than have the bill defeated, we were very glad to accept it; and I don't know but what it will be very helpful. Let me tell you about it. It is not a part of the antitrust law. Section 3 is the criminal provision. It says one who violates this section may be fined up to $5,000 or may be imprisoned for a year. Therefore, it is necessary that we give some thought to this section. It means that a violator may be indicted by his local grand jury; it means that a violator may be indicted by his local grand jury; it means that a could have all kinds of trouble if he doesn't comply with this section. It says, first, "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce in the course of such commerce to become a party to or assist in any transaction of sale or contract to sell, which discriminates to his knowledge against competitors of the purchaser, in that, any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge is granted to the purchaser over and above any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge available at the time of such transaction to said competitors in respect to the sale of goods of like grade, quality, and quantity." Second, "to sell or contract to sell goods in any part of the United States at prices lower than those exacted by said person elsewhere in the United States, for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor in such part of the United States."

Of course, most retailers are not governed by this Interstate Commerce Act. The Congress cannot pass a law that will exactly cover most retailers, because that usually involves a sale purely intrastate. This will apply to concerns that are opera

DOES NOT HELP OR HARM "CO-OPS

Section 4 says, "Nothing in this act shall prevent a cooperative association from returning to its members, producers, or consumers the whole, or any part of, the net earnings or surplus resulting from its trading operations, in proportion to their purchases or sales from, to, or through the association." Many people are confused on that point. They think that is granting something to the "co-ops." That is not true. They are left just like they were. It is not taking from or giving to them. It is merely saying that they have a right to distribute their earnings. It means that they are affected by the law just like all other business institutions, and any earnings legally acquired they may distribute under this law. It earnings legally acquired they may distribute under this law. It leaves them where they were. It doesn't help them or harm them insofar as the "co-ops" are concerned.

HOW LAW MAY BE ENFORCED

How Law May be enforced

It will be asked, How will you enforce this law? In the first place the United States district attorney may ask that a person be indicted before the grand jury, or the United States district attorney may ask for an injunction before the United States district judge. If that injunction is granted and the injunction is violated, the violator may be punished by imprisonment or fine, or both. If any order is granted either by the Federal Trade Commission or an injunction, these orders may be used in evidence by a private party who has been wronged in his suit against the person who has discriminated against him. So it is necessary that some consideration and thought be given to that section. Not only can you enforce the law in the manner I have indicated but a private person or corporation or firm may employ a lawyer and go into court and ask for an injunction, and if that injunction is granted the offender may be punished. Such a person may employ a lawyer and go into court and show where he has been discriminated against and prove damages; and if the damages amount to $10,000, the law is that the judge in entering the judgment must give him three times that much or $30,000 and give him attorneys' fees and costs of suit.

There are plenty of teeth in this law to provide for its enforcement, which I hope will not be necessary to apply. I hope that business will accept it and recognize that it is a good law and ment, which I hope will not be necessary to apply. I hope that business will accept it and recognize that it is a good law and, recognizing it, will do their very best to see that it is enforced. I believe the manufacturers should be for it. It is helpful to them.

MANY MANUFACTURERS FAVORED IT

One manufacturer representative came to see me when the bill was pending. I asked him if he favored the bill. He said, "Personally I would like to see that bill become a law, but I am going to say that it will be a bad law for the purposes of newspapers. The reason is that the manufacturers I represent have such close The reason is that the manufacturers I represent have such close contact with mass buyers. Our manufacturers cannot be in a position of antagonizing those large mass buyers, and I am representing them, and I am going to have to say it will be a bad law; but, personally, I would like to see the law passed, and I believe they would, too."

After this bill had become a law most manufacturers agreed that it is a good law. Not so many helped in the passing of it. In Washington we do not always know who is supporting or opposing a bill out in the States.

opposing a bill out in the States.

WILL HELP RETAILERS

Let me show you how this act will help the retailers. The retailer will be getting a fair deal. That is all he is entitled to. All businessmen want in this country is an equal opportunity in business. We do not want anyone to have an unfair advantage over us, and we certainly don't want to seek an unfair advantage over anyone. over anvone.

over anyone.

I have four boys I am trying to rear and educate, and those four boys, all they are entitled to is a fair, square deal—just an equal opportunity, that is all I want them to have. If they fail then, I will be sorry they failed, but I cannot blame anyone. I would certainly rather see them fail in business than to see them succeed by unfair and dishonest methods. That broad road of opportunity should be open to them. Then they would have the same chance as your boys and other boys. I believe we should have business that way. I believe that it is the time when the American businessman should say to himself that he is willing to cooperate and work shoulder to shoulder with other competitors, sellers, and manufacturers, to the end that this cheating, chiseling, and underhanded methods will be forever stopped in this country. country.

LAW IN INTEREST OF PEOPLE

Mr. John Dargavel is the executive secretary of the National Association of Retail Druggists. The National Association of Retail Druggists was very effective in supporting this law, without discounting the efforts and the services of other organizations.

After this law was passed John Dargavel, the executive secretary, said: "Enemies of the act say it is weak. Let them prove it. They say it is full of loopholes. Let them try to get through. Perhaps their necks will be in a noose rather than a loophole."

I think that all dealers should willingly and gladly carry out the purposes and intent of this law, which is not only for the manufacturer and the retailer and other distributors, but in the interests of the public, the American people.

NO CHANGE IN ACT EXPECTED

NO CHANGE IN ACT EXPECTED

This victory we have gained, I consider is a great victory. before have independent merchants received so much in the form of national law for their benefit. That is my opinion. It is my opinion further that no serious effort will be made at the next session of Congress to change this bill substantially in any respect. If there is an effort made in the direction of weakening the bill, I want to tell you now that such effort will fail. It is not going to succeed. If there is any change made in this law I believe it will be made to strengthen it, if anything, and not to weaken it.

ONLY FAIR AND HONEST PROFITS SHOULD BE DESIRED

The independent merchants have at least gained the goodwill of the American people. The people have recognized honesty and fairness in business and the people engaged in business should want only to make a fair, honest profit and not engage in chiseling and cheating.

FARMERS MUST BE HELPED

I live in the Southland where they produce cotton. Some people who do not reside in the South are wondering "what difference does it make to me whether the farmers get 5 cents or 20 cents a pound for cotton." There is a new school of thought in the minds of the American poeple. That new school of thought is constructive. It is going to help build this country and help prevent its destruction, and that thought is that we are our brother's keeper—just as old as the Bible but it is a new thought as far as business and the public generally are concerned. That new school of thought is that we must live and let live. We must recognize the right of other classes and groups to make an honest living.

other classes and groups to make an honest living.

Thirty million people are dependent upon farming for their living. If they get good prices for their production, they can buy what you manufacture here, and if they can buy, your factory wheels will continue to turn and your wage earners will continue to get good wages.

wheels will continue to turn and your wage earners will continue to get good wages.

In 1932 I was in Lynn, Mass. I told those people—you are walking the streets, you are in the bread lines, your shoe factories are closed. You ask why can't you go back to work. Because the people who need shoes don't have buying power. You must help the farmers all over the Nation to get a good price for their products. When they can buy shoes, you will be called back to work, you will get good wages, and you can buy what they produce. It has resulted that way.

Thirty-six million people are wage earners. If those people get good wages, they can buy what the farmers produce. They can buy the services of the 9,000,000 people dependent upon the professions for their living. They can patronize the 11,000,000 dependent upon transportation and communication for a livelihood. One can help the other.

We want to keep that good constructive thought in the minds of the American people.

of the American people.

IS THE CONSUMER ENTITLED TO THE LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICE?

I know that many people make the statement that the consumer is entitled to the lowest possible price. If you carry that statement without qualification to its logical end, it will destroy this country. Do you know the lowest price the consumer is entitled to? It is a price that will give the producer a fair price for what is produced. The man who produced the raw materials is entitled to a fair price.

Thirty-six million people are dependent upon wage earning for a living, including their families. That wage earner is entitled to a fair wage, and if the consumer forces a price that will destroy that wage earner's buying power, he is destroying himself. Furthermore, that consumer should be glad to pay a price that will not only give the farmers or the producer a fair price and the wage earner a fair wage, but a fair profit to those who transport and distribute that produce. They are also entitled to a fair profit. We must adopt that policy of live and let live in this country. We must continue to recognize that fact or we cannot have prosective.

we must continue to recognize that fact or we cannot have prosperity. We must all be prosperous together or there will be no prosperity.

The American people are willing for people engaged in distribution to make a fair profit for the service they are rendering. The American people do not object to that. Any policy that will destroy buying power is destructive.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS NOT OFFICIAL

Now, then, I have been requested to answer some questions regarding this bill. I want you to understand that the answers I give are not official. I want you to know that I have no right to interpret this law. That is for the courts and the Federal Trade Commission. I can tell you my opinion with the understanding that those who construe laws have different opinions. Sometimes the judges have a divided court. That has happened in the Supreme Court many times in recent months. I will just give you my opinion. I suggest that you do not rely upon it, however. You take the facts to your own particular lawyer, but I can tell you what I believe should be done in view of what we had in mind when the law was passed. law was passed.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q. Will the bill raise retail prices? How will it affect the con-

I believe it will have a tendency to lower prices and stabilize

We know prices are going up. You can't have inflation of money and credit without having increased prices. This law will not cause it.

Q. Will it prevent the larger buyer from buying more?

It will prevent the large buyer from getting the benefit of any saving except where it is justified and he can show that it is justified by reason of the difference in cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery, one or all of those three.

Q. Will it curtail or does it prevent advertising?

It will not retard or curtail advertising, but it will force one who gives advertising allowances to treat all customers the same—to give them proportionately equal terms. The seller has the right to select his customers and when selected he is charged with the duty under this law to treat them all fairly and equally.

Q. Does the law discourage quantity buying?

I doubt if there will be the inducement in every case to buy in large quantities as there was before, because the difference in price will only be the difference in cost of manufacture, delivery, or sale.

Q. Is a merchant who accepts an allowance liable under the terms of this bill?

Yes; I have answered that before. Q. Will the benefits be equally beneficial to the merchants and to the public?

Yes.

Q. Do you believe that some will test the legality in the United States Supreme Court, and what do you think the United States Supreme Court will decide?

I believe that the Court will sustain the law, because it has never held unconstitutional the Interstate Commerce Act. It is so plainly constitutional. The Clayton Act has stood the test for 22 years and this is just an amendment to the Clayton Act. I believe this law will be held constitutional, If for any reason a part should be held unconstitutional, it will not affect the other parts of the law. parts of the law.

Q. How are free goods given for the purchase of specified quantities or deals?

Free goods is just another way of giving a lower price. If you use free goods, you must give free goods proportionately to all customers alike.

Q. Is an extension of time for a price discount a violation of

Q. Is an extension of time for a price discount a violation of this law?

If the retailer does not pay his bill in the 10 days specified and if it is extended over such period of time that it grants to the customer a special price or special privilege which would or could be measured in dollars and cents, and would result in giving to him a discrimination by reason of that extension of time, I think it would be a violation. Obviously a few days' time is not going to make any difference as the courts will use common sense in administering the law, and the courts and the Federal Trade Commission are not going to deal in petty trivial matters and a few days failure to pay I don't believe would be sufficient to be construed as a difference in price.

Q. Are temporary deals, generally offered to the trade, permissible and if so must customers be notified and if one is accidentally left out, will that be considered a violation?

You have a right to change prices any time you want to so long as you do not discriminate against your other customers and if you are announcing a sale and you announce it to all your customers, they have a right to get the benefits of it. If one is accidentally left out I don't believe it would be considered seriously unless there was some evidence to show that you intended to deprive him of that opportunity. If he could show that you were using that price change to discriminate, it may be a basis for a damage claim.

O. Where one nurchaser takes multiple and the other single.

using that price change to discriminate, it may be a basis for a damage claim.

Q. Where one purchaser takes multiple and the other single warehouse delivery, with considerable saving in trucking, may the purchaser receive a lower price? May that saving be expressed in a price difference?

I have answered that previously. If there is a difference in cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery, yes, and there would seem to be of manufacture, sale, or delivery, yes, and there would seem to be in this case.

Q. Customer No. 1 orders from hand to mouth, compelling the manufacturer to fill his orders, while customer No. 2 orders in advance, permitting the manufacturer the use of season labor, etc., may the manufacturer grant customer No. 2 a lower price, or will the manufacturer be compelled to give both the same price?

The manufacturer may grant prices representing the saving as between the customers.

between the customers.
Q. A merchant sells through different methods. Across the counter, mail order, etc. May he make a differential in price?
Yes, only however, if there is a difference in the cost of manu-

Yes, only however, if there is a difference in the cost of manufacturing, sale, or delivery.

Q. If a customer buying a certain quantity is entitled to a demonstrator, how would his competitor buying half that quantity be compensated, as a demonstrator cannot be divided?

He could be allowed the demonstrator for half the period. If the period was 30 days, he would be entitled to the demonstrator for 15 days. You can work it out some way on some fair and reasonable basis, so as not to create a discrimination. I feel sure that can be done.

Q. Suppose a manufacturer offers a dollar a month to great dwarf.

can be done.

Q. Suppose a manufacturer offers a dollar a month to every druggist who will place a sign on the side of his truck and some of his customers have a cash and carry business and don't have these trucks, would that be a discrimination?

No; it will not be a discrimination. Window displays are the same way. Some provision must be made whereby all will receive proportionately equal terms.

On March 2, 1936, we had what was known as the Independence Day Meeting for independent merchants in Washington. That was a most effective meeting. At that meeting 3,000 independents from all over the country were there. We explained this Robinson-Patman law. These men were diplomatic men. They understood it. They used the right methods. They did not try to intimidate or coerce any Member of Congress to vote for it. If you are armed with a just cause, you do not have to intimidate. You can tell the truth. All you have to do is get the truth to the people. These representatives sold this bill to Members of Congress—both Houses. They helped to sell it all over the Nation.

This bill did not receive much publicity in the papers. That is why these clairvoyants and fortunetellers in Washington said the bill was going to be defeated. They were taking the newspapers' word for it. We used radio and other methods of distributing information and we sold this cause to the people.

This is a good law and I hope it will be generally observed.

The questions asked at each place involved the following provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act:

The purpose of the act.
When price discriminations are lawful.
Forms of price discrimination.
What are costs?
Price discrimination to meet competition. Rebuttal of a prima facie case. Who are in competition? Cash discounts and terms of sale. Advertising. Other forms of promotional allowances. Brokerage allowances. Transportation charges. Free goods and special deals. Premiums and consumer give-aways.

Consignment of goods. Proportionally equal terms.

Exemptions as to perishables, obsolescence, etc.

Selections of customers.

Wholesalers and functional discount.
Cooperatives and pool buying and selling.
Application of the act to Government bids.
Import and export sales.
Contracts made prior to the act.

Constitutionality.

Interstate and intrastate commerce.

Means of enforcement and recourse in event of injury.

Federal Trade Commission's authority to establish quantity

The Borah-Van Nuys amendment, or so-called criminal section of the act.

At each place there were some 10 to 25 questions, depending upon the time consumed and other circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I would not like to yield just yet, as I have my time divided, but I will yield to any Member before I finish.

Mr. Speaker, this concern, McKesson & Robbins, was 103 years old. The people locally associated with the McKesson Co. with whom I came in contact were the highest-type businessmen. They were highly respected leaders in the communitles in which they lived. I did not know the officials at the home office, because I had no contact with them. I had no occasion to have any contact with them.

WHO ATTENDED MEETINGS

Locally, wherever they sponsored a meeting, they would almost invariably have present at the meeting the local Member of Congress. The mayor of the city or his representative and other cutstanding local people were usually there, and at every meeting that I addressed on that tour there was one or more Members of this House or Members of the United States Senate present. At practically every such meeting I was introduced by a Member of this House or of the United States Senate. They know what I spoke about and they know every question that was asked. Many of them are here now. No person can even suggest or intimate that there was anything unethical or wrong in regard to making these speeches about a law that had already been passed.

At these meetings we had present the independent merchants, the purchasing agents, salesmen, accountants, executives, and attorneys and in many cases representatives of chain stores, because they were greatly interested in finding out what this law was about.

Mr. Speaker, I did not have occasion to meet the president of that concern in 1936, and the speaking tour was finished in 1936. If he ever attended one of those meetings, I did not know it. In 1937, after this national tour was over, he came to my office to meet me, just like lots of men have. I had never met him before or received any communication from him prior to that time, and I have never at any time, before or since, had any business or transactions with him or his company, directly or indirectly. Some of the biggest business executives in this Nation have come to my office, and I am glad to see them. I am not going to their office. I am not going into any lobbying headquarters, if they have any; but any time a Mr. Morgan, or a Mr. Mellon, or any other person wants to see me, if he is a man I think has information I should have, I am glad to get that information if he comes to my office. This man came by to see me; no business, just to meet me, he said. That was in 1937, after the tour was over. This was on Inauguration Day and he said he was on his way to a meeting of business executives, who were called to Washington to get up recommendations to be presented to the President of the United States.

Later, he mailed me a copy of a plan which he had for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to small business-not an application for a loan for himself or his company. He requested that I arrange for him to meet my fellow Texan, Mr. Jesse Jones, to present the plan, which I, as a matter of courtesy, was glad to do. Any other Member interested in the small-business man would have done the same thing for him or any other recognized leader in business under the same circumstances.

SMEAR CAMPAIGN

After all this business came out about the head of McKesson & Robbins turning out like he did, of course if these interstate chain stores could in some way smear me and try to weaken my influence with the people and Congress, they would certainly take advantage of the opportunity to do that, and I know it. I have been in these fights before. For 10 years I have been in just such fights. I can tell you of a period when many times when I went to the office in the morning the files in my locked cases had been taken out, examined, and left on the floor. My safe had been opened the same as I could open it myself. My telephone wires were tapped both at home and at my office. Detectives were standing at the end of the corridor in which my office was located. They would interrogate people who went in and came out of my office. I have gone through these things before, and I know what it is. If you come out courageously against any big special interest with power and influence, as well as unlimited funds, you might just as well expect to go through what I have gone through for 10 years.

DISCLOSURES OF CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE

When I was chairman of a congressional committee in 1935 and 1936 investigating large-scale buying and selling, I discovered from testimony that among the things many of the people who are now opposing me in this fight were guilty of are the following:

- (1) Conspiracy to obtain control of retail distribution in
- (2) Stopped the showing of a picture, Forward America, which was favorable to independent business.
- (3) Attempted through influence to have our committee appoint as our principal investigator a man who, it was later discovered, was employed by chain-store interests under in-
- (4) Organized what they called a "cornstalk brigade," which was composed of key farm leaders whom they paid to go before legislatures and pose as farmers' representatives for the purpose of defeating certain legislation.
- (5) Employed influential men in each State who were close to members of the legislature and the Governor and who could stop legislation they were opposed to.
- (6) They admitted that their attorneys were instructed if they could not succeed in defeating a bill in a State legislature to get some amendment adopted which sounded good, but would cause the law to be declared unconstitutional if
- (7) Employed influential people on contingent basis to defeat legislation. That is, if the bill did not pass a certain session, they received a certain large amount of money. If it did pass they did not receive anything.
- (8) Faked consumer groups were organized to deceive the people, and at some meetings held by certain groups every person attending was on the pay roll of the interstate corporate chains.

- (9) Schools were held to teach their representatives how to deceive the people.
- (10) They had unlimited funds, which were used for bribery, deceit, trickery, and treachery.
- (11) They brought pressure to bear on newspapers that carried their advertising to print nothing about independent business, but boost absentee-owned business.
  - Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?
  - Mr. PATMAN. For a brief question.
- Mr. MAY. If the gentleman will permit me preliminary to my question, may I make the statement that so far as I am concerned I have never doubted, I do not doubt now, and I never will doubt the good faith and the good intentions of the gentleman from Texas in his lecture tours in which he tried to give the public direct information as to the effect of a new statute that had been enacted into law. There are just two matters that the gentleman has raised about which I would like to have information, because my mind is open on this subject.

The first is a preliminary statement with respect to the power of Congress to use the taxing power for desirable purposes. It is my understanding that the constitutional purpose of a tax measure is to raise revenue. That is the idea that I had in mind, and I want the gentleman's views as to whether or not that is the prerogative of the taxing power of Congress.

- Mr. PATMAN. It has been used for many other pur-
- Mr. MAY. I imagine the gentleman has in mind the question of monopolies and the destruction of unfair competition?
  - Mr. PATMAN. That is right.
- Mr. MAY. Those are two of the things that may be effected by legislation of this type.
  - Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct.
- Mr. MAY. May I ask one other question, and then I shall be through? Has the gentleman any facts or figures relating to how this measure may affect the consumers of groceries, in view of the fact that taxes always go into the cost of production?
- Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I have figures on that question and I expect to place them in the RECORD. I doubt that I shall have time to discuss them as I should like to because, of course, questions do take up time and my time is limited. Too, I must yield to every Member who wants to ask me a question. I asked for this time and obtained it nearly a week ago so Members would know in advance and be prepared to ask me any question they desired. However, I am very glad the gentleman brought up this point. I assure the gentleman I shall cover the matter in my extension of remarks or some subsequent speech if I do not cover it in this speech.
- Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
- Mr. PATMAN. In 2 or 3 minutes. I have my time divided and I will be ready to yield in that time.
- It was said by my opponents concerning this lecture tour, "There is that man PATMAN out making a speech for a chainstore tax bill on the pay roll of a concern which will be helped by such tax bill if passed." The gentleman's paper over in Chicago carried that statement. Was that true? There was not a word of truth in it. The chain-store tax bill was not even introduced until 2 years later, or in 1938, so there was not a word of truth in it and no private concern at any time paid me to make a speech of any kind.

Another newspaper stated, "Why, he was out making speeches for the Miller-Tydings bill, a price-fixing bill." There was not a word of truth in that. I may say that bill is regarded as an enabling act and not a price-fixing bill. Do not be swept off your feet about this argument regarding the Miller-Tydings bill. The law Congress passed is all right. You need not be afraid of that law. I was not out making speeches for it, however.

COSTER OPPOSED CHAIN TAX BILL

It has been discovered that Coster-Musica, the head of McKesson & Robbins, not only was not favorable to the antichain store tax bill that I introduced in 1938, but he actually contributed money to organizations that were opposing it; so where does that argument that I was campaigning for a bill in 1936 or 1938 to help Coster come from? There is absolutely nothing to it, nothing in the world; but it shows the extent to which people will go to try to weaken or destroy you if you fight certain interests in this country.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am not addressing my remarks to the economic principles of the gentleman's bill, because I know nothing about them. I do not know whether it is a good or a bad bill, because I have not studied it thoroughly. I am addressing myself to the principle of whether or not anyone who introduces and sponsors legislation should receive financial remuneration for working for and in behalf of that bill. A great metropolitan paper in Chicago carried the statement that the gentleman received $18,000 in 1 year for going forth with this bill and that the gentleman received a $4,000 automobile. This paper contended that McKesson & Robbins paid for a full page ad in a retail drug publication announcing a series of speeches by the gentleman. What I should like to know is whether or not the gentleman did receive financial remuneration and what the reason is for the activity of McKesson & Robbins in the gentleman's behalf in order to put this information before the people of the country. I believe the Members of the House are entitled to know that.

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, the gentleman knows I expected to cover that question, as I had told the gentleman in private conversation. However, I do not object to its being asked at this time. I had just as well break the sequence of my speech and answer it now.

Let us refer to the speakers' bureau. I have here two brochures showing the speakers in that bureau. You find in both these brochures pictures and statements concerning the most prominent men in this Nation. They are people who have been speaking under the auspices of this speakers' bureau for more than a quarter of a century. This speakers' bureau is a reputable and dependable one, so there cannot be anything said about it. My dealings with Mr. Thomas Brady were entirely satisfactory in every way.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PATMAN. In just a minute. The gentleman from

Mr. PATMAN. In just a minute. The gentleman from Illinois has brought up some questions I want to answer now before I forget all of them.

Mr. COLMER. If the gentleman will permit, I believe it would be enlightening to the membership—and the gentleman should do it in fairness to himself—since it is a matter of record, to state who some of these gentlemen are.

Mr. PATMAN. There are included some of my own colleagues in this body, at least a large percent of the ones who are in demand as speakers. It also includes a large percent of the Members of the United States Senate who are in demand as speakers. It is not a disgrace, it is an honor to be called upon to make such speeches. Suppose you were advocating a particular plan for the benefit of the people and were invited to go to Chicago to make a speech, you would have a large audience of probably thousands of people, and more would hear you over the radio; you would get something in the newspapers about any plan you were proposing. It is news. You get your message over to the people. Oftentimes that is the only way you can get your message over to the people. It is a means of communication. Otherwise nothing would be said about that bill you placed in the hopper.

The gentleman from Illinois has asked questions about certain statements. The gentleman does not charge the statements are true because he does not know. He knows they are rumors put out by my opponents. The reason I say that is because I know they are not true. No speaker makes money-making speeches. I have heard it said that a number of Members make more money through making speeches than they do as Members of the Senate or the House. I do not believe that is true. If you are active as a leader in a national movement you will spend more than you get for speech-making any time in the year. You cannot be in a national movement and not spend everything you make. I have made no profit out of it and neither has any other Member of this House. You become enthusiastic and eager to get your views across to the people about questions in which you are interested, and you spend everything you can to disseminate that information in every way you can. Your compensation comes from the knowledge that you are rendering a public service and receive recognition for it. I have not made, and neither has any other speaker, any $18,000 a year. It is a ridiculous sum. It is so ridiculous I do not believe even a member of the President's Cabinet or of any Cabinets in the past—and Cabinet members have in the past been sent out by the same speakers' bureauhas made any such sum of money. During the last decade men in public life much higher than Cabinet members have spoken under the auspices of this same speakers' bureau.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. In just a minute.

I know that when this question came up these chains were so interested in getting something on me-they heard I had a new car that I bought last fall, and they said, "Oh, it is bound to be a $4,000 car"-and they sent a man in an airplane from New York to Texarkana, my home town, and snooped around there inquiring into my business. They went to the banks and to the finance companies, and what did they find about this $4,000-car story? They found that I had bought three new automobiles since I have been a Congressman, for 10 long years-cars in the low-priced classand I paid for each one of them on the installment plan just like a lot of other people are doing in this Nation today, and they found that this car that I bought last fall was not a $4,000 car or a $2,000 car, but it was a car made by a prominent automobile manufacturer in America who has four letters in his name, and I am paying for it on the installment plan just like many other people, and no one has ever given me any car or any part of a car. That is just a sample of the untruthful statements that are made by unfair opponents.

They went into the insurance companies to inquire about policies I had taken or investments I might have made and everything of that sort. These people, my opponents, can get into anybody's office in America, I believe. They have plenty of money, and money can hire and buy brains and influence. I had nothing to hide, and I did not mind this. They checked me up. I am glad that they did. What did they find? My assets, which are very small, have not increased in 10 years, and my debts, although I never had a past-due debt 1 day in my life that I did not make satisfactory arrangements to extend, they found I owe practically the same amount of money as I owed when I came to Congress more than 10 years ago. That is what these snoopers found out when they went into my business.

All I know about the page ad referred to by the gentleman is that I read in the newspaper after this matter came up that such an ad was carried. I looked it up and discovered that an ad did appear stating that I was going to make some speeches concerning the Robinson-Patman Act—the President signed the bill and it became a law June 19, 1936, and the date of the ad was November 23, 1936—and the first words in the advertisement gave as the object of the address the following:

To consolidate the sentiment of the retailers, manufacturers, and businessmen generally behind the Robinson-Patman law for the elimination of discrimination between consumers and for the establishment of fair price in business.

The ad further discloses that I commended the McKesson Co., as I commended other firms, although it is not mentioned in the ad, for courageously coming out in favor of the observance and enforcement of the law and not try to find loopholes in it, in view of the fact that the law required them to immediately revise their schedules in a way that the smaller dealers of the country would receive prices three-quarters of a million dollars less each year from that company than they had been receiving before the Robinson-Patman Act passed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I realize that the gentleman is a great speaker and is well informed. The question that occurs to me and the important question is whether or not your being engaged to make this tour, speaking in behalf of or against any bill in this House, had anything to do with the fact you are a Member of Congress. In other words, were you selected to do this work, in your opinion, and I know the gentleman is well informed, and can inform us whether or not his selection to do this work was connected in any wise with his being a Member of Congress.

Mr. PATMAN. I presume the gentleman means law instead of pending bill. I do not know for sure that it was, because I think a Federal Trade Commissioner would have been in greater demand than I was because a member of the Federal Trade Commission naturally would have a lot more to do with this question. However, I was a sponsor of the act and knew something about it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. PATMAN. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I am glad that the gentleman has found it agreeable to concede the point that in all probability the fact he was the author of the bill and was acquainted with all of its provisions and was tremendously interested-

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. COX. That this was the consideration that prompted this agency in soliciting his services.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I have 15 additional minutes? I see my time is slipping away from me in this period I had allotted for questions and I want to yield to everyone who wants to ask me a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DINGELL). Is it agreeable to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] for the Chair to submit that request?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is discussing a question that is of great importance to him and of interest to his friends. I think he is entitled to make the statement and that he ought to make it, and to accommodate his needs I very gladly yield the time which has been allotted to me.

Mr. PATMAN. No; do not yield the time, but just let me have 15 minutes additional.

Mr. COX. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman] to proceed for 15 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. PATMAN. Let me answer the gentleman's first question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This one is coupled with the other question. Another thing that interests me is this: Were all of these meetings that the Congressman addressed public meetings that anybody or any person had a right to attend?

Mr. PATMAN. Except where admission was charged. Sometimes admission was charged. Admission was not charged at any of the McKesson meetings. I had nothing to do with the collection of admissions. I had nothing to do with any local arrangements; no speaker does; but sometimes they charge admission, and I did not care and do not care now how they operated it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Was the public generally admitted if they desired to pay an entrance fee?

Mr. PATMAN. Absolutely. Everybody was admitted. There was no secret about it. It was advertised. The speech was taken down and news reporters were always present.

Mr. O'CONNOR. One other question, and then I am through. The gentleman spoke about the farmer trade. Do not farmers ordinarily trade wherever they get the goods the cheapest, regardless of whether it is a chain store or not? NO JUST CRITICISMS OF ONE SPEAKING FOR LAW OBSERVANCE AND ENFORCEMENT

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I think so. Now, let me finish this statement, if you do not mind. I shall put this speech I refer to in the RECORD; and if you want the speech at any place where I spoke, I think I can get it and put it in the RECORD, at least I will try, although in some cases I will have to contact local reporting services. You will find I was talking of observance and enforcement of a law, and I never heard anybody criticized for talking for law enforcement before in my life.

CHAIN-STORE SPEAKERS NOT CRITICIZED

I know there are people who are sent out by this same speakers' bureau that speak for the chain stores and they have not been criticized. Why would they criticize only those who happened to turn out a couple of years later against the chain stores?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I asked the question whether the gentleman had received $18,000.

Mr. PATMAN. The answer is "no." Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The gentleman answered he did not make $18,000.

Mr. PATMAN. I say it was so ridiculous it did not even need replying to, but the answer is "no."

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Can the gentleman tell me about the interest or the activity of McKesson & Robbins?

Mr. PATMAN. I can tell the gentleman what I believe. This Robinson-Patman law made the manufacturers and wholesalers give the smaller dealers a better price, and under the Robinson-Patman law the McKesson & Robbins Co. came out with an announcement and said, "We are going to observe this law, we hope our competitors do it, and here is our new schedule. This new schedule will give the smaller independent merchants a $750,000 price-saving each year, and we want this schedule to be carried out. If our competitors do not contest the law, and will observe it as we are, there will be no trouble, so let us all get in together, let us observe the law, and if it is not observed, it should be enforced."

The two tin-can companies the next year reported that they had lost two and a half million dollars each the preceding 6 months because they were compelled to give the smaller can dealers a better price under the Robinson-

Patman Law.

EXAMPLES OF WHAT HAPPENED UNDER ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

Before the law was effective, June 19, 1936, the Aluminum Co. of America had been selling aluminum powder for $1 a pound up to 3,000 pounds to the smaller dealers. powder is used to make aluminum paint to paint water tanks. and for other purposes. The large dealers could obtain the same powder for 50 cents a pound. You know that small concerns cannot compete in a case of that kind. Why should that concern charge $1 a pound for 2,500 pounds, but if a dealer is big enough to take 3,000 pounds he is charged 50 cents? That schedule of prices could not be justified. It was so fixed that a certain few would get the benefit of the low price.

Under this law the schedule of prices had to be changed so that the little man would get a somewhat lower price and nearer the 50-cent price.

Another situation was in connection with copper piping. To the ordinary dealer it sold for 49 cents a pound. To large buyers that same piping sold for 20 cents a pound. That did not mean they could afford to sell it at that price. It means possibly they wanted to accommodate particular concerns. But it was not justified. It was a price away below cost, and when they sold it for that price they had to make all the independent dealers, who were unorganized and knew nothing about it, come in and pay the 49-cent price in order to make a profit. But they were destroying competition all the time and the public would eventually pay, and pay dearly, the price monopoly usually exacts.

Let us take the chocolate-candy companies. They had been granting undue concessions. This condition has been adjusted.

Therefore, every concern in America that was observing this law that had biting teeth in it was vitally interested in other concerns observing it, and especially their competitors, and they wanted someone who knew something about the law to impress upon businessmen that if the law is not observed, it could be enforced by a criminal penalty and by a fine, and by triple damages. Certainly there was a reason, a selfish one, doubtless, that they wanted the people to know about this law, and all other big concerns in the same way.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION DOES NOT HAVE SUFFICIENT POWER

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. My recollection is that when the Federal Trade Commission was created, one of its chief duties was to see to it that big business did not impose on or put out of business improperly small business. Could the gentleman inform the House as to the activity and success of the Federal Trade Commission in this respect?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. Over a period of time they were not doing so much, but since 1933 they have been doing real good work, and I say to my good friend from North Carolina that he cannot read their reports and their recommendations without discovering that the day of independent business is gone and the farmers ruined, if something is not done to curb the interstate chain stores. The Federal Trade Commission has brought the problem to the very steps of this Congress, and what I am saying here today and doing here today is in the direction they have been going since 1933.

Mr. Culkin, Mr. Massingale, and Mr. Thorkelson rose.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope gentlemen will permit me to go on for a few minutes so that I might get through.

Mr. THORKELSON. But I want to ask the gentleman

Mr. PATMAN. Very well, I yield. Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman please state where in the Constitution power is delegated to Congress to tax one particular part of a business at the expense of another business of a similar kind?

Mr. PATMAN. I shall cover that in my extension of remarks or a subsequent speech. I do not have time to do it now. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I followed the gentleman on the Miller-Tydings bill, and the Robinson-Patman bill, and I think the bills were of great service to the independent retailers. I am informed now that the Farm Bureau Federation, the Grange, and various other organized farm bodies are in opposition to the gentleman's present bill. Will he discuss that phase of it?

Mr. PATMAN. I shall cover that not now, but in some subsequent speech. I do not think they have had all of the information. If they had the information, I do not think they would have gone against it. I doubt if they had much discussion.

MILLER-TYDINGS BILL CHANGED TO MEET PRESIDENT'S OBJECTIONS

The gentleman evidently is mistaken about following my leadership on the Miller-Tydings bill. The main fight on the principle of that bill was in the different States. In the campaign to get the law enacted in different States, I had nothing to do with it at all and was not consulted about it. I was not a leader in the movement to pass the Miller-Tydings bill, although I did vote for the enabling act that passed Congress, as I felt like it was all right and still feel that it is all right. The President of the United States criticized this measure and, in effect, vetoed it in advance. After that, however, an amendment was agreed upon and adopted along with the bill that cured the President's objections. Many people seemed to have a lot to say about the President changing his mind and why he changed his mind. I believe the truth is the bill was changed to conform with the President's views or to render the bill sufficiently unobjectionable to justify him in not vetoing it.

The Tydings-Miller bill, contrary to the propaganda that is being put out, was not a price-fixing bill. It is a congressional act that permits citizens of one State to do business with citizens of another State where the State laws are the same and permit the type of business that they desire to engage in. The prices that are fixed in any State are by reason of the State act passed by the legislature of that State and not by reason of any congressional act.

I want now to explain how some of these things get around. I saw once in a newspaper that an agent of a certain department of the Government had indicated that Mr. PATMAN did so and so; that certain books revealed it. I was in that department one day and I stepped in to see a man who should know the truth of it if anybody should. I said to him, "Did you or somebody else in this department furnish this information as alleged?" He said, "No, as we had no right to say it." I then said, "Why did this newspaper publish such a thing?" He said, "We were on the receiving end. One newspaperman would come in and say, 'Have not you heard so and so?' and we would reply 'no,' and then he would say, 'Well, I am telling you now.' Then another newspaperman, possibly with the same paper, would call me up and ask if we had not heard it. And when it was admitted we had heard it although we had heard it from another newspaperman and there was nothing in the records about it they would go ahead and print it with the suggestion that our department had the information." I am not going to make any broadside attack on the newspapers or the radio, because I try to believe they are generally fair. I know there are exceptions, and sometimes there are enthusiastic promoters of news who will do things they should not do.

SERKOWICH & JENCKES, LEGISLATIVE CONSULTANTS

The other day you had brought around to you a long circular letter from a new firm of legislative consultants here in Washington. You know that is getting to be great business.

This firm of so-called legislative "consultants" has recently been organized and ready for business. The firm is composed of Heiman Serkowich and V. Jenckes. They are representing, I have been reliably informed, the chain-store interests, which they have a right to do. The junior member of this firm was formerly a Member of Congress. Before her term expired, the interstate chain-store interests persuaded her firm to attempt to file with the Dies Un-American Activities Committee a long statement, which had for its purpose making libelous remarks privileged, so that they could be reproduced in the newspapers without danger.

The long statement consisting of more than a dozen typewritten pages was prepared after the firm of Serkowich & Jenckes had been informed as to what was wanted in the

It was delivered to the clerk of the committee, but I understand the committee refused to accept it because it shows on its face to be full of erroneous statements and that its purpose was foreign to what it was claimed.

Not content with this effort, it is my understanding that a copy of this statement, together with a letter from the junior member of the firm of Serkowich & Jenckes, was sent to each Member of Congress and to members of the press gallery, except one was not sent to me. I have secured one, however, and desire to invite your attention to the preposterous, fantastic, and untruthful statements that it contains. It was franked out by the junior member of the firm as "official business" from a former Member of Congress.

Remember this, that the statement was sworn to by the junior member of the firm Serkowich & Jenckes, and I want to point out to you how this firm of legislative "consultants" so carelessly regard their statements and how reckless they are in their remarks.

One page attached to the letter, under the heading "References and Documentation," refers to chain-store propaganda that has been disseminated over this country for the last 2 or 3 years. It is an attempt to prove a statement by a false statement.

Now, in regard to the letter itself, it is dated December 22, 1938, on the stationery of the junior member of the firm of Serkowich & Jenckes. On page 3 this statement appears:

I also wish to specifically refer to a bill introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress placing an exorbitant tax upon the distribution of foodstuffs by an American corporation legally authorized to do a chain-store business in the United States, and rendering a genuine service to the consumers of foodstuffs.

Representative Parman, of Texas, introduced this bill, which was so openly anticonsumer that both the Federal Trade Commission and the President of the United States, as well as the labor organizations, challenged it.

Remember, this statement was sworn to by the junior member of the firm of Serkowich & Jenckes. The truth is I did not introduce a bill in the Seventy-fifth Congress that was challenged by the President of the United States or by the Federal Trade Commission. The junior member of this firm is very much confused about what actually happened, or possibly it is the senior member of the firm that has the matter confused. Anyway, they must have been referring to what was known as the Miller-Tydings bill, which was challenged by the President of the United States and by the Federal Trade Commission, but I did not introduce the bill, so this statement is certainly untrue.

In the next sentence of the Serkowich & Jenckes statement this appears:

It now appears that the price-fixing drive behind it was * * *.

Certainly she was not referring to any bill that I introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress, because I did not introduce any price-fixing bill at that session or any other session.

But upon the assumption that I did introduce a pricefixing bill, this firm of legislative consultants, Serkowich & Jenckes, attempt to leave the impression that I was trying to bail out someone who had defrauded his company and stockholders. Since I did not introduce a price-fixing bill, the inference that I was trying to bail out any concern through a price-fixing bill is too farfetched for serious consideration.

Then they said in this statement that I made a national lecture tour, whooping it up for a bill that I had pending that would help a concern that was sponsoring the meetings, which was untrue, and then they said that the Robinson-Patman law would let a wholesaler get a discount, but it would not let anybody get a discount if he sold direct to the consumers, which is untrue, and in addition to that the junior member of that firm swore to these false statements. The one you got was not sworn to, but the one they attempted to file with the committee was sworn to. There was absolutely no truth in it.

The chains are spending plenty of money in this way. This junior member of the firm of Serkowich & Jenckes said that the head of this concern under discussion claimed he had $18,000,000 of crude drugs in a warehouse in Canada, or was supposed to have, and did not have any of them. Not a dollar's worth.

She said, in effect, if this Patman bill had passed, the price of the drugs would have increased so much that he could have bailed himself out and he would not have had any loss. Is not that logic and reason that if you increase the price of something that you do not have that will cause you to be rich? That was the argument that was used. [Laughter.]

ANOTHER FALSE STATEMENT

Commencing on page 7 of the Serkowich & Jenckes statement, it is said:

This bill (referring to the Robinson-Patman bill) was introduced in the House of Representatives by the Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, who declared it would make a carload and a single unit sell at the same price.

There is not a word of truth in that statement, although the chain-store interests have been repeating it from one to another ever since the law was passed.

In fact they have been telling it so much they probably believe it themselves.

This is another untrue statement that the junior member of the firm has sworn was true.

This firm of Serkowich & Jenckes, of course, wants to make money, and the chain stores are spending a lot of money. I will venture to say that the chains have a lobby that has pledged to it $100,000,000, and I am not exaggerating when I say that. They are going to let some of that money fall into hands of irresponsible people that will do or say anything in the world.

"TALES" BY TATTLER TUCKER

We have a new service here. The name of it is "The National Whirligig." "News Behind the News by Ray Tucker." It is printed and sent all over the country. It is printed in my district. You know, Ray has a way of getting around and finding out things. He has a nose for news. He gets the news, and then he tells it. Some of it is true; some of it is not. I do not jump on columnists generally, because most of them are reliable, but some of them get off the track, just like Ray gets off the track.

A while back he printed an awful article about me. You would think I was one of the worst fellows in the country. My enemies wanted to get that information. They called on him for it. They said, "Ray, you furnish us verification of that. That is the very stuff we need against that man PATMAN."

Well, you know, Ray looked everywhere and he could not find it. He could not find it, because it was not true. It did not even border on the truth. Then, do you know what Ray does? He had the audacity-I will not call it unmitigated gall—to write me a letter admitting that he did not have any proof of it, but that he printed it and it happened 10 years ago, and he said it must have been printed in some newspaper sometime and "won't you please give me the name of the newspaper so I can furnish the information?" [Laughter.]

Now, there is a columnist sending out news from Washington, printing news that he has not any reason to believe is true. Then when called, he begins to look up the truth. I think that National Whirligig, by Ray Tucker, should be changed to Tales by Tattler Tucker. [Laughter.] He has been helping to spread some of this untrue propaganda.

I cannot cover in one speech everything that I should like to say.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will excuse me. My time is very limited.

Mr. SPRINGER. I just wanted to ask one question.

Mr. PATMAN. Very well.

Mr. SPRINGER. The firm of Serkowich & Jenckes-will the gentleman please tell who they are?

Mr. PATMAN. Serkowich & Jenckes, or whatever it is [laughter]—anyway, he came here as a stock salesman in a secret gold mine; later he became publicity director for the Congresswoman from Indiana. He represented her in her war with the country of Japan and got for her that wonderful publicity, including pictures, about her proposal to chop down the Japanese cherry trees around the Tidal Basin here in Washington. After that he got into the publicity business. and then I understand he went into partnership with this junior member of the firm, Mrs. V. Jenckes, of Indiana, and I understand the name of the firm is Heiman Serkowich & V. Jenckes. That is all I know about them except they have been working for the chain stores.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will please hurry,

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to ask whether the V. Jenckes, whom the gentleman mentioned, is Virginia Jenckes, who formerly served in this House?

Mr. PATMAN. I think she is from the gentleman's State of Indiana, and I am sure she is the same one. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to tell you about another one of these columnists.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist now. I only have a few minutes, and I have something that I really want to say.

DR. "POKEBERRY" POPE

A while back I saw a news release, Washington Day by Day—Terse commentaries on people and places—Gentle iconoclasm with no favorites played, by Jim Pope.

That shows that he must be a pretty good news commentator; pretty courageous; a man with much intestinal fortitude. He is going to give the low-down on all the Members of Congress. He is going to start tattling, gossiping, and telling tales that nobody has ever heard. He is going to give us the "works." He sent to the newspapers of the country a long statement copying all of this old chain-store propaganda about me that the best newspapers would not print. He sent that around all over the country. Then the chains picked it up and sent it to about a hundred thousand people, professional men, lawyers, doctors, teachers, leaders all over the country-comments from this so-called great Washington columnist. That name, "Jim Pope," did not mean much to me; but I noticed down at the bottom an editor's note which says:

Dr. Pope's opinions are his own. His articles do not necessarily always reflect the editorial policies of this paper.

I said to myself. "Is that the same old unpardoned convict, 'Dr. Pope,' that I caused to quit using the mails to defraud a few years ago?" I looked into it and, sure enough, it was. [Laughter.]

One time there was a pension racket started here. That pension racket was to collect dimes and quarters and nickels from old folks in America. It was collecting six or seven hundred dollars a day. Highway robbery! That is all it was. I stood on the floor of this House and denounced J. E. Pope as the sole perpetrator of that swindle. I was called before a committee and I furnished that committee information which I had collected at my own expense, including copies of indictments that I had obtained from all over this Nation, where he had been swindling people ever since he was 21 years of age.

I sent to Houston, Tex., got a copy of the paper there, which said, "Young man given the limit of the law for defrauding distressed home owners." This was in 1904. That article showed that he had advertised under the name of J. E. Pope. He has stayed with one of these names: J. Pope, J. E. Pope, Jim Pope, Dr. J. E. Pope, James E. Pope-one or the other all of the time. He advertised: "If you are about to lose your home, I will make you a loan"—he used an investment name—"J. E. Pope." He would say, "Give me an abstract and $15 and I will approve your loan for the amount you are asking." The applicant would comply. He would get the $15 and then after the lapse of time he would say the title to the property was not good or that there was a defect in the title or the attorney turned it down, so he could not make the loan.

Then he went over to Longview, Tex., and advertised for salesmen, wanted watch salesmen. Unemployed people would come in to see him or write him. He would say: "Pay me $10.75 for a watch and I will guarantee you $50 a week." The unemployed person paid him the $10.75 and never got a watch. They sent him to the penitentiary again on several counts. This was about 1918 or 1919. Copies of the indictments are in the records.

Then he goes to Fort Worth, Tex., about 1923 and becomes a fraudulent stock operator in the oil fields out there. They indicted him twice at Fort Worth. I have copies of his indictments in the records. I faced him with them before that committee and showed where they had brought more than 20 indictments against this man for fraud and racketeering all over this Nation, and I defied him to deny one of them. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] was chairman of the committee. He said, "Dr. Pope, is that true?" He said, "I cannot deny it," and he could not.

Then about 1927 he went to Denver, Colo., and engaged in fraudulent enterprise out there.

In 1929 he went down to Oklahoma. In Oklahoma they do not have licensed chiropodists. The chiropodist does not have to have a license out there. You can be a chiropodist just by calling yourself one. [Laughter.] Out there they have what is known as pokeberries. You can mash them up and take the juice and use it for writing fluid. I think this man J. E. Pope just took some of that pokeberry juice and wrote "doctor" in front of his name and made himself "Dr. J. E. Pope." So he became a chiropodist, a profession about which he knew nothing.

Then he got into a pension racket, came here to Washington; and I went before the Post Office Department in 1934 and caused him to have to stop using the mails to defraud the old people. He admitted it. Then he started up under another name again, and I went back to the Post Office Department in 1936 and stopped him the second time from using the mails to defraud the old people. Now he shows up as one of these great columnists, "Dr." Pokeberry Pope, who is giving the lowdown on Members of Congress in Washington, and some of the so-called great newspapers are carry-

In the Washington Star, Washington, D. C., January 1, 1939, the following advertisement appeared in the personal classified column:

Ghost writer-successful author, journalist, radio speaker, will advise or edit and revise your story or speech in correct form. Helpful collaboration. Dr. Pope, manuscript editor, 518 Colorado Building, Washington.

Such an advertisement has appeared from time to time. So the self-styled doctor has gone into the "ghost-writing" business, preparing speeches, and engaging in other personal relations activities.

He has spent practically all of his adult life since 1904about 35 years—either in the penitentiary, jail, or under indictments charged with serious offenses, involving fraud and

Yet his column is accepted by many newspapers, the publishers not knowing the type of person who is giving the inside chimney-corner information on high public officials.

WILL KIDNAPING AND MURDER BE RESORTED TO?

It is a dangerous thing for any group to have such a large amount of money to spend for the purpose that it is being spent for. Much of this money will fall into the hands of irresponsible people and I state seriously that it would not surprise me if this method of attack and lobbying, backed by such enormous sums of money, continues that eventually some of the enthusiastic supporters of the opposition will actually resort to kidnaping and murder in order to silence those who oppose them. This is an astounding statement, I know, but I honestly believe it is possible by the way they have been conducting themselves in the past, as shown by congressional investigations, and the way they have started out conducting themselves in this campaign.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 5 additional minutes. I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I am very anxious to get some real genuine information on this anti-chain-store bill. If the gentleman is given additional time. I think he should answer some of the questions because of the importance of the chain-store legislation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the House should grant the request I shall ask unanimous consent to vacate the special order giving me 10 minutes today.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time heretofore allotted to him by special order of the House may be vacated and yielded to the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale].

Mr. MASSINGALE. My purpose in interrogating the distinguished gentleman from Texas is this: I am afraid that the gentleman has not done himself justice in the reply that he made to the gentleman from Illinois who asked if he received $18,000 in money in any one year for making The gentleman from Texas replied that he did not. I realize he has been interrupted many times and has been diverted. However, I hope he does not overlook it, and I am sure he does not intend to do so. In my judgment, I believe the gentleman owes it to himself to state, if he will, how much he did receive from the speakers' bureau so there will be no unfair inferences drawn, or prejudicial inferences drawn, from the gentleman's answer.

Mr. PATMAN. That is a very fair question, and I am glad the gentleman has brought it to my attention, as I certainly expect to answer every question asked.

When a reputable speakers' bureau arranges for speakers, such as United States Senators and Members of the House, they usually receive from $100 to $400, out of which they must pay their expenses. The organization wanting the speaker usually has a certain amount set aside as an honorarium for the guest speaker. The speakers' bureau advises the one invited and informs him he will receive a certain amount if he accepts. The speakers' bureau makes a profit, as it should. The speakers' bureau has no right to contract for the appearance of a Member of Congress. The invitation is submitted to him. If he wants to accept, all right; if not, all right. The acceptance usually depends upon the convenience of the Member and his desire to get his views over to the group that has invited him.

Take a speaker in a national campaign who is working in behalf of some cause he considers of great importance to the people. One time he will go out and make a speech and not receive expenses or any part of his expenses, and another time receive expenses. He will often have to pay his own hotel bills. The next time he goes out he might receive his actual expenses for the trip. The next time he might receive enough to pay his expenses two or three times. When all is said and done, you are in the position that I have been in, that you have not acquired one extra penny from it and should not expect to. Some Members spend all the time they have to spare trying to present what they consider a good cause to the people. Other Members use their spare time in different ways. I have never known of a Member permitting speech making to interfere with his duties as Congressman.

No speaker in a national campaign he is promoting, if he is earnest and sincere in trying to put it over, realizes a penny profit from speeches.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Nobody in this House, I am sure, questions the gentleman's fine veracity, his great ability, and his fine patriotism. The question propounded by the gentleman from Oklahoma also sought to elicit information as to the total amount the gentleman received.

Mr. PATMAN. In any 1 year from the speaker's bureau?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. During the first year $5,000, I am sure, will cover it, although I have not checked up. In the other year not that much. When it is all said and done, when you pay your printing bill, when you pay your stationery bill, when you pay your other expenses, including extra office help, you have nothing left and have been out money besides. That is the experience of all of us. That is the penalty for being zealous and determined to win.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I have not very much time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This will be very brief.

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It has been stated here that farm organizations have gone on record against the gentleman's chain-store bill. Is it not also true the American Federation of Labor has gone on record against the gentleman's bill? I should like to know why that is.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know of my own knowledge. I am sure they did not consider all the facts and circumstances.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I should like to know why the American Federation of Labor took that action.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will not ask me to yield any more on that point at this time. I will cover it in a subsequent speech.

With all the snoopers, with all the gossipers, with all the detectives and the legislative "consultants," they have not found anything for which I am deserving of criticism. I am not defending, I am not apologizing, as I have done nothing wrong. I am trying to show what methods certain people will resort to. Let the Wall Street monopolists continue to have the help of certain unfair newspapers, of such legislative "consultants" as Serkowich & Jenckes, and such unpardoned convicts as Dr. "Pokeberry" Pope, and such columnists as "Tattler" Tucker, and they will not succeed as we have the right side, and when the people get the truth, H. R. 1 will become a law.

Some people have gone a long way trying to smear me and they have done it for two good reasons. William Jennings Bryan reached the people through the Speakers' Bureau. The newspapers would not carry what he had to say. The elder La Follette did the same thing. The newspapers would not carry what he had to say. Some of the greatest men on earth have used this vehicle as a means of communication to the people when they could not reach them in any other way.

The reasons why they want to destroy me are two. One is to weaken my efforts and fight against monopolies. I was the one who disclosed that 24 banks, 13 of them in one city, own one-third of the banking resources of the 16,000 banks in the Nation. These 24 banks are heavily interested in business, industry, and manufacturing and they have their eyes on control of retail distribution. The second reason is they want to intimidate every man in public life that they can intimidate. This not only applies to me; it applies to you. It demonstrates what they will do to you if you attempt to cross them and propose legislation against them or make a strong fight for the enactment of legislation that may be detrimental to their business but in the interest of the people.

NO PERSONAL INTEREST OR SELFISH INTEREST

The only interest I have in this legislation is to cause the enactment of a law that I believe will be of great benefit to the people of this country. I have no selfish interest whatsoever and have nothing to gain any more than any other citizen would gain. On the other hand, many of those, who are opposing me, are selfishly interested. They have privileges and opportunities that are not only worth millions of dollars but instead, in the years to come, if they can retain them, they are worth billions of dollars. So the point is: Who is more likely to give the people the best and most correct information—one who has nothing to gain except serving the public interest, or one who is selfishly and financially interested?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. For a brief question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have not reached any conclusion as to whether I will support or oppose the gentleman's bill; but, as a matter of information, when the gentleman was out on this speaking tour, for which he received compensation, was it part of the gentleman's agreement to discuss the chain-store tax legislation?

Mr. PATMAN. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. No; there was no agreement to discuss anything except the observance and enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act. I did not discuss any chain-store tax bill because that was not proposed until 1938. The speaking tour was in 1936. That is the charge that was made in the newspaper in Chicago, but it was untrue.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Did the gentleman not discuss it in Chicago 2 or 3 months ago?

Mr. PATMAN. Possibly several months ago I did discuss the Federal chain-store tax bill in Chicago.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Well, the gentleman did, did he not?

Mr. PATMAN. I am sure the gentleman must be referring to a debate I had in Chicago before the National Conference of Business Paper Editors. It was October 19, 1938, at the Union League Club, and the organization paid my actual expenses, which were less than $75. We have been talking about the speaking tour in 1936. That is the tour, as I understand it, that is being discussed. I will include a copy of the speech in the RECORD, delivered on that tour in 1936: and if there are any other speeches you want to see, call them to my attention, and I believe I can secure an exact stenographic copy of every word that was said at each

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. CELLER. Relative to the bill the gentleman has introduced, he might be interested in reading very shortly the result of a poll taken by the magazine Fortune.

Mr. PATMAN. Do not get me into that discussion, as I do not have the time.

Mr. CELLER. That shows the change of sentiment against the gentleman's bill and against chain stores.

Mr. PATMAN. I did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose. However, it depends on the way you interpret the poll. I can see in it much encouragement. I only have 2 minutes. The gentleman will not insist on taking that,

Mr. CELLER. I will not; no.

Mr. PATMAN. In conclusion, my opponents would like to smear me or any other Member of Congress who gets up and fights the battles against those people who have special privileges they are not entitled to and who are trying to hog more. If you will not listen to them they will seek to destroy you. They will weaken or destroy every courageous man in the Nation who takes issue with them if they can. I would not have their vicious opposition if I merely introduced the bills but did not make a real effective fight to get them enacted into law. My present opponents would compliment and admire me if I merely dropped this bill in the hopper and made no real effort to cause its enactment.

UNEQUAL SITUATION

These large concerns, which are 100 percent organized among themselves and cooperating perfectly, have at their disposal plenty of money, the very best brains, the most influential people, many newspapers, and more power than is possessed by any group in America.

In this fight about all I have is the cause, which I believe is right. If they can destroy me, they know it is in their interest to do so. If they should be successful, they feel that no other person would dare take up the fight within the next generation, or any other fight in opposition to them.

POLICY I ADOPTED AS A NEW MEMBER

When I came to Congress as a new Member I very quickly realized how insignificant I was and how feeble and weak my efforts would be in this great lawmaking body. I had in mind certain measures of great importance, and decided that although my influence in this body was very limited, I could appeal to a higher source, to the masters of the 531 Members of the House and Senate, the people of the United States. I commenced a campaign to sell the people on my proposals, knowing that if I sold them that Congress would gladly carry out their will and wishes. Such campaigns caused the enactment of the bill to pay the veterans the remainder due on their adjusted-service certificates, the Robinson-Patman Act, and other proposals. I could have introduced all of these bills and made a speech each session and returned to the people, who elected me every 2 years, with a good campaign issue to be reelected on, but nothing would have been accomplished, except I would have had an issue to keep me in Congress. It was my sincere desire to actually accomplish something, and that is the reason I resorted to the method of speaking campaigns to sell the people. If the newspapers will not carry what you say, and if your time over the air is restricted or limited, there is only one other way to arouse the people on a good cause and that is through a speakers' bureau or a campaign tour of some kind. Then when you go to a city to make a speech, a large number of people are interested. It is news and what you say is carried in the newspaper whether the newspapers want to carry it or not. If my method does not meet with the approval of some people-and I am sure it does not because it has been effective-I can only say to them that what I have done in this respect has been with an honest, conscientious desire to be of real service to the plain people of this country. My constituents realize that my ability to serve them depends upon my ability to get the support of sufficient people in other States and districts to accomplish worthy objectives.

Mr. Speaker, I have permitted every Member who desired to ask me any question he desired. I appreciate your patience and the unusual courtesy of permitting me to speak so long by unanimous consent. I love a good fight; and so far as I am concerned, this fight has just commenced. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gif-FORD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the RECORD will disclose I was granted 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman temporarily is recognized for 20 minutes. The Chair can verify the RECORD in the meantime.

Mr. GIFFORD. The RECORD will disclose that I was granted 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I were a truly great man like the last speaker. Then there would not be an exodus. Every one knows that the topic I shall discuss would not be particularly welcome to the majority side of the House.

I wish I might think that the ethics were such that I could be paid to travel over this Nation of ours and talk on the subject about which I shall speak this afternoon. It is, indeed, a very important matter and perhaps should not excite real controversy when rationally considered.

I have so often spoken on the same subject. The reason I have asked for the time is that so few desire to speak, and, as my Committee on Expenditures will not work, this is my forum to give warning about the expenditures of the Government, and I shall continue to grasp every favorable opportunity. I do not wish to weary the Members, and if other speakers are forthcoming, certainly I shall always be pleased to withdraw or withhold requests for time. There are so many wasteful, futile, and extravagant expenditures by the Government that the subject is now practically inexhaustible.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for just a moment? The Chair has verified the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish to call the Speaker's attention to the fact that the statements I make seem usually to be correct, as they are seldom refuted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts the gentleman from Massachusetts will not take any offense, but the Chair was informed by the Parliamentarian that the record shows the gentleman was allowed to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to say I think so highly of the Speaker that even if he meant offense I could not recog-

The Robinson-Patman Act and the Miller-Tydings bill are controversial and they interest certain classes of people. Of course, those classes of people will try to protect themselves, and I suppose we shall be surrounded by lobbyists, so-called, although most of us are now immune.

However, the most outstanding and the fearful question in the hearts of the people today with relation to our internal affairs is, "How large a debt will the public stand?" "Can we stand?" It is purely a psychological question. I repeat, not "How much can we stand?" but "When will conditions so suddenly confront us that the fateful moment will find us totally unprepared?"

I wish to call your attention to a few quotations in the press this morning. If I speak of items of which you also have seen, then you will be unable to disagree. "In London political changes caused a near panic." "Fear of war jolts the money market." Many securities of ours held by foreigners were quietly and quickly sold yesterday. Last Saturday it was asserted that that day's little slump was only natural, because there had been a jerky condition of the markets going up during the week and naturally "profit taking" selling follows. But suddenly a real slump came yesterday and investors are again fearful. Talk of war may be responsible, but there is an underlying fear greater than that. Even United States bonds have weakened, but that will be not for long. The $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund will come to the rescue. Banks that are overloaded with such bonds know it is their full duty to buy rather than sell, and to support the Government securities lest a shake-up in the Government finances may adversely affect their whole structure. As the London Observer states, "Carry on, United States, your bucket-shop business in your own securities." We have to do it.

Indeed, the emergency is still with us. Already we hear that we are to be asked to renew the act creating the $2,000,-000,000 stabilization fund. We may think it to be wise, but we may wish to question its present condition. Will the minority be too greatly criticized if we should insist that proper and sufficient explanation be given of that present condition before we renew this privilege? I rather think if we question it we shall be told that it would be highly dangerous for the country to be given information as to the present condition of this stabilization fund. We are to be asked to renew the privilege of printing $3,000,000,000 to support the market, lest the banks do not at some time come quickly enough to the rescue. We are going to be asked for a continuation of the privilege of further devaluing the dollar. Already it is a sword of Damocles held over the heads of all investors, causing them constantly to fear that they may wake on the morrow and find they have again been deprived of the face values.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With reference to the stabilization fund, I have noticed a statement, which I believe comes from the Treasury, to the effect that the Treasury has earned something like $6,000,000 profit on the stabilization fund during the past year. Has the gentleman been able to find from what source this profit was earned? In other words, was it earned on the basis of lending money or on the basis of operating in the exchange market?

Mr. GIFFORD. You can only assume, and listen to gossip lacking real authority. They tell us that when the French franc goes down, they buy, and I presume that on some favorable morning when the French franc goes up again they will say they made some money.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly. I desire to yield.

Mr. THORKELSON. Are United States bonds liquidated on the London market payable in gold in England?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. THORKELSON. Are they payable in gold to people in the United States?

Mr. GIFFORD. Any Englishman who sells anything he holds in this country, of course, has the funds transferred to him in gold.

Mr. THORKELSON. And similar funds are payable to American people in commodity money?

Mr. GIFFORD. To American people in any kind of money, no matter what the substance is, if it has the suitable engraving on the bill or coin.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, this means that if any foreigner sells a bond or a stock of one of our industrial concerns, he gets his remittance in the form of actual gold if he wants it?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The same as if it were a United States Government bond.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is not what the gentleman said. The gentleman said a bond that was held by England repayable in gold would have to be paid by gold when the bond was due, but he did not say a stock had to be redeemed in gold.

Mr. GIFFORD. Any security sold on this market belonging to a foreigner, when he asks for the money at home we return it in gold if he requests it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But not in the case of stocks in a corporation.

Mr. GIFFORD. For goods or anything.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. The gentleman does not mean to infer that a citizen of England selling stocks on our American market would immediately have physically transferred to him or at a future time physical gold?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; the gentleman fully understands me and we all understand about that.

Mr. McGRANERY. So there is no gold that goes to the English citizen any more than a citizen of our own country. Mr. GIFFORD. He gets his credits, and when the credits are needed to regain balances, gold is transferred to such foreign countries.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think this is a very fundamental thing we have up right now, and I think there is a misunderstanding creeping into the discussion. Let us assume that the gentleman here is a Britisher, and he sells $10,000 worth of A. T. & T. stock on the market this afternoon from London through his brokers in London and New York; tomorrow can he not go to his British bank and draw $10,000 in gold?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly; if he demands it; but as a rule the accounts are kept until there is an unfavorable balance or gold is desired by their nations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And his British bank on the settlement of international balances receives gold to replace the gold they cover up as, if, and when.

Mr. GIFFORD. And the gentleman's question leads to this: Why cannot the citizen here get his gold? Is this emergency still here? With $14,000,000,000 of gold, if you should wish a gold piece and prefer it to another kind of money, why should not you as one of our citizens have it? Would you dare present a bill requesting that that be done?

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McGRANERY. My good friend has again answered a question which would indicate that a physical transfer of gold to a citizen of England would be his for the asking. Is it not true that the monetary system of England is based on silver and not gold?

Mr. GIFFORD. It is on a managed basis, but the people seem to like to do business based on gold. I think the gentleman knows this. The value of the dollar at 59 cents is based on gold, and, of course, the pound has still reference to its actual gold value.

Mr. McGRANERY. But sterling is the monetary basis. Mr. GIFFORD. It is a managed-currency system.

Mr. McGRANERY. The gentleman inferred that a sale of stocks here to the credit of an English citizen would result in his being able to go to his English broker and say, "I desire to have that money in gold." Does the gentleman mean that we transfer gold dollars to British bankers in that way?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the gentleman knows it is a matter of bookkeeping for a while, but there comes a time when the Bank of England sends over here and states, "We want $25,-000,000 or $50,000,000 of gold." And when the individual demands it over there, of course, he can get it.

Mr. McGRANERY. But is not that something that has to do with your Import and Export Bank?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is going far afield. We are talking about the fact that an Englishman can get gold and have gold in his pocket, and the other gentleman wants to know why we cannot have gold in our pockets over here.

Mr. McGRANERY. The point I make, sir, is that the Englishman, as I understand it, cannot get gold from his broker.

Mr. GIFFORD. We know of no such law in England. We do know, however, that we may not have gold in our possession in this country.

Mr. McGRANERY. But we do know that sterling is the basis of the monetary set-up of England.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; we know that.

Mr. McGRANERY. And not gold.

Mr. GIFFORD. But we are talking about why the individual in this country cannot have a little gold.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. THORKELSON. We are on a commodity or managed-money basis that is not secured by gold. It is scrip money, and the value of it is based upon the price level or upon ability to keep the prices at such a level that the dollar will have a certain purchasing power, which means that the dollar we are using here is without any value. If I had $100,000 over in England, that $100,000 is credited to the gold-credit balance of England. Is not that correct?

Mr. McGRANERY. That is correct, if the gentleman is asking me the question; but it is credited in dollars.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. As a matter of fact, the English Government is off of gold, and their currency is not redeem-

Mr. GIFFORD. When the gentleman says the English Government is entirely off of gold it amuses me. They seem to desire large quantities and are always very fearful when much is withdrawn and deposited in other countries. Of course, indirectly they are tied to gold. It is not yet abandoned. We talk in terms of gold, and so do they.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Their currency is not redeemable in gold. Will the gentleman say that it is?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; of course it is not; but they hope, I am sure, that specie payments may at some time be resumed.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McGRANERY. I am sorry to encroach on the gentleman's time.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; the gentleman seems to know so much more about it than I do that I am glad to yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. Oh, no, I do not; but I would like to know how the American dollar compares with the English pound sterling.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not the figures today. It varies. Somebody here may know that.

Mr. McGRANERY. Four dollars and seventy-five cents to

Mr. GIFFORD. It used to be $4.87. I presume it is about $4.75.

Mr. McGRANERY. To the pound?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit, it has been fluctuating from $4.63 to $4.70 for the last several weeks, and that has operated against exports of goods from the United States in favor of British imports. It is going on all the time.

Mr. GIFFORD. Back of it all—and that is fully understood—there is still hope and expectation that the pound and the dollar may eventually be redeemed in gold. I want now to talk about the silver situation. Silver! "Fiscal insanity," it is called. A few of you silver men influenced the President in 1933 to issue a proclamation that domestic silver miners, representing so few, should be recognized. A price of 64.64 cents was put on domestic mined silver, and that we were to buy silver until we got to the point where there would be one-third as many ounces of silver as there were of gold, and we have spent $1,000,000,000—wasted money—

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I knew the gentleman could not stand it long.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that the Government and the people of the United States have made 100-percent profit on every ounce of silver that the Government bought? The Government buys it at 64 cents and issues it at $1.29; and remember, also, silver certificates do not bear interest and circulate without interest.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and we made $2,000,000,000 in gold overnight by marking something up. You call silver worth $1.29 for monetary purposes. Think of it! Only a matter of bookkeeping. The world price is about 43 cents, and we were paying 64, and we have purchased of foreigners more than four times as much as we have of domestic producers. Mexico's treatment of us is abominable, but we are the real support of her monetary system through the huge profits paid to her for her silver, to placate a few silver representatives from Idaho and adjacent sections.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. THORKELSON. We reserved or set aside and made the price of silver 50 cents an ounce, and we imported a considerable amount of silver at 50 cents. We know, of course, that silver can be produced in India for 10 cents an ounce, and we pay 40 cents more than the actual production cost. In buying that silver we credit the nation that sells it to us with the amount that we buy. In paying the credit or in balancing that credit or satisfying it, we pay that in gold for the silver? Is that correct?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly, they can call for the gold. Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman from Montana said that they produce silver for 10 cents an ounce in India. I state to the gentleman that the Indian Government imposed an 18½-cents-an-ounce duty on silver to keep silver out of India; and if the gentleman will investigate that at the Department of Commerce, he will see that I am correct.

Mr. GIFFORD. For monetary purposes it is $1.29, and the world price today is 42 cents. We are paying a subsidy to China and to Japan, and when Japan conquers China we shall get plenty. Half the silver that has been received here has been in silver coin, not bullion, upsetting monetary systems abroad.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.
Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman think that the Government did a wise thing when it wrote up the price of gold under the then existing conditions?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman has heard me say before that it should have been written up; but not 40 percent. Mexico says to us, "Do not talk about expropriating your oil lands. What did you do to us? The value of our investments in the United States was cut 40 percent overnight."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me finish the question. Does not the gentleman further think that in view of our present and anticipated national indebtedness, gold will again have to be written up in order to bridge the gap?

Mr. GIFFORD. If you want to continue the race with foreign countries. But where will the race end? We sent Moley over there to try to get them to stabilize, did we not?

Then suddenly someone reached the ear of your Presi-

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let us get back to gold.

Mr. GIFFORD. No; let us get back to that. I am answering your question. There was a gesture to stabilize, because nations had devalued in order to export more, sell more to us; and buy our dollars cheap. And so the President decided, apparently, to devalue also, and devalue more than any other, and give them a real dose of their own medicine.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, the gentleman knows the commercial value of gold is only about $15 per ounce. Everything above that is artificial. We have to do something about this national indebtedness sooner or later. We are going to run out of water some day in this pump priming.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I am so glad you acknowledge that. Mr. O'CONNOR. We have to look conditions in the face. Mr. GIFFORD. The rabbits are all out of the hat.

[Laughter.]

Now, what I am getting at is you have got to either start the printing presses or you have got to rewrite the price of gold, and if you are going to cover it in that manner you have to advance the price of gold.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I am so sorry the gentleman said that. He tells you it is too late to retrace your steps. God knows I have told you that often enough.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. SIROVICH. I would like to pay tribute to the versatility of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. He is one of the most brilliant men on the Republican side of the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am afraid of what flattery from the gentleman may portend.

Mr. SIROVICH. I would like to ask the gentleman the following question: When our Government was founded in 1789 it was 98 percent agriculturalized and 2 percent industrialized. At the present time our Nation is 70 percent industrialized and 30 percent agriculturalized.

This phenomenal development in our country is attributable chiefly to the subsidies that have been granted either directly or indirectly to various sections of our Nation. New England, for 130 years, has been the beneficiary of the protective tariff, which siphoned out the wealth of the agricultural interests of our Nation. We have also given subsidies since then to the railroads, to the merchant marine, to banking interests, to farming interests, and it is also necessary to subsidize the natural resources of our country, like silver and gold. I contend that subsidy, either directly or indirectly, is a necessity for us to bring prosperity to all sections of the Nation, including labor, through restrictive immigration, which has been the formula of various administrations in the past.

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield no further. That is entirely beside the subject. Poor old New England!

Mr. SIROVICH. I want to call attention to the fact that we have grown through subsidies.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the country has been living through subsidies. Greenbelts! Ninety of them! Subsidies to take care of a few people. Oh, we have been so liberal! So easy to increase subsidies and make everybody happy for a time. She wore a No. 7 shoe, as I recall, and she says, "No. 8 is so comfortable that I wear No. 9's." [Laughter.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I came in a little late and I did not hear all the gentleman had said.

Mr. GIFFORD. We are talking about subsidies.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But I understood the gentleman was talking about the national debt.

Mr. GIFFORD. I tried to talk about that.
Mr. HOFFMAN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Amlie], who was yesterday appointed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, on November 24, 1937, on the floor of this House said-Record, page 372-in answer to my question—I quote:

The gentleman thinks we can continue to spend beyond our income for 20 years without endangering our financial structure? Mr. Amlie. Yes; I think so.

In view of that statement, is the gentleman still worried? Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, page Mr. Eccles. He has told you we should not worry about the debt. Somehow, all other private bankers are sending us resolutions that the debt must not be further increased. We are within shouting distance of a $50,000,000,000 debt, apparently without the slightest hope of action on our part to lessen it one iota. Yesterday the President asked us for hundreds of millions for health; hundreds of millions for defense; spending from fright; adding and adding, and not a single, solitary sign of encouragement from anybody on the Democratic side of the House; not a speech, not a promise, not a ray of hope from the majority to a Nation that has hoped for something from you which the businessmen of the country might regard as a return to sanity. No. Rather, they have said in another body of this Congress, where they have recently confirmed a man of the least possible qualification, after first stripping him naked of any genuine business experience and then approving him to carry on the work of the great Commerce Department.

That honorable body argues that the President should have whom he might personally like. Is not the Nation itself entitled to some consideration? Why continue the power of confirmation, which is the supposed safeguard in such cases? Why have they surrendered it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield? Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I yield to my friend. I know he wishes me to be less forceful.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was just coming to that. I noticed my friend was very much disturbed about gold and silver and I am much concerned with him about the expenditures of the Government. I was going to ask my friend what he thought about the Townsend plan and the tremendous expenditures which that would bring about. [Laughter and

Mr. GIFFORD. I shall request extra time if you are interested in that matter, because I am speaking today simply to excite interest in fiscal matters. I regret that the gentleman so seldom honors me with his presence on the floor. He should hear me more often. Only 2 years ago I took the floor, the first speech made on the floor of the Congress, and I spent an hour speaking against the Townsend plan.

I did not hesitate. I gave my views very seriously considered, I believe, and I have not changed. What he would really like for me to say is inferred by the roguishness of his remarks. [Laughter.] Like a previous speaker, we wish to confess our errors, if any. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; I am not through. The gentleman well knows that the Republicans of Massachusetts, in State convention assembled, pledged, without prior consultation or consent, all their Congressmen to bring the Townsend plan to the floor of this House for discussion. I remarked: "How can I help bring a matter to the floor of the House of Representatives which I must then immediately vigorously oppose?" And everybody know my stand on the question. I merely want the gentleman from Massachusetts to divest himself of all party feeling and be my spiritual adviser when the time comes for me to act on that particular phase of the matter, namely, to bring it on the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman spoke about an anticipated indebtedness against the Government of $50,000,-000,000. I do not know whether this is a fact or not, but it was rumored around over the country in 1933 that a delegation of bankers from the city of New York—when the country was practically faced with civil war following 4 years of high Republican rule—that this country—

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is telling something. I have seemingly no need to answer, especially such an assertion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In a talk with the President of the United States, President Franklin Roosevelt, they intimated to him at that time that this country could stand an indebtedness in the neighborhood of $70,000,000,000 and still be sound.

Mr. GIFFORD. I assume that Governor Eccles told him that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; but I understood that the conversation occurred. Does the gentleman have any information on that?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, everybody knows how promptly people are challenged if they make direct statements. I do not have to make direct statements to convey actual truths. Even when I merely look into your eyes I can read there what you would like to say. The truth permeates just as well as though words had been uttered. But I only say that from your words or looks I can "assume," which is sufficient. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Following the customary practice under such circumstances, there being another special order, the Chair asks if this is agreeable to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that he be permitted to address the House for 10 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN and Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield first to the gentleman from Montana. I want him to finish.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman talked about the Townsend plan. Does not the gentleman know that about 62 of the new Members of Congress, that is Republicans who displaced Democrats, were endorsed by Dr. Townsend and the Townsend organization?

Mr. GIFFORD. Flirtations are very, very costly some-

Mr. O'CONNOR. And does not the gentleman further know that if this House adopted the Townsend plan that it would be a tax on business and not a tax upon the United States Government?

Mr. GIFFORD. We will discuss that later and discuss it plentifully. I hope the gentleman will read the speech I made 2 years ago. I probably would not change it to any great extent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.
Mr. HOFFMAN. Referring again to the gentleman, Mr. Amlie, who was yesterday appointed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, why do you worry over our financial condition when, if the new member of the I. C. C. has his way, our wealth is to be redistributed every now and then? Mr. Amlie was asked on November 24, 1937, page 374 of the Record of that date:

Am I correct in understanding that the gentleman's theory is that once in so often the wealth of the country, or those who have, should have part of their property taken from them to be shared with the more unfortunate?

And in answer Mr. Amlie said:

Yes; I would agree to that.

Does the gentleman think that the appointment of this man, Mr. Amlie, to the Commission will aid in redistributing the wealth or in aiding the railroads?

Mr. GIFFORD. Why, these worn-out theories held by perhaps discredited persons who now surround the President and whom he wants, remind me, "Mama, what happens to all the old worn-out automobiles?"

"They sell them to your father." [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that gentleman was completely discredited, and I would like to advise the Members on this side of the House that he is completely discredited in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. GIFFORD. When I revise my remarks I will say, "Seems to be." By being defeated they may not be actually discredited, but their theories may be.

Mr. HAWKS. Seems to be. Mr. Amlie?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is a safer expression.
Mr, HAWKS. The gentleman recently appointed—only yesterday appointed—to the Interstate Commerce Commismission. I was just wondering if the city of Washington is the last outpost of these people who are apparently completely discredited in their own States?

Mr. GIFFORD. It is a sad day, I may say to my colleagues, it is a sad day, that when the people have spoken and administered their rebuke, after the tide has definitely turned, there are those so stubborn that they will still continue to carry out their own prejudicial ideas and reforms to the—I do not know how to say it—to the destruction that all know in their hearts may be facing the Nation as a result of these ill-advised and dangerous experiments. If sincerity of purpose is pleaded, let us find a more appropriate word.

The majority is still in full control. Must it still submit to that stubborness? Must there be sacrificed the welfare of the whole Nation, as they see it, believe it, and proclaim it as in another body, even as they vote compliance? It seems incredible.

We have been loaded with these pump-priming vagaries. We are loaded with problems that we seemingly cannot solve. There is not a word yet as to any attempt to relieve conditions and give business freedom and confidence. Relinquish the stranglehold granted by us under emergency acts and instill a little confidence into the hearts of those on whom we must depend to lift us out of these depressing conditions. The Nation has been sold costly, futile experiments, and the Government holds a large stock of them on hand

A man once said to a dealer, "You sold me a beastly cigar." But the dealer said, "You are lucky. I have thousands of them left, myself."

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman talked about letting business go to work. What was the matter with business in 1930 that it did not go to work?

Mr. GIFFORD. Can the gentleman think that far back? Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It seems the gentleman cannot.

Mr. GIFFORD. I can, indeed. I can think back to the twenties. I can go back to the 1890's, the happiest days of all. If I had the business index here, I could show you exactly. I could show you how it dropped like a shot in 1932 and 1933, from November to March. That is the time the gentleman should study most carefully. That was an interesting period of 4 months, while plans of the President-elect were being formulated, while the people guessed at what their new deliverer was going to do—and how fearful they were of him. It was a trying period. But in March 1933 he promised much. And all Republicans supported him fully, relying on those pledges and promises.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And the same curve the gentleman speaks of started on the upgrade from that date.

Mr. GIFFORD. Let us not get into that story.

Mr. McGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGranery. While the gentleman deplores the pump-priming processes, does the gentleman, or his party, have any program to offer?

Mr. GIFFORD. Indeed we have. If we offered it you would, of course, try to laugh it out of court. You will hear our plans sooner than you may really wish.

Mr. McGRANERY. Now is the time to offer the program. Mr. GIFFORD. You want to hear of no program. Our program at present, which is the highest form of statesmanship, is to hold the majority closely to its responsibility to the Nation. That is all at present that we are expected to do, and we are at present apparently perfectly capable of carrying out that function.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is it not well in the proposal of a new program to allow business to assume its right reserved to business in the tenth amendment to the Constitution and permit them to have the power to regulate their own affairs wihout Federal interference?

Mr. GIFFORD. Permit me to close my remarks by letting this ring in your ears: We have delegated great powers to one man who controls business to such an extent that one remark about copper sent the whole market into a state of deflation. He declared:

I want it said of my first administration that those forces have met their match. I want it said of my second administration that they have met their master.

He apparently thinks he is just that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dickstein] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dickstein]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I sat here this afternoon in great amazement and surprise when the articles of impeachment were read by the Clerk against the able Secretary of Labor, which was a request of this House for action. It is not my purpose now to criticize any member of the Dies committee, but I would like to get some information from that committee so that I as well as other Members of this House may be more acquainted with the whole problem.

In the first place, after having heard the articles of impeachment read, I am not aware of any specific charges that would justify an impeachment proceeding of any kind. The broad references to the immigration laws reveal only the most superficial knowledge of the statutes.

Who is responsible for these impeachment proceedings? Was it the Dies committee or was it a minority member of that committee? The press, I am sure, will imply that the majority members of that committee, who are Democrats, have brought in an impeachment indictment against a Cabinet member, the Secretary of Labor, and two others in that Department, the Commissioner of Immigration and the Solicitor. Is it the position of the Dies committee that the charges contained in the impeachment indictment have been sustained before that committee or a subcommittee thereof or is this merely a frivolous gesture at impeachment for the purpose of furthering some political ambitions for 1940?

Mr. Speaker, I am chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and I may say that this committee is continually faced with problems of the most difficult character, technical as well as social. We tried our hardest to determine what constitutes a Communist. May I say that after a great deal of study we found it was impossible to deport certain groups that we believed were communistic because the law was defective. For the last 4 or 5 years I begged this House for a resolution which would give the Committee on Immigration an opportunity to study the whole problem. Every time I presented such resolution there was great protest on this side of the aisle. The Committee on Immigration was refused the right to sit during the recess of the Congress. We wanted to determine the many problems that are now covered by the law. Some parts of the law should be repealed, and the whole law ought to be revised. At no time did we ever have this opportunity.

With what is the Secretary of Labor charged? We do not know whether these impeachment proceedings are instituted by the Dies committee or not. We do not know whether it is just the whim of an individual member. We may take it for granted, however, that the impeachment had its origin in the proceedings of the Dies committee.

I call your attention to the fact that in 1932, when my good and distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] was a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, we reported from that committee a bill, the report on which the gentleman from Texas wrote, in which we included language that would take care of the cases of Strecker, Bridges, and other alleged Communists if they were really members of an organization engaged in an attempt to overthrow the Government by force or violence. The bill was reported by the committee, but never became a law. If it were law today, all this unnecessary noise and complication could not have existed. In that report (Rept. No. 1353, House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to accompany H. R. 12044, 72d Cong., 1st sess., dated May 17, 1932), which I shall be pleased to place in the Record, the gentleman from Texas pointed out that under the existing immigration laws membership in the Communist Party, as such, does not constitute grounds for exclusion or deportation of aliens. The law today remains the same as it was in 1932, yet the gentleman from Texas today asserts that the Secretary of Labor should order deportation of alien Communists merely because of their membership in the Communist Party. If the Secretary of Labor had no statutory authority to exclude or deport alien Communists, as such, in 1932, what possible authority can there be for doing so today? Certainly no authority can be found in recent court decisions, for the most significant judicial development has been the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the Strecker case. confirming the position asserted by the gentleman from Texas in the 1932 report to the effect that mere membership in the Communist Party is not a deportable offense. In fact, the Secretary of Labor has gone further than the gentleman from Texas would have, because until the Strecker decision the Department of Labor, relying on earlier court decisions, took the position that Communist Party membership, as such, did constitute grounds for deportation, and accordingly ordered deportation of such aliens.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not at this moment. Another case, which the impeachment resolution mentions, is the Pritchett case. Who is Pritchett? He has not been in the country as an immigrant. He was here merely on temporary visits. A Canadian does not have to have a visa to enter this country temporarily. Pritchett is president of an international union which has locals on both sides of the border. It is true that in 1937 Pritchett applied for a permanent visa, and information was sent to the consulate in Vancouver, that he had been connected with a radical organization in Canada, and this caused the consul to deny him a permanent visa. But the 1917 act, which is our basic exclusion statute, draws a distinction between visitors and immigrants entering for permanent residence. Consequently, as long as he was maintaining an unrelinquished domicile in Canada, he was entitled to enter on legitimate business.

The position taken by the Dies committee, or by some members of that committee, and I still do not know who is really behind the impeachment charges, is that the Secretary of Labor has refused to deport Bridges. As I told you last week, I have no use for Bridges or his cousins. As a matter of fact, the Communist Party and its active workers have boycotted my home for months because I exposed the deportability of a group of people and the Secretary acted promptly after I had brought the matter to the attention of the Department, because we had the facts in those cases. I am not here to defend Bridges, but I am here to defend law and order and decency, and I am here to decry the abuse heaped by certain individuals on a Cabinet member. Why could they not wait until after specific recommendations were made by the committee? Why did not the committee bring in a report and give the Congress of the United States an opportunity to go to work and rid this country of un-American agitators?

I could have pointed out to the committee that there are thousands of spies in this country today, if they had wanted to find something really significant. Why did they not examine into and recommend the deportation of other agitators in this country? Why did they focus their whole attention on the Bridges case? Is there anyone here to answer that question?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Bridges should not be deported. This alien British Communist, who has been destroying our merchant marine, which is as essential to our national defense as battleships, should be tried for treason and put before a firing squad.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have made my position very clear, that I am not here defending Bridges, and I am not here defending the Communist Party. I am of the same opinion as every Member of this House, that any form of "isms" has no business in this country and should be destroyed; but let us do it in an American way. Let us not attack unjustly and unfairly just because we happen to be members of a congressional committee with unlimited powers of publicity at our command.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. PATRICK. I believe we all regret that a Member of our body should make the statement that someone should be put before a firing squad. I should like to ask if the gentleman will yield long enough so we can ask that gentleman if he would take the responsibility for seeing anybody put before a firing squad, or if he intends to commit this body to any such suggestion or idea.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think if we ask the gentleman, he will expunge his statement from the RECORD.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wis-

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I believe with all my heart and soul that an alien British Communist who trys to destroy our American merchant marine, which is a part of our national defense, is guilty of treason and should be tried for treason and put before a firing squad.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana. Mr. THORKELSON. The gentleman has spoken of Communists. Does the gentleman believe the Communist, as we have heard of him and had him described as he exists in Russia, is an enemy of the United States?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not have the time to go into that subject, which would require a long discussion and statement of opinions. I am confining my remarks to Communists as we know them and as we have heard about them and as we understand the term.

Mr. THORKELSON. Would the gentleman consider him our friend?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not consider any Communist our friend or the exponent of any "isms" our friend.

Mr. THORKELSON. Then the gentleman would consider him an enemy?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If he is not a friend, he must be an

Mr. THORKELSON. Then he is guilty of treason, which consists of levying war against the United States and giving aid and comfort to our enemies?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let us not get into a discussion of the treason statutes and other sections of the Criminal Code. Let us confine ourselves to the administration of the immigration laws-the issue raised here today.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. SACKS. I may inform the gentleman, in case he should like to have anyone put before a firing squad for treason, that both Bridges and the other gentlemen are not citizens, and therefore could not be tried for treason.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I must refuse to yield further, Mr. Speaker.

In 1934 the McCormack committee not only made a much more difficult investigation in a shorter period of time than the Dies committee, but we brought in five recommendations for legislation. I believe several of the bills were reported out and passed. The Dies committee, with all due respect to its membership, has created a Frankenstein; it has everybody worried, everybody is scared, and everybody is getting letters to continue the committee. Yet we find nothing in its report in the nature of specific recommendations for Congress. They say, "Give us $150,000 and let us carry on for another 2 years and we might find the Negro in the woodpile somewhere." In the meanwhile they are banging away at Bridges, and ignoring the fact that the basic legal question in this case is before the Supreme Court.

I would have no sympathy for the Secretary of Labor if she were not doing her best to enforce the law. She gets her advice from her counsel, just the same as every other administrative officer gets advice from his legal staff in every department or bureau of the Government, whether under a Democratic or a Republican administration.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. Mr. O'CONNOR. I read with considerable interest the articles that were filed here this morning laying the foundation for an attempted impeachment of Secretary Perkins. I could not find anything in them that would justify to my mind, as a lawyer, any consideration whatever. They were simply based upon conclusions that would be immediately thrown out of court and would not be admissible as evidence. The gentleman is thoroughly familiar with the Bridges case, and that is apparently all that these impeachment proceedings are based upon.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.
Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman think the House should have followed the rule that I am informed the House followed when there was an attempt made to impeach or file impeachment charges against President Hoover?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.
Mr. O'CONNOR. Then a motion came from the Democratic side of the House to table such a resolution. Does not the gentleman think that this resolution, if it can be dignified by calling it that, should have been tabled this morning?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman is correct in his contention. If that question had been put, I should have voted to table it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MICHENER. I am surprised that the gentleman from Montana should criticize his leadership. The House went along following exactly the leadership of the majority and the evident desires of the majority in dealing with the matter.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In other words, my good friend would have voted to table it if a motion of that kind had been made?

Mr. MICHENER. I did not say that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is what the gentleman is implying. Mr. MICHENER. What I intended to say was that I am surprised that the gentleman from Montana should find fault and criticize the leadership of the majority and say it was wrong in the way in which it handled this matter when the minority, helpless as it is, can only protest, but was willing to go along with the majority leadership in so serious a matter as an impeachment. We do not like the criticism.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will yield, my thought was, and still is, that these flimsy charges that were laid upon the Clerk's desk here this morning, as a courtesy to the Democratic Members of the House, a motion should have come from the Republican side of the House to lay the resolution, if it can be called that, upon the table.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the majority has not the courage to take the leadership and assume the responsibility. It wants something done, but is afraid to do it and asks the minority to have the courage to do it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I say to my distinguished friend on the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from Michigan IMr. MICHENER], that the House did exactly today what happened when one of our colleagues impeached the former distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon. After the impeachment proceedings were read, it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MICHENER. And also the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Daugherty, when he was impeached by Mr. Keller, on the gentleman's side of the aisle.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. There is no question that this country is infested with all forms of un-Americanism, and while they were chasing Bridges, the Nazi Bund, the "black shirts," the "blue shirts," all the "dirty shirts" in this country were working overtime. The committee did not even subpena one Nazi. They have not even subpensed one Communist. They simply gave Jones and Brown a chance to come before the committee and make certain loose charges that certain people were "reds." They discovered that Shirley Temple was a tool of Communists. They found that Cagney and Taylor had made some contributions to various causes. They revealed that James Roosevelt did not drop any money into the collection plate, for if he did he would surely have reported it to the incometax collector. I want to be kind and helpful to the committee. I have been in the van of the fight to subdue subversive foreign elements for 4 years. I fought this question on the floor and was ridiculed by the very men who are now sitting on the Dies committee. The Dies committee never asked me for help.

I would have been glad to have given them files on un-American activities which would really have kept them busy and helped this country to remove a menace that lies within it like a cancer. We have today 32 Nazi camps. We have today chemical departments secretly financed by foreign government, in this country. We have the espionage systems placed here by foreign governments. But the Dies committee did not even take the trouble to find out or to inquire about these things. Its investigation was nothing but an attack on Democrats. It was an underhanded campaign against our own democracy. If the Dies committee wanted to discover actual facts it took me 5 years to check on, some of the un-American activities, I would have been glad to help them. Instead the committee has preferred to create a bogie, to discredit responsible officials of the State and Federal Governments and frighten the public with a report citing startling conclusions about something that does not exist at all. I would have been glad to show where the un-Americanism is. We have a Spanish situation where our young men are taken from here to Spain. We have a Nazi youth movement in this country where they have taken American children and are teaching them hate and intolerance. I could cite 140 organizations in the United States that preach intolerance. I read an article in one of their magazines to the effect that the Dies committee is not going to touch "our patriotic organizations." In other words, they consider themselves patriots. Some of these organizations are being financed from abroad. Yes; it is high time to have a house cleaning, but let us do it on the basis of fair play.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is very well informed upon the subject that I shall interrogate him about. What does the gentleman think about the propaganda going on in this country today to have this country stick its nose into the business of the civil war going on in Spain?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not want to go into that. That is a question by itself which would lead to a long discussion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me ask another question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would not care to go into that at this moment. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on a question of law?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman undoubtedly received this morning one of these notices I hold in my hand, and as one well informed, and I am asking for information, I have a question which I desire the gentleman to answer. says that under section 1 certain aliens shall be excluded from the United States—and then goes on down and finally recites those who teach or believe in or advocate the unlawful destruction of property. Is that the law or not?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I could not answer that, but I know where it comes from.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is that provision in our law now?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The 1918 act, from which that phrase is taken, is complex and ambiguous. As I said at the beginning of my talk, I have tried in vain to get the right from my committee to revise and revamp this statute so that we will understand what it means today. In the last 20 years all Congress has done is to amend it without striking anything out, and even the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer could not be sure of its meaning.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Dies committee has to a certain extent done a good job insofar as it started out to check on certain activities set in motion by foreign states. But the moment the committee allowed the door to be opened and let obviously partisan persons appear and encouraged them to make attacks on respected citizens in this country without giving those people an opportunity to contradict or refute their statements, it clearly proved that it had outlived its usefulness.

Yes. You need the committee. Let us go into communism, but let us go after the big Communists. Let us find out who the leaders are. Let us find out who is financing it, how strong it is in this country, how well it has penetrated throughout the country. Let us find out how the money is coming here. Let us get the big fish. Let us not attack people and destroy character and reputation. Let us find out who the Nazis are, and why they have so many camps in this country. Let us discover how many millions of dollars are coming here from Germany to support this subversive movement. Let us find out about this Spanish situation. Let us know something about the "black shirts" who have thousands of members in this country. Let us find out something about Anastia Vonsiatsky's so-called group of White Russians who are here organized with other groups to use America as a base of operations to overthrow the Soviet Government. Let us not attack character and reputation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I cannot yield. I can almost supply the committee with that information, but apparently they do not want it.

I assume Mr. Dies is going to ask for a renewal of the investigation. I am not quarreling with Mr. Dies. He has a right to his opinion and I have a right to mine, but my opinion is based upon a 5-year investigation. I remember when I stood on this floor when I could not get a corporal's guard to agree with me. It took 4 years to convince the American people of un-American activities in this country. I did not ask for any credit. I did not get any medals. I am not asking for them. I had to appeal to the American Legion. It took me months to induce them to give me an endorsement for the investigation. I went to all the patriotic organizations and begged them to join me in this fight to clean up un-Americanism in this country. I am an American. God knows we have but few democracies left. We want to protect this United States democracy. We want to keep it as our forefathers gave it to us. So I say, do not get excited. You may or may not vote to renew that committee; but if you do, put some restrictions on it. Put some men on it interested in making a genuine investigation. I do not want another investigation which simply results in a fantastic impeachment—a blanket indictment against blanket things, an impeachment frivolous on its face, not based upon any evidence, as pointed out by my colleagues, but based upon stale and discredited reports, anonymous letters, statements, and charges, pro and con.

I am sure that when the Strecker case is decided by the United States Supreme Court this matter will be taken care of. There is only one question involved in the whole case. If an alien belongs to the Communist Party, does that constitute a violation of the law? If our law is defective, the Secretary of Labor as well as you are powerless.

If you want to straighten this question out, you have to give the committee of which I am chairman an opportunty to revise and revamp the whole law, so that we can put teeth in the deportation law. Last year we passed the Dies bill in this House. It was a very fine bill that would allow a handful of innocent people to remain permanently in the United States. At the same time it would deport 20,000 criminal aliens.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I want to read a letter that I received from, I believe, one of the most ardent American Legion members in the State of Michigan. I believe he is one of the most ardent in this Nation.

Dear Frank: On Tuesday last the local Legion Post No. 5 passed a resolution urging that additional funds be allocated to the Dies Committee in order that the work of eradicating undesirable, un-American activities might be continued; further, that copies of the resolution be forwarded to the two Senators from this State also to the Congressman from this district.

I am taking the liberty of writing you for the purpose of stating my own opinion which I also feel is that of other members of our post and that of many of the citizens of our community.

Apparently the resolution passed by the post is being fostered and urged by the Legion National and State organization. When presenting it to the post the chairman of the Americanization committee conscientiously explained that he had not discussed the matter with the rest of his committee and suggested that perhaps it would be best to lay the resolution over to the next meeting. If DEAR FRANK: On Tuesday last the local Legion Post No. 5 passed would be best to lay the resolution over to the next meeting. If this had been done there would have been an intelligent discussion on the matter and I believe a resolution passed urging the continuance of the work of suppressing and eradicating un-American activities, but leaving the question of the Dies committee entirely to Congress. As it was the resolution was passed with little if any discussion. I believe the real interest of the post is in Americanization work and not in the perpetuation nor the glorification of the Dies committee.

In common with the membership of our post and the vast majority of our local citizens I believe that Congress should make every effort to suppress and eradicate all forms of "isms" from this country except Americanism.

Lincoln once said of the Declaration of Independence, "It is an ideal constantly looked to, constantly labored for, and though never perfectly attained, constantly approximated, and thereby constantly spreading and deepening its influence."

While we cannot attain perfection, Americans do wish to preserve

While we cannot attain perfection, Americans do wish to preserve the spirit of independence. It should not be sacrificed on the altar of prejudice, avarice, and hatred. Too often it appears that an investigation has become an inquisition of medieval standards whereby "the trial proceeds quickly, for the judges know the sentence beforehand," or, becomes like an octopus whose tentacles sap the blood of the good and bad alike.

Many are disappointed with the Dies committee, particularly with the conduct of its chairman. In the assumption that we are living in a democracy, is it too much to expect of investigating committees as essential dignity at least bordering on judicial impartiality and restraint? I think not. It seems to me to be the American way. But from press reports one would gather that Mr. Dies has written into his record every name from Shirley Temple to Charlie McCarthy, all of which reminds me of the story that relates:

Justice once met a caravan upon the way to Baghdad.

Justice once met a caravan upon the way to Baghdad. "Why," asked the chief, "must you hasten to Baghdad?" "To take 5,000 evil lives," Justice replied.

The chief did not hinder Justice, for he knew of many evil men

The chief did not hinder Justice, for he knew of many evil hen in the city.

However, upon the way back from the city Justice and the caravan met again. "You deceived me," the chief said angrily. "Instead of 5,000 lives, you took 50,000."

"Nay," said Justice, "5,000 and not one more. It was prejudice and hatred and incompetence who killed the rest, for they knew no restraint."

By all means continue the work of creditating all up American

By all means continue the work of eradicating all un-American activities, but place the direction of such important work in the hands of those who will work to the end with judicial results that bear scrutiny by anyone and receive unbiased commendation from

[Here the gavel fell.]

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and in respect to it I also request that an explanatory memorandum may be printed in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and properly referred, and the memorandum will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1000) to amend the National Labor Relations Act (Public Law No. 198, 74th Cong., approved July 5, 1935) was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The memorandum presented by Mr. Walsh is as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Amendments to the National Labor Relations Act were introduced in the Senate today by Mr. Walsh. These amendments, grouped in an omnibus bill (S. 1000), have one main objective—to guarantee fair and equitable administration of the law by the National Labor Relations Board. They propose:

To make it obligatory on the Board to respect the right of craft groups to decide for themselves by majority vote who their bargaining representative shall be.
 To curtail the assumed power of the Board to invalidate legal contracts between employers and labor organizations.

3. To correct the Board's procedure so that all parties affected by any case will be given due notice, accorded a fair hearing, protected against abuses of discretion, and assured of adequate judicial review of wrongful decrees.

Briefly explained the accordenants such to transfer the first features.

Briefly explained, the amendments seek to strengthen the fundamental purposes of the act by limiting the discretionary power of the Board. These amendments are proposed with the expectation that they will benefit all legitimate labor organizations, honest employers, and the public alike.

In recommending amendment of section 9 of the N. L. R. A. to protect the rights and integrity of craft unions, no new principle of law is proposed. The amendment is similar to existing provisions in the Railway Labor Act which have operated highly successfully and have been held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

In seeking to curtail the Board's assumed power to abrogate In seeking to curtail the Board's assumed power to abrogate contracts between an employer and a labor organization, the bill follows closely the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Consolidated Edison case. Under the amendment the Board is prohibited from taking such action unless (1) the contract is with a company union, (2) the contract is for a closed shop and entered into with a minority, or (3) the contract denies to a representative designated by a majority in an appropriate unit the right to bargain exclusively for such unit.

To carry out the foregoing objectives, various sections of the existing law have been revised and certain definitions clarified. Briefly stated, they provide that:

1. Every known interested party must be served with due process and afforded an opportunity to appear in any case.

8. The Board may investigate petitions for an employee election filed by an employer and order such an election. At present the Board arbitrarily refuses to entertain such petitions even though there is nothing in the N I. B. A which would close the door to such is nothing in the N. L. R. action.)

The foregoing outline has dealt with the major proposals included in the amendments only.

REPEAL OF SPANISH EMBARGO, NEUTRALITY ACT, AND JOHNSON -STATEMENT BY SENATOR NYE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement which I have prepared, which is in the nature of an answer to a flood of correspondence which has come to my desk having relation to the Spanish embargo, the Neutrality Act, and the Johnson Act.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Upon my desk there is accumulating an impossible stack of letters and telegrams having to do with proposals to repeal the Spanish Embargo Act, the Neutrality Act, and the Johnson Act, the last-named legislation being the accomplishment which refuses Ameri-can loans to foreign governments which forget, or refuse, to pay what they borrowed from us in the last war.

The division as between those communications for and those

The division as between those communications for and those against the proposals is interesting; but I note that, for the most part, reasons stated in support of the wish of the writers afford a large departure from the real merits of the question. There seems to be no end of misunderstanding concerning the whole general question. To answer these many letters separately would afford an impossible task for my office, and I take this means of setting forth my own consideration upon the questions.

First of all, let me say that I favor the lifting of the embargo. I proposed a resolution in the Senate to accomplish this. This proposal grew out of a desire by me to have my country adopt a consistent position and a position of greater neutrality in the Spanish situation than is that prevailing with the embargo in force. I should like to make it clearly understandable that this position of mine is in nowise dictated by any sympathy for communism, with which I have no sympathy, or by any feeling against any church or religious cause, for I respect every church and every religious cause. Heaven forbid the day when America abandons that respect of freedom of worship and religious belief, or the day which may find our dom of worship and religious belief, or the day which may find our dom of worship and religious belief, or the day which may find our country messing into religious controversies in other lands.

This embargo question should be weighed on its own merits and without prejudice. The introduction of the resolution to repeal the Spanish embargo law had behind it alone the cause of fair play and consistency of principle. To make this clear, I must state in some detail the background which in truth prevails.

I have been an earnest advocate for the adoption by our country to the proposed the proposed of the p

I have been an earnest advocate for the adoption by our country of a neutrality policy that would help us keep out of other peoples' wars. The present neutrality law, which should not be confused with the Embargo Act, is not all that I wanted it to be, but its existence is the outgrowth of the effort extended by myself and other Members of the Senate who served with me on that long investigation into munitions and the causes of war. The law provided against American munitions and money being made available to nations at war. It undertakes to provide a strict neutrality for the United States in fact as well as in name. The law did not entricipally however provide for civil war such as that now visited the United States in fact as well as in name. The law did not originally, however, provide for civil war, such as that now visited upon Spain, for example.

Another point I desire to make in introduction of my position is this: When war comes between nations it is impossible to pass neutrality laws that will not hurt one side more than the other. For that reason any honest neutrality laws must be written and in effect before the war comes. Then we cannot be accused of playing favorites, for all would have had notice of our law and of our purpose to seriously strive to stay out of their wars. whatever sides pose to seriously strive to stay out of their wars, whatever sides

were drawn up.

Now, as to the Spanish embargo question: Late in 1936 England and France moved a so-called nonintervention policy. They hoped to gain the cooperation of all other nations in a program intended to deny any help to either side engaged in the civil war in Spain. They seemingly hoped to be able to "freeze up" the trouble in that unfortunate country by simply withholding the war supplies needed to carry on hostilities there. England and France would naturally want the cooperation of the United States in such a program.

The machinery was set in operation in this country to bring such help about. When Congress convened in the first week of January 1937 a resolution to provide an embargo against the exportation of arms to Spain was introduced. It was hurriedly passed in a moment of apparent war hysteria. I pointed out that the resolution could not be passed in the name of neutrality because we could not act after the trouble had come to Spain without seeming to hurt one side more than the other. It was also pointed out that if we were to pass the embargo law, we might be gravely embarrassed if the cooperative effort in conjunction with England and France failed because some other countries refused to join with us and continued to sell armament in Spain, that we might then be in the position of holding the arms of one side in Spain while the other side dealt blows with outside help that they could get. I agreed that if the nonintervention policy won the cooperation of all countries, the plan would be good, and might serve the splendid purpose of halting the terrible bloodshed in Spain.

purpose of halting the terrible bloodshed in Spain.

It was only a matter of a few weeks before it became painfully apparent that the nonintervention policy, including our embargo, was not accomplishing the desired results. Armament was being shipped into Spain by Italy, Germany, and Russia. Indeed, some countries were even sending soldiers into Spain to help. I there-upon introduced a resolution which, had it been adopted, would have made our embargo against sending armament to Spain apply as well against those countries that were shipping arms to Spain. Nothing could have been fairer or more consistent. But such a move as I proposed would have hurt some American businesses and my resolution hardly got a hearing.

my resolution hardly got a hearing.

Last spring I became, along with others, convinced that a continuation of our policy against Spain, especially since our Government was continuing to officially recognize the Government of Spain, could only bring continued embarrassment to America and American policy. After much deliberation I introduced the repeal resolution can policy. After much deliberation I introduced the repeal resolu-tion, but provided in its terms that if purchases of armament by Spain were made in this country they should be paid for and not shipped in American ships. That was the "cash and carry" prin-ciple, the same principle I have long advocated in the interest of shipped in American ships. That was the "cash and carry" principle, the same principle I have long advocated in the interest of preventing American business dragging our country into war.

There, concisely, is the whole story. At no stage in the repeal consideration was there any thought of alding communism or any other "ism" except Americanism. At no time was there any evidence or any purpose of showing pleasure or displeasure with any religious cause that might be involved in Spain. It seems to me that the record of facts clearly establishes that the whole purpose was one involving consistency and fair play, that alone.

For the purpose of keeping the record straight it should be added that weeks after—with emphasis on the word "after"—the passage of the Embargo Act applying specifically to Spain, Congress amended the Neutrality Act to give the President power, if he chose to do so, to invoke the provisions of the Neutrality Act in the event of civil war. Under this provision the President did issue a proclamation declaring that the strife in Spain constituted a threat to the peace and security of the United States and invoked the law. (Let it be here noted, however, that the President has the power, under the law, to recall this proclamation.) I want only to make the point that if we are embarrassed by reason of our action toward the situation in Spain, our embarrassment grows primarily out of the Embargo Act, not the Neutrality Act itself.

Nothing has contributed so largely to room for criticism of the

Nothing has contributed so largely to room for criticism of the Nothing has contributed so largely to room for criticism of the Neutrality Act as the Spanish embargo, which is not a part of the Neutrality Act, and the fact that the Neutrality Act has not been invoked in the Asiatic war. In the one instance it is damned for what something else has allegedly done in Spain. In the other case it is called a failure because it has helped Japan when it—the neutrality law—has not even been invoked by the President, who refuses to acknowledge that a state of war exists as between China and Japan.

For the information of those who write me for and against repeal of the Spanish embargo, and for and against repeal of the neutrality law, I say:

I am for repeal of the Spanish embargo.
I am against repeal of the Neutrality Act or the Johnson Act, two steps which constitute about the sole legislative evidence that we learned anything as a result of our engagement in other people's wars in 1917 and 1918.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

AMERICAN EMBARGO ON SHIPMENT OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS-PRO-TEST AGAINST CHARGE THAT THE PRESIDENT INTENDED TO REMOVE THE EMBARGO BY EXECUTIVE ORDER

Mr. REYNOLDS obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the time of the Senate for one or two moments preceding the address of the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], which I have reason to know will contain matter largely interesting to this great body. I precede his address by an observation that I feel at this time is very necessary from some source such as the Senate.

Mr. President, I have observed that distinguished Senators of this body at different times, together with eminent writers, including that mistress of literary perfection in written phrase, Miss Dorothy Thompson, have more or less denounced the course of the administration because it will not at once remove the embargo which is provided by law against the shipment of supplies to those engaged in war. It is assumed that the President can by his act of Executive decree repeal the congressional law.

I feel that before we defeat this misleading movement we may gravitate this body and our compatriot body, the House of Representatives, into an action that will be more serious than is now considered by those who are active. I feel that it is timely that we pause to consider the real effect of this threatening action and the influence such would wield over the minds and actions of our fellow citizens.

I allude particularly to that assertion and demand on the part of sources in our land, for which we have great respect, that the President of the United States should promptly remove the embargo that now under the law prevails as to supplies to those who are engaged in war. The President is for executing this law. I am sure the President feels he is, as is the order of this Government, enforcing the law in such a way as to avoid complicating ourselves in the conflicts of other countries. We are not to take action in any form whatever that would encourage the controversies of the outside

Mr. President, I inject myself for this brief moment into this question as it affects Spain. It is very evident, sir, from statements made from very distinguished sources, that it is assumed that this country should presume to take upon itself the conclusion that supplies for the war now existing in Spain should be provided by this country to one of the contestants in the unhappy conflict now prevailing.

Let this be noted: This exact discussion, this exact course, sir-as I am confident, Mr. President [Vice President GARNER], you will agree, as you were a distinguished Member of the House in those days-was the very thing that brought this country into the war which we now speak of as the World War; for had this country but obeyed the law, and had not our distinguished late President-whose soul, let us believe, rests with God-been overrun by the attitudes of those proclaiming our duty to establish humanity and democracy by intruding ourselves, we would not today be in the condition that this country is in. Nor, sirs, would the nations of the world, as I behold it, be in their present condition of terror, and I may assert, sir, not only confusion but desperation.

Then I come to the point. If this country should now, sir, in order to serve any one interest, remove the embargo that is the general law of the land, and there should follow from it certain shipments of supplies, affording further war materials in behalf of those who are supposed, as we read and hear, to be opposing what is called the advance of Franco, I ask what would be the result which some of our honorable friends do not pause to consider? The result would be that we would have those who, it is claimed, are aiding Franconamely, Germany, Italy, and Japan-promptly become our new enemies. Therefore, just so soon as an attempt on the part of an American conveyor, be it a vessel or an individual, was made to transfer supplies to those who are fighting Franco or fighting any other source coupled with those of whom I have spoken-Germany and Italy, if friendly to Franco, who, if it is true as charged, are partners in the design in his behalf-promptly these military masters would seize the supplies of America and arrest our vessels, and then slay those of our country who were distributing or delivering such supplies.

Promptly Japan would join-with its tripartite arrangement-and America would at once find itself assailed by Germany, Italy, and Japan jointly with the forces of Spain. All of these would be making war on America, because-let us have a frank statement-no American would be content to have the property of an American seized, his body impressed, his person arrested by war, and possibly subjected to death, without resenting such conduct-not because of our interest so much in the policy of one side or the other of the conflict, but because America cannot remain quiet while Americans have by assault, their property confiscated, and their citizens murdered, all to the dishonor of the Republic and we put before all the world to our humiliation and disgrace.

For that reason, sir, let us have it understood now that there is but one course for America—to obey the law. Far from removing the embargo, the embargo should be tightened and carried out to the full degree of the meaning of the law. The President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of our forces and defender of the Republic, should not be interfered with by those on the outside who, not understanding the real evil they invite, surely would bring this country into war, all in order to serve one side or the other of a conflict abroad. Thus we would entail upon ourselves an unhappy result the like of which is paralleled only by the World War, from which we are this day suffering the consequences of our errors.

Mr. President, having asserted my position, hoping I have made clear the reason why I protested against an attempt on the part of outside influences to control and dominate the Congress of the United States, either to terrorize or seduce the Congress to the violation of law, I respectfully urge that the time has come when our body should have with one expression, first, the obedience of law; second, proper obedience to our institutions; and lastly and ever, that America shall attend to the duties of America for Americans and keep hands off the affairs of the outside world, and prevent the outside world from laying its hands upon our natural defense, upon our Nation, and upon our American people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I shall be pleased to have the Senator do so. Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Illinois assume that the President has the power to lift the embargo?

Mr. LEWIS. No; and I must say to my able friend that I am relieved to have the question put by him. I had intended to allude to the matter later. Now I only reply in response. I hold to the contrary; I assert that when we have passed the law by Congress, and the law is on the books, it is proclaimed to the public. The congressional body which passed the law to lay that embargo is the only source which by law has a right to change and vary it. I deny the idea appealing to the mind of many, particularly as asserted in a communication to President Roosevelt by a former Assistant Secretary of State. As I read, he proclaims to the American people that the President as the Executive has the right to remove that embargo. I answer my able friend the Senator from Idaho that the Congress of the United States, which passed the law, is the only source that can rightfully change the law which is now in effect, and this law should be obeyed in all respects.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly; I yield to my friend from Indiana. Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator from Illinois understand that the President takes the position that he has power to lift the embargo, or does the Senator assert that the President takes that position?

Mr. LEWIS. To the contrary, I have already stated—my able friend probably did not hear my remarks—that I am opposing the attitude which I read is being expressed by many Senators in their proper places where they have spoken; also from certain sources of the public, who seem to assume that it is the duty of the President to do what is suggested, and that it is within his power. As I remarked but a second ago, a former Secretary of State of this country has proclaimed himself generally to the public as believing and insisting that it is the privilege of the President and his duty to lift the embargo.

I announce to my friend from Indiana that such a position is not assumed by the President. I have not heard that he has for a minute had a doubt on the subject. I answer the question directly, that the President recognizes the law of the land and enforces the embargo, and that not until those who made the law shall remove it will any effort be made on his part to do other than execute it. Our attitude, appropriating the phrase of Lord Mansfield, is:

Let justice—the law—be executed, though the heavens fall.

WORLD CONDITIONS AND THEIR RELATION TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact I am always happy to accommodate the senior Senator from the State of Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. I am particularly happy to yield to him when he makes the request of me, because I know that when he takes the floor he always has something to say of interest to the Members of this body, and unquestionably of benefit to the American people. Today, however, I am unusually happy to have had the opportunity of yielding to my colleague, because he has very profoundly, very definitely, very happily, very delightfully, and most profoundly expressed my sentiments in regard to the attitude this body and the American people should take toward the 2,000,000,000 persons who reside outside the confines of the United States of America.

Mr. President, on vesterday I delivered a Nation-wide radio address, by the courtesy of the National Broadcasting Co., at the Carlton Hotel in the city of Washington, at the invitation and under the auspices of the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, the president of which is Capt. J. B. Trevor of the city of New York. The subject of my address was Uncle Sam Should Keep His Nose Out of the Internal Affairs of Other Nations. After delivering that address I came directly to the Chamber of the Senate, and requested unanimous consent to have a copy thereof published in the Appendix of the RECORD; and the Senate being then courteous, as usual, provided me the opportunity to bring about that publication. I say to the Senators who do me the honor to listen so attentively today that that speech, made by me on yesterday in regard to our beloved Uncle Sam, and in respect to his meddling in the business of other nations of the world, is published in the Appendix of the RECORD.

I respectfully invite your attention to it, and in so doing I may say that I hope I shall be so fortunate as to find you and each of you in accord with me. I am confident, I state unhesitatingly, that if you do find yourselves in accord with me, you need have no fear of the United States of America becoming engaged in any war, because, as I stated yesterday at the outset of my speech, our beloved and great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has repeatedly declared on many public and private occasions that he is against war; you are against war; I am against war; the American people are against war. They do not want war, and they are not going to have war. Why? Because our memories are not short.

Today, Mr. President, I am going to take advantage of the opportunity to discuss, not briefly but at length and particularly, the situation as I have observed it in the four corners of the globe, and particularly in the countries of central, eastern, and continental Europe and the Asiatic political subdivisions, where today rages one of the greatest unholy conquests that the world has ever known.

In the first place, if I may be permitted so to do, I desire to say to the American people that I am pro-American. The only country in the world in which I have any interest whatever is the United States of America. The only people upon the face of the earth in whom I am interested are those constituting the population of the United States of America. I am for America first, last, and all the time; and if, in the course of my observations, I should find it necessary to tell the Senate the truth about the developments I have observed in other portions of the world. I hope none will do me the unfairness to say, just because I tell the truth about the progress other countries have made, that I am pro-this or pro-that. I hope I may be able to impress upon the Senate the fact that I am pro-American, and nothing else; and every word I shall say will be in the interest of the mothers of America, because the mothers of America are more deeply interested in the future of America than are any others.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague, whom North Carolina is proud to claim as a native son of the blue hills of western North Carolina.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from North Carolina if he has not made a statement that he is against any expenditure for armament because nobody is going to attack this country. Is not that substantially the position the Senator takes?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, no; not at all, Mr. President. I am very happy that my very good friend and distinguished colleague, a native son of North Carolina, of whom we are proud, directed that inquiry to me, because my position has been misunderstood or misconstrued, and I will now be provided an opportunity to correct that misconception in my attitude toward American armament.

Mr. SMATHERS. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly; and I might state to the Senator that I shall be very happy indeed at any time during the course of my argument to yield to any of my colleagues for any question they may desire to ask, because if I am wrong I want to be righted, and if I am right I want the world to be with me.

Mr. SMATHERS. I understood that the Senator made a statement in the form of a question as to who was going to attack America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I did make such a statement.

Mr. SMATHERS. As if there were no necessity for expending large sums of money on armaments.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, no.

Mr. SMATHERS. I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina if it is not better to have armament and not need it than it is to need it and not have it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Unquestionably; there is no doubt about it. I think this will sum the whole thing up in a nutshell, in the form of an answer: We should keep our powder dry. I believe that answers the question. And I wish to say to my distinguished colleague that, of course, I know, as he knows, and as we all know, that we do not have to make the large expenditures for armaments which the countries of Europe have to make, because they are right next door to each other, while, fortunately for us, the Great Creator above has provided us with the depths of the ocean to the right and to the left of our country. I may state, for the information of my distinguished colleague, that I shall hope for the opportunity a little later to discuss the question of armaments and national defense in another address.

Mr. President, I believe that a moment ago I was interrupted at a time when I was making it plain to my colleagues in the Senate and to the American people that I am not pro this or pro that, that I am only pro-American. But as a citizen of America, as a representative of the people of North Carolina, and a representative of the people of this Nation, it is my duty, as it is the duty of all my colleagues, to advise the American people of our observations. That is what we are here for. If we make observations from time to time, we shall hope for the charity of the American people, for their indulgence, to the extent of their not dubbing us or branding us as pro-French, pro-British, pro-German, pro-Italian, or pro this or pro that.

Mr. President, it is in connection with that subject that I desire to mention the newspapermen. A few days ago I had brought to my attention a column which I always greatly enjoyed reading. It is called the Washington Merry-Go-Round. I read it, to be perfectly frank, thinking perhaps the writers of the column may say something about me.

That is my reason for reading it, and no doubt that is the reason why my colleagues read it. We all like to see our pictures in the paper; we like to see our names in print; and I read the Merry-Go-Round.

I also read that column in the Washington Times called Eve's Column. She had something about me in that col-umn yesterday. [Laughter.] I liked it so well that I asked one of the page boys here to run downstairs and find me a couple of copies of the paper, and I cut the comment out, and am going to send it to my friends in North Caroline, to show them that my name is frequently in the Washington papers, and that I am getting along nicely. I am vain and a bit egotistical, as all the rest of us are. have a little bit of that in our make-up. So I read the Merry-Go-Round because I like to find my name in that column. As a matter of fact, I shall be perfectly frank and state that I like to have the newspapers write something about me and to editorialize me. Whether it is good or bad, I want them to say something, because when they quit talking about you you are a dead one. [Laughter.]

In North Carolina the newspapers talked about me when I was a candidate for reelection to the United States Senate last fall, and last spring in the primary. They gave me perfect hell; but it elected me. It gave me a tremendous majority. The last time I received about 20,000 greater majority in the Democratic primary than I had received 6 years before. The newspapers will help you, particularly if they are against you editorially, I have found. [Laughter.]

Getting back to this little article I find here, I wish to read it to the Senate:

Tarheel Fuehrer.

This was written by my good friends Drew Pearson and Bob Allen. I like Drew. I think Drew is a nice-looking fellow, and he has a fine personality. And I like Bob Allen. I do not see Drew much. Drew must edit the stuff Bob writes, because Drew never comes around here, and Bob is always here. I like Bob. He has a sunny, cheery smile. He is stockily built, is healthy, and all that sort of thing.

I was angry when I read this article, not angry with these boys, not angry with Drew and Bob, but angry with the people who gave them the information upon which they relied.

Mr. President, I love my friends. I love everybody. [Laughter.] I do not hate anyone, not a soul upon the face of the earth. I am of a forgiving nature. I do not hate, because hate will age one quicker than anything else in the world, and I want to stay young a long, long time. [Laughter.]

Let us see what these boys say in this article. My friends have been deceived, and I wish Bob and Drew would tell me who gave them this information. I should like to know who is the man who deceived them. I should like to know who is the man who provided them with the information upon which they based this article.

TARHEEL FUEHRER

Friends of Bob REYNOLDS, usually shrewd Senator from North Carolina-

Thank you, boys. [Laughter.]- are worried over his plan to loose a Senate speech praising Adolf

Who is worried about me? No one is worried about me.

The wise-cracking Reynolds took a trip to Germany last summer and was wined, dined, and flattered by moguls of the Goering-Goebbels clique. He came back singing their praises and acclaim-ing Hitler as a great man.

Nobody took this seriously until Bob unpacked the material he had brought back and began to write a Senate speech proclaiming the virtues of Adolph and describing nazified Germany as a virtual paradise.

Mr. President, who ever told Drew and Bob that misinformed them. In the first place, I was not in Germany last summer. Last summer I was up in Arctic waters, hunting walrus and polar bear [laughter] on the Lena delta, around Wrangell Island, and the Diomedes, looking over the Siberian coast, the Pribiloffs, and the Aleutian Islands, trying to gather some information relative to the great subject we will approach next week regarding national defense. I was not in Germany in the summertime, as I have stated. I was up in the Arctic, in Alaska, and I was in Labrador and Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, down the Gaspé coast, all over Canada, and in a great many States of the Union. But I did go to Germany late in the fall.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished friend the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator find Guam? Did he visit Guam?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I did not. Of course, as the Senator knows, Guam is but a short distance, one might say a step from Manila, the capital of the independent sovereignty of the Philippines, and I did not get there this time, although I might add that the subject of the fortification of Guam will become a very interesting one, particularly in view of the consideration of the fortification of the Aleutian Islands, the most westward of which is Attu, extending many miles into the Pacific, hundreds of miles further than the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. President, I did go to Germany. After I had been reelected, after I had been reemployed by the people of North Carolina to represent them here I decided that I would go to Europe. I had been wanting to get on the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate for a long time, and I thought that if I did get on that committee the information I gathered on a trip to Europe would be first hand, and I would get the last pulsation of European affairs. So, after having voted for myself in North Carolina, exhibiting the same splendid judgment I always exhibit Ilaughter], if Senators will pardon that personal reference, I repaired to the city of New York and went to England by way of Queenstown, or Cobh, Ireland. I finally wound up in Germany.

Before I leave the subject of this article I wish to state that I was in Germany on this visit only 3 days. The last time prior to this recent visit I was in Germany in 1933, when I was returning to the United States after a visit through the Soviet Union.

When I visited Germany this time I was appalled, as a matter of fact, to observe the tremendous development and the great progress that had been made in that country. Any Member of this body or of the House of Representatives who has visited Germany this year will of necessity be forced in all fairness to that nation, as to any other nation, to say that unquestionably the Germans have made a tremendous, a phenomenal progress and have done a great deal for their people.

In the newspaper article to which I referred it was said that I was "wined and dined." Mr. President, I went from Prague, Czechoslovakia, to Berlin, and in Berlin I stopped at a simple little hotel just a few steps from the Unter den Linden itself, the great thoroughfare of the capital of Germany. I never met Mr. Hitler. I never met Mr. Goering or any other German Government official. I never met a single member of the German Government. I never had a meal with a German or any other person while in Germany. I did talk with taxicab drivers. I did talk with laborers. I did talk with American tourists. I did talk with hotel waiters, with men who work in the stores and laborers in the not-so-prosperous sections of Berlin. I spent some time in driving out into the countryside and motoring over some of their highways. Those who have seen them and motored upon them will of necessity be forced to admit that they are without a doubt the finest highways in all the world. I am very happy to note that in this country we have been giving a great deal of consideration to the construction of combination military and commercial highways to traverse the American Continent from the east to the west and from the north to the south.

I came back to America and told the American people what the German people were doing in Germany.

The next thing that I find is that my friends have stated here that I am pro-German. I am simply trying to provide my constituents and the American people with a description of the things I myself have actually observed while I was in Germany. When I try to advise the American people what the world is doing, so that we may prepare to meet the problems which America must solve, problems other countries are providing—if that be treason, why, then, let them make the best of it.

I know that Bob Allen and Drew Pearson would not have written such an article as that if they had not relied upon the information provided to them by a friend of theirs. I know that, because Bob and Drew are no exceptions to the fine type of men making up the "fourth estate" with which they are affiliated. I am now talking about the gentlemen of the press who likewise honor me with their open ears at this time.

I wish to say to the gentlemen of the press that I have been associated with newspapermen all my life. My association with them began at a very early time in my career. I was once upon a time a newsboy. I see in the Press Gallery now Mr. Walter Hildebrand, who so ably represents the Greensboro Daily News, of Greensboro, N. C. When I was a boy 8 years of age I wanted to earn a little pin money. At that time in my home city of Asheville, N. C., the little Gem City of the mountains, which we all have heard so much about, I secured a job as a distributor of newspapers. Mr. Hildebrand was then the owner of the old Asheville Daily Gazette. His coowner, coeditor, was Mr. Earl Godbey, who is now the associate editor of the Greensboro Daily News. I was employed at a dollar and a half a week. I used to get up every morning at 4 o'clock and go down to the pressroom and wait there until the newspapers were off the press and then I continued delivery of the newspapers until around 10 o'clock.

My next association with newspapers was when I was about 12 years of age. I ran away from home and went to Charleston, S. C., and there went aboard one of the old steamships of the Clyde Line, and made my way by polishing the brass on the steamship Seminole, which ran from Charleston to Jacksonville, and there I went up the St. Johns River and was employed as turpentine man on a plantation. Later I found myself at a place called Cassia, working for a little country newspaper.

In later years at the University of North Carolina, as the result of my activities in athletics—at that time I was captain of the varsity track team and a member of the varsity football team—I was made athletic editor of the "Tarheel."

Subsequently I came to Washington and worked on a newspaper. Prior to that I was assistant editor of the Asheville Citizen-Times.

Here in the Capitol I see gentlemen of the press daily, and it is always a privilege to find myself in that company, because I find them genial, I find them good-natured, and very broadminded—just regular fellows. And I know that Bob Allen and Drew Pearson are of that classification, and that they would not have said that I am pro-German unless they had relied upon the information given them by someone in whom they had confidence.

Mr. President, I want to say something about the subject matter under discussion yesterday. I want to bring to the attention of this body the Democratic platform of 1932 and the Democratic platform of 1936. In the Democratic platform of 1932 it was set forth:

We advocate a firm foreign policy, including peace with all the world and the settlement of international dispute by arbitration; no interference in the internal affairs of other nations.

So, in the Democratic platform of 1932 we as a party pledged the American people that we would not meddle in or interfere with the internal affairs of other nations of the world. I ask Senators, I ask the American people, if we today stand flat-footedly upon that platform in which we stated that we would not meddle in the internal affairs of the countries of the world? What do we find? Mr. President, we find today that the American people and their leaders are giving more attention to the affairs of other countries of the world than they are to domestic affairs.

Going back to the fact that my friends of the Washington Merry-Go-Round have charged that I am pro-German simply because I told the American people what is happening in Germany, and simply because I want the American people to know what is going on in order that the American people may prepare themselves to meet problems such as we have never experienced before, I desire to say that I am not the only person who has tried to be frank and honest and fair with my constituents, and with the American people, by telling them the truth about things.

I have before me an article written by Miss Judith Listowel. It is published in the Wilson (N. C.) Daily Times of January 13, 1939. I want to read it to the Senate. It says:

EMPLOYMENT IN NAZI GERMANY

When Hitler came to power there were 6,000,000 unemployed in Germany. In January 1933, 30 percent of the German industrial workers, which meant 10 percent of the total population, were without employment. In January 1939 there are 115 jobs for every 100 German workers. Instead of unemployment, there is shortage of labor.

By the way, before proceeding further with the reading of this article let me say to the Senate that when I was in Italy last fall I was told by persons there that Italy had just sent 35,000 stone and brick masons to Germany to assist in its building program and make up the shortage of labor in Germany. There is no unemployment in Germany. There is likewise no unemployment in Italy. The articles proceed:

The miracle was performed by the readiness of the German people to take a medicine which may, in the long run, prove more poisonous than the disease. German men and women were willing to put up with regimentation, dictation, and "ukases" for the sake of economic security. To have jobs for all, "bread and circuses" was the price for which Germany gave up freedom and individualism

The Nazi plan to deal with unemployment was fourfold: (1) Labor was to be withheld from the market so as to ease pressure; (2) employment was to be created by rearmament and public works; (3) industry was to be reorganized by orders of an economic dictator; (4) consumption was to be regulated so as to fit production.

The Hitler regime has solved unemployment in Germany.

It is not I who am speaking. Miss Judith Listowel, of North Carolina, is speaking, in an article written by her entitled "Employment in Nazi Germany" and published in the Wilson Daily Times, of Wilson, N. C.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator know how many people in Germany are in concentration camps?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not know the exact number, nor do I know the number of people who are in the jails and the penitentiaries of the United States.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator attempt now to make a comparison between conditions in our country as affecting those who are in our jails and penitentiaries for the commission of crime, and conditions in Germany, where people are in concentration camps because they happen to think something in their minds against Hitler?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am not in a position to state why, if there are concentration camps in Germany, people are in the concentration camps. I have never seen any concentration camps in Germany. I have heard they are there; I believe they have concentration camps there; but I have no information upon which I could base an estimate as to the number of people in the concentration camps in Germany.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Would the Senator advocate the adoption of a concentration-camp system in this country in order to solve our unemployment problem?

Mr. REYNOLDS. To be perfectly frank with the Senator, I think the United States of America could well provide a concentration camp and place therein some of the Communists, Nazis, and others in this country who are today seeking the overthrow of the American Government.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Would the Senator have them sent there without trial, and without an opportunity for defense?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, no; I should provide them with a trial.

In that connection, there are many in this country whom I should not want in concentration camps. I should want to deport them to the land from which they came. There are in this country today hundreds of thousands of undestrable aliens who are on our shores usurping the jobs of Americans and preaching the overthrow of the American Government. Why under heaven we do not deport them is beyond my comprehension.

The Senator has in mind minorities. I am glad he brought up that subject, instead of my having to bring it up. Let me say to the Senate that there is no man in this body or in the United States of America who is more sympathetic with the persecuted racial minorities of Germany than am I. I do not condone such persecution; on the contrary, I condemn it. I feel sorry for the poor, oppressed, unfortunate minorities in Germany today. If anything I could say would lift the yoke of oppression from their shoulders, I would say it. If there were anything America could do to lift the yoke of oppression from the shoulders of the oppressed in Germany or any other country without injuring or imperiling the lives of American citizens, I would advocate it.

However, let us make the record clear. Let us find out where we stand on this question. Let us admit, in all frankness and candor, that the only thing that is tearing this Nation limb from limb is our internal fight among ourselves over a question in Germany with which we do not have a thing in the world to do.

Let us see about that. Let us argue the question out. Are we going to let a state of affairs in a foreign country, 4,000 miles away from here, destroy the American Nation? I say, no.

Let me repeat, Mr. President, that I am in deepest sympathy with the minorities of Germany. My heart beats for them hourly and daily. That it not all. I am in deepest sympathy with the families of the more than 1,000.000 persons who have been killed in Spain since the revolution broke out there in July 1936. Of the 1,000,000 who have been killed, 260,000 were noncombatants. I am in sympathy with the families of the 1,000,000 persons who have lost their lives in Spain. My heart is big enough to engulf the world. I am in sympathy with the racial minorities in Italy, because the same racial minorities are being persecuted in Italy that are being persecuted in Germany. I am in sympathy with the more than 400,000 poor, unarmed blacks of Abyssinia who were murdered by the Italians in their conquest of Ethiopia. I am in sympathy with the more than 1,900,000 combatants and noncombatants, unprotected women, defenseless children, and aged men, Japanese and Chinese, who have been murdered in Asia. I am in sympathy with the minorities of Russia, from 4,000,000 to 7,000,-000 of whom were murdered in 1933 and 1934 in the territory known as the Ukraine, which is located in western Russia north of Odessa, on the Black Sea, and in eastern Poland. I am in sympathy with them and their families.

I am in sympathy with the persecuted peoples of the world. but I want my position to be understood throughout the length and breadth of America. I want every mother of America to let ring in her ears these words: My first sympathies are with the people of the United States. I take credit for coining the slogan that we should adopt. It is this: "American citizens and our country first." Then, if you like, you may add "last, and all the time." My sympathies are first with the American people. Although I sympathize with the minorities, the persecuted peoples living upon the face of this earth, I want to tell the Senate, without hesitating a moment—and I am not going to make any bones about telling it—that my sympathies are not deep enough to have the United States go to war over the minorities of Germany or of any other country. If any Member of this body is willing to take the floor and tell the American people that his sympathies for the minorities of any country in the world, the minorities who are not American citizens, are so deep that he would want this country to go to war to protect them, let him rise.

Why should we become so excited about all this? We have become excited about the minorities of Germany. Why did we not become excited about the millions of persons who were killed in Russia? Why did we not become excited about the millions who were killed in Ethiopia? Why have we not become excited about the millions who are being killed in China? That is what I want to know. I am sympathetic with such minorities, but I am tired of all this pussyfooting, and of people trying to arouse great enthusiasm over something that has happened in another country. Murders, killings, and persecutions have taken place among the minorities in Germany, in Italy, in Spain, in Ethiopia, in Russia, in China, in Poland, in Rumania, and in Hungary. I ask whether or not the minorities in any of the countries I have enumerated, and about which we hear so much, are American citizens? The answer is, "No." Then why should we become excited about them?

Persecutions have taken place since the creation of the world itself; and we talk of aggression as though it were something new. We all know that of the 3,000 wars which have been fought since wars were first recorded upon the pages of history, 2,999 were fought as a result of aggressions and for the conquest of trade.

Let me finish the article from which I was reading:

The Hitler regime has solved unemployment in Germany. It has regimented industry, labor, consumers. It has brought mass production to a high level of perfection. A process which would normally have taken many decades was carried out in 5 years. The methods seem unbearable to us reared and living under democracy and capitalism. But this does not alter the fact that Germany is becoming rapidly the most formidable competitor of American industry.

That is what I am trying to impress upon the American people. I am warning the American people that unless we take steps to combat the menaces, unless we take steps to meet the problems with which we are faced in this world of twentieth-century commerce, problems which have been provided by the Nazis and the Fascists, then we are lost as a nation. God forbid that that hour should ever come.

I have read in the Wilson Daily Times what a little girl said. Let us look at something else. This is not ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, the junior Senator from North Carolina, speaking about Germany. It is the American press and the American

I read from the columns of the Wilson Daily Times, published by my good friend, P. D. Gold, at Wilson, N. C., the issue of January 20, 1939. The editor of a North Carolina paper is speaking, not ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, the junior Senator from North Carolina. The article is entitled "The Master of Europe."

I read:

[From the Wilson (N. C.) Daily Times of January 20, 1939] THE MASTER OF EUROPE

In England and France observers find a growing belief that the Munich settlement was a tragic mistake. Even Mr. Chamberlain has lately taken a stronger position toward Germany. And there is a sound reason for that: Trade.

Self-sufficiency is Hitler's dream—a Germany which can live in Self-sufficiency is Hitler's dream—a Germany which can live in comfort and plenty without relying on any other power. And self-sufficiency is what Hitler is achieving with amazing speed. The small nations of central Europe are coming more and more within the German orbit. Hitler uses any tools at his command to get the result he wants—promises, threats, economic bribes—and no small nation can afford to hold out against the desires of the "master of Europe." As Dewitt MacKenzie, an Associated Press expert, writes: "The smashing of Czechoslovakia, and France's abdication of her influence, have enabled Hitler to impose a control under which these comparatively small countries cannot live themselves." themselves.

Mr. President, when I read from the columns of the Wilson Daily Times, or from the columns of other newspapers. it is the editors thereof, or the writers, who are speaking, and not ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, junior Senator from North Carolina.

Yet because I thought it to be my duty to advise the American people concerning what is taking place over the face of the earth, in order that we may prepare ourselves for the onslaught, there have been those who have said that I am pro-Nazi. I say that I would be derelict in my duty if when, at my own expense, I went to Europe to study the social, economic, and political conditions there, on my return I did not tell the American people truthfully what I saw.

Now, as evidence of the fact that Germany has solved her unemployment problem, that Germany has solved her problem of surplus capital, gentlemen of the Senate, the President of the United States of America, Franklin D. Roosevelt, speaks. Let us note what he says. Our great and beloved President says the very same thing that I have been telling the American people. I shall quote from the message he delivered to the Congress on the state of the union on January 4. After having heard this, never let it be said again that I am pro-German, and let it not be said that every person who makes a truthful statement about conditions abroad as respects particularly Germany must of necessity be dubbed pro-German. When he delivered his message the President of the United States, recognizing as the truth all that I have said, recognizing as truth all that has been said through the columns of the press, some quotations which I have brought to the attention of the Senate, said:

The first duty of our statesmanship today is to bring capital and manpower together.

Dictatorships do this by main force. By using main force they apparently succeed at it—for the moment. However, we abhor their methods, we are compelled to admit that they have obtained substantial utilization of all their material and human resources. Like it or not

Like it or notthey have-

I digress again to remind the Senate that it is the President of the United States who is speaking.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator does not mean to suggest that the President in his message or in his speech gave any praise for the way in which Germany has accomplished her purposes?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No. I am reading what the President of the United States said to the American people in his message to the Congress. He said:

Like it or not-

Speaking of the dictatorshipsthey have solved, for a time at least-

Still speaking of the dictatorshipsthe problem of idle men and idle capital.

The President of the United States, God bless him and preserve him, recognized in the interest of the American people that the dictatorships that are giving us so much worry and trouble now have for the time being, "like it or not." solved the problem of unemployment and surplus capital. So today I have the enviable opportunity of warning the American people that what we have got to do is to stop and think and put our brains to work. We are not going to get anywhere by becoming enmeshed in this world of hatred.

By the way, in employing the word "hatred" I wish to read something right here. The other day I read in the Appendix of the Congressional Record a most able address which had been delivered by our colleague the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. Thomas. The address was delivered at the Institute of World Affairs, at Riverside, Calif., on December 16, 1938. One statement contained in that able address struck me with a great deal of force and significance. In speaking of hate, our able colleague said:

Are we going to live on the nations of the world or with the nations of the earth? We shall get nowhere by hating, except to breed more hate which may lead even to war.

Then I chanced upon a letter published in the People's Forum, in one of the daily newspapers of Washington, I think-judging from the type it is the Washington Post-a letter from a gentleman by the name of L. A. Rinne, of Summerville, S. C. He says:

Hatred against Germany is spreading in our country. Its destroying qualities are shown in our huge armament proposal, which, if passed by Congress, would add greatly to the tax burden of our people. I wish I could change the hatred to friend-liness. The German people have not done anything against people of the United States. We do not have the right to criticize and denounce them, because they have a different kind of government than we have and are satisfied with it. German Government is said to discriminate against United States. Have we not ment is said to discriminate against United States. Have we not discriminated against Germany?

Along the same line, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate an editorial from the Redwood County Sun, of Redwood Falls, Minn., in the issue of January 13, 1939, entitled, "Why the Bitterness":

It is not likely that Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina, reflected popular opinion when he appealed for less bitterness toward Germany. "Why should we hate Germany?" he asked. "What has Germany done to us?"

"What has Germany done to us?"

The strong anti-Nazi tone with which leading publications—whether newspapers or magazines—are obviously injecting their presentation of the German picture leaves little room to doubt that the forces of propaganda are at work. We are told, of course, that Nazidom hates us and that America is the subject of an antidemocracy campaign handled by men with whom propaganda is a fine art. By way of response America replies in kind.

Sentiments such as those expressed by Senator Reynolds need not be construed as defending Germany. They are born, rather, of a desire to give peace, which is nourished by calm reason, a chance against war, which feeds upon intemperate thought.

And, Mr. President, I have before me now an editorial from a national magazine, Liberty, entitled "Shall We Be Forced Into War by Reckless Officials," reading, in part, as follows:

We will have to admit that we have harrowing problems of our

we will nave to admit that we have harrowing problems of our own, and we should attend to our own business and leave the affairs of other nations strictly alone. But what can we do to stop * * * bullbaiting other nations? * * * Now, we are far away from the war-making nations, and until the last few months we have studiously refrained from mixing in their mad preparations for war. And why should we try to compel any nation, through taunting criticism or through moral suasion—senecially Germany—to adhere to our particular greed?

any nation, through taunting criticism or through moral suasion—especially Germany—to adhere to our particular creed?

We are entirely justified in expressing our abhorrence of the conduct of the German Government. It has been brutal, shockingly inhuman. And we have a perfect right to express our opinions as publicly as we may desire—as private citizens—but the officials of this country have no right to express sarcastic and offensive personal opinions of other nations. They are not speaking for themselves. Whatever they say is an official utterance. It becomes the voice of the people of this country, and it is accepted abroad as the attitude of our National Government. And even offensive remarks by the officials of other nations are no excuse for a similar offense by our officials. by our officials.

by our officials.

We certainly want to keep out of war. We do not want to fight Germany, or any other country, because of its failure to follow our governmental ideals. We are facing grave governmental emergencies. God knows they are serious enough to take the entire time and attention of our officials—and then some.

We have no reason to be proud of our national status at this time. We have more people on relief than the combined total of all the European nations, and the dictators of the totalitarian nations only laugh at us when they make comparisons. And they have good reason.

However, the people of this country are determined to pull out good reason.

However, the people of this country are determined to pull out of our trouble in spite of the powerful official handicap we are facing—and we hope it will be soon. We have had entirely too much encouragement of class hatred * * *. They seem to enjoy setting group against group, labor against capital. * * *

We have many fine citizens of German origin in this country, and the majority undoubtedly regret more than words can express the brutal treatment of the Jews by the Hitler government. But our officials are certainly going outside of their domain when they represent this Government in provocative criticisms of Germany's national affairs. * * * national affairs.

In reference to that matter, let me proceed further by stating that the editorial states that the Germans have secured control of Europe, which is very nearly true. For instance, we all know that by force-like it or not, let us face the facts-Germany took over a part of Czechoslovakia, in which part there were to be found 3,500,000 Czechoslovakians; and in the particular territory bitten off by her we find munition plants, shoe factories, and textile-manufacturing establishments. In addition to that, Hitler had theretofore taken over old Austria, and now we find that he has made an agreement with the Czechoslovakian nation to parallel a railroad leading eastward to the Black Sea. The next thing we find is that the Blue Danube has been converted into a Hitler stream, because all the way along its banks, from its head to its mouth in the Black Sea, we find great barge after barge loaded with chemicals, with toys, with munitions, with textiles, and all sorts of manufactured products going eastward; and a few weeks thereafter the same barges are coming back into Germany loaded with hides, with tallow, with oil, with wheat, with timber, and with raw materials of all descriptions. Anybody who knows anything at all about the situation in Europe will say that Hitler already has Austria and Czechoslovakia, has a great influence in Poland, is starting his trade penetration in Holland; that he virtually has all the trade in Yugoslavia and Hungary and is making deep penetrations into Rumania: and the next thing, so say those who know, he will, through his agencies, bring about the independent establishment of Ukrainia, with 40,000,000 people, which eventually he will add to the German nation.

What is Hitler doing? He is looking after the people of Germany. What ought Uncle Sam to do? God bless Uncle Sam. I love him and you love him, Senators; but I want the old fellow to come home. He has been wandering over the face of the earth, trying to police the earth. I love Uncle Sam. You love him. We all love him. God bless him. I want the old man to come home. I want him to come back here to his nieces and to his nephews. He has been gallivanting all over the face of the earth, telling the people of other nations how to run their business; and while Uncle Sam has been telling them how to run their business, my heavens, when Uncle Sam gets back here and finds 12,000,000 of his nieces and his nephews out of work, what is he going to do?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Idaho in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am delighted to find the able and distinguished Senator from North Carolina joining the position which I took some 22 years ago, when I warned Uncle Sam not to go into the world-saving business and said that if he did we should come to grief. I say now, as I said 22 years ago, that our entry into the World War was the most colossal blunder ever committed by this Government in all its history; and again I say "no," we had better not engage in any more world-saving expeditions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the able Senator for his fine contribution at this time. I am going to return to that particular part of my subject in a moment.

Mr. President, again I say that I am warning my constituents, I am warning the American people, against that man Hitler. I am warning the American people against that man Mussolini. I am warning the American people against that man Stalin. I am warning the American people against the dictators in other parts of the world. They have upset our apple basket. I am warning the American people because I am pro-American, and I want to do that which is best for America. But how in the name of Heaven are we going to find out what to do or what is best for us unless we know what our enemies are doing? Let us see what they are doing.

Not only have they all eastern central Europe but what else do we find? Mr. President, they have upset our apple cart down in South America. I see present now one of the ablest men who ever occupied a seat in the United States Senate. I see one of the most lovable characters I ever knew in my life. I observe here now a man for whom I have the deepest affection and one for whom I have great admiration. I mention him because I recall that when I first came here as a Member of this body the great man of whom I speak, the Honorable J. Hamilton Lewis, rose upon the floor of this Chamber and warned the American people that they should turn their eyes southward to Mexico, Central and South America, and the West Indies, where there are 140,000,000 people who want to trade with the people of America. I recall that during my short service here in the United States Senate under Mr. Hoover and under Vice President Curtis the Senator to whom I refer time and again warned the American people that they should turn their eyes southward; and throughout the first part of this administration and the 6 years which have followed he has from time to time warned the American people that they should turn their eyes from Europe and from Asia, and focus their interest upon the 140,000,000 people to the south of us. I have warned them likewise, but our warnings have been of no avail, and I am afraid that now it is too late.

Let us see about it. Let us get at the truth. We shall never know how to combat these enemies of ours-Hitler, Mussolini, the Mikado, Stalin, and all the others of them-unless we get at the truth; and we had better be getting at the truth right away. I say that, Mr. President, because if and when Franco wins, the influence of Spain, the mother country of every country to the south of us, with the exception of Brazil, which is Portuguese, will be powerful. Did Senators ever stop to think of that? If and when Franco wins, the influence of Portugal, the mother country of Brazil, is going to affect the United States of America. I wish the Members of this body, I wish the Members of the Congress of the United States, I wish the people of America in expressing their views in the public forum, would lay before the American people the truth, because until we have the truth we shall never be able to combat the destruction of God's temple; we shall never be able to combat the trade penetrations which are being carried on by the totalitarians, by the dictators of the world.

Let us see. Am I exaggerating? Not I. I am not speaking. This is the press speaking. Listen to this article. I clipped it from the Washington Star of Monday, January 16, 1939.

It is entitled:

Latin American trade only about half of 1929 volume. Average for 11 months of 1933 estimated at eighty-seven million.

The article is a special dispatch to the Star, and is dated New York, January 16. It reads as follows:

Our monthly trade with South America, Central America, the West Indies, and Mexico during the first 11 months of 1938 averaged only about half that in 1929.

Is not that distressing? Let us see the cause of it.

We still have a long way to go before our total exports to and imports from Latin America reach predepression levels, according to figures recently compiled by the statistical division of the

During the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, the dollar volume of our total trade with all the Latin-American countries amounted to about $150,000,000 a month, on the average. In 1936 the monthly value of total trade had risen from the 1933 low of $47,500,000 to $79,800,000; and in 1937, at the recovery peak, the average reached only $112,000,000. Over the first 11 months of 1938, this monthly average is estimated at $87,000,000, higher than in 1936, but far below the value of $173,200,000 a month for total trade from Patagonia to the Rio Grande with the United States in 1929.

A significant feature of the conference board's study is the analysis of our trade with South America by countries. During the first 11 months of 1938, we imported a total of $88,700,000 of goods from Brazil, while we exported $55,200,000 of our products to Brazil. Colombia also had a favorable trade balance with the United States, selling us $9,300,000 more of various commodities than she bought.

selling us $9,300,000 more of various commodities than she bought. By contrast, the value of our exports to Argentina exceeded our imports from that country by $42,600,000 in the first 11 months of 1938. Venezuela, whose riches in petroleum and other raw materials enable her to operate on a cash-and-carry basis, bought $47,800,000 of our products, while we purchased $18,300,000 of hers. A similar analysis for Central America, the West Indies, and Mexico during the period from January through November 1938 shows that Cuba sells us more than she buys, while Mexico, the Netherlands, West Indies, and Panama, including the Canal Zone, buy more goods from the United States than they sell to us. Among all the Letin American countries Cuba has had the lergest dollar. all the Latin American countries, Cuba has had the largest dollar volume of total trade with the United States during 1938.

Very well. We find that our trade has dropped off one-half. We are not surprised by it.

Here is a little clipping which contains some information with which I had been provided prior to having observed, in the columns of the press, the article which I have just read.

I note that one of the representatives of Brazil is coming to the United States to discuss matters with our President. I should like to have an opportunity of talking with him.

Uncle Sam having stated that he would see that nobody attacked the nations of this hemisphere, that we would provide the battleships and the men, if necessary, and would fight to keep the Western Hemisphere for ourselves, I should like to ask the gentleman from Brazil why it is, according to press dispatches, that with an appropriation of a hundred million dollars to be expended over a period of 5 years for armaments, Germany is getting about $70,000,000 of that business and we are getting about half of $6,000,000 of the business.

We all know what Germany has done in Central and South America. My colleagues know, as well as I do, that despite the fact that we and the British have the largest amount of investments in Brazil, for many months the Germans led in trade in Brazil, and we were second and the British third. But, fortunately and happily, we are leading now and the Germans are following.

But I am discouraged and unhappy to be forced to tell the Senate that Germany leads in trade in Guatemala and in Salvador, and is making tremendous inroads throughout the entire Western Hemisphere. And sad were we all when we observed, through the columns of the press a few days ago, that Germany had made a trade pact with Mexico, our neighbor to the south, to buy from them $17,000,000 worth of oil, which the Mexicans stole from us, ten million of which is to be paid for in bonds.

I repeat, and I cannot repeat too often to my colleagues and to the American people, that we are today participating in the greatest war the world has ever known, a trade war, and the only possible manner or means by which we can combat that which is being done by Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, and others, is to learn the facts. Who has told us how to get out of this situation? No one, evidently, because today there are 12,000,000 people out of employment in our country, and there were 12,000,000 out of employment here in 1933.

We are making utilization of all of our time in hating the Germans, hating the German people, because they are persecuting minorities, none of whom are American citizens. I repeat that I am not willing to vote to have the United States go to war to save the minorities of any country if they are not American citizens. We withdrew our Ambassador to Germany, and we are not sending him back. We have virtually broken off diplomatic relations.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. HATCH. If I understood the Senator correctly, he stated that the American people entertain bitter hatred for the German people. Does the Senator think that statement is accurate?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I do not think that would be a correct statement. If I said that, I did not mean to infer that. I thank the Senator very much. That would not be an accurate statement, if I am any judge, taking into consideration the thousands upon thousands of letters and telegrams which I have received from all over the United

We have virtually broken off relations with Germany, for what reason I do not know, but presumably because Germany has not been conducting her internal affairs as we think she ought to run her Government, presumably on account of her treatment of minorities.

If we are to sever relations with Germany, we have much more reason for severing relations with Mexico, and with Italy, and with Russia, than with Germany. If we are to sever relations with various countries because we do not like their form of government, and because they are not running their governments according to the way we think they ought t run them, then we had better sever relations with every country in the world, and become purely and simply isolationist.

Let us see about Mexico. Let us be fair. Immediately below the Rio Grande is a country called Mexico. It has 20,000,000 inhabitants. It is blood red. They destroyed and razed the churches, they murdered priests, they assassinated Christians, they attacked nuns. They raised the red and black flag. They have Trotsky down there now. It is Communistic, 100 percent.

There are assassinations everywhere in that country. They confiscated thousands upon thousands of acres of farm land belonging to American citizens and never even apologized for it. They stole millions upon millions of dollars of oil, the wells producing, which had been dug by American dollars.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, did we sever diplomatic relations with them?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; we did not; but I say that if we are going to be consistent, if we are going to sever diplomatic relations with Germany, we had better sever diplomatic relations with every other country in the world. We have more reason for severing diplomatic relations with Mexico. Italy, and Russia than for taking that course with Ger-

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will permit, we have made a good start in the hating business.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, yes; we have done well in that.

Mr. LUNDEEN. We have done so well that the cotton warehouses of the South are piling up with cotton, ten or twelve million bales, I am told, which we cannot sell to the nations we are busily hating.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad the Senator brought that matter to my attention.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do not believe they will buy any cotton from us while we continue this hating business concerning the internal affairs of other nations which are none of our affairs.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely; and I wish to repeat that I think Uncle Sam ought to keep his nose out of the internal affairs of other nations. I desire to say further that I think before Uncle Sam starts to telling every other nation in the world how it should run its business, before Uncle Sam tells them to clean up, Uncle Sam ought to wash behind his own ears. That is what I think about it.

When the Mexicans took by force the oil wells belonging to Great Britain, what did John Bull do? He withdrew diplomatic representation; and the Mexicans came right along, after having taken the oil of American capitalists, and made a trade with Germany for $17,000,000 worth of business, $10,000,000 of the oil to be paid for by bonds, $7,000,000 to be paid for in cash.

I say that if we have just cause for severing diplomatic relations with Germany we have more cause for severing diplomatic relations with Italy. As I stated a moment ago, the same minorities being persecuted in Germany are being persecuted in Italy by Mussolini and his Government, except that in Italy they are giving them a little more time to take out a little more money.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is not that true also of Poland?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And of Rumania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And of Hungary?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And it is true of many other countries. Are we going to police the world? Are we going to regulate the earth? Are we going to be the superpoliceman of the

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is what we have been trying to do. Mr. LUNDEEN. Is that the policy of the administration in foreign affairs?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It looks to me as if that is what we have been trying to do.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is it the purpose to distract the attention of the American people from our serious domestic troubles, with 12,000,000 men unemployed and tremendous deficits in our Budget, by directing the attention of the American people to minorities' problems in other lands which do not

Mr. REYNOLDS. In regard to breaking off diplomatic relations with Italy, let us go back in history just a few years. To repeat, the Italians are persecuting some racial minorities in their country as minorities of the same sort are being persecuted in Germany; so there is an even score in that regard. But, in addition, what has Italy done? As we all know, Italy murdered several hundred thousand Abyssinians when she went to Ethiopia in 1935 to bring about the unholy conquest of that country, an aggression for the purpose of getting raw materials which the Italians need.

I was on the Mediterranean in 1935, and I saw in the Mediterranean, not far from Alexandria, greater naval armament tonnage than I had ever seen before in my life, what was said to be greater than ever was assembled in the history of the world. At that time, in 1935, Italy was about to kill off an additional number of Abyssinians to clinch a victory, and at that time Mr. Anthony Eden, who was recently in this country, suggested that Great Britain and the United States enforce oil sanctions against Italy. The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who honors me with his presence, will recall that suggestion. But we had sense enough not to join Great Britain in enforcing oil sanctions against Italy, because we knew that sanctions meant war, and if we had had little enough sense to follow Anthony Eden and John Bull on that wild-goose chase we would have been in war. We would have been fools to have done it in the first place, because at the same time that Great Britain was trying to get us to join her in enforcing oil sanctions against Italy she was selling Italy all the oil she wanted

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator let me make a suggestion to him at this moment?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.
